The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2584) to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to condemn land on Rock Creek for the purposes of a park, to be called Rock Creek Park.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 2, after the word "taken," to strike out "and an estimate of the damages caused by said condemnation;" and in the same section, in line 5, after the word "District," to strike out "who in making such estimate shall consider the benefits conferred upon such owner as well as the injury done to him;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That said commissioners shall cause an appraisement of the value of the land so taken to be ascertained by an appraisement to be made by three judicious, disinterested freeholders of said District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 2, after the word "purchase," to insert "at a reasonable price;" in the same section, line 12, after the word "taken," to strike out the words "and the damages occasioned by the taking of said land to each owner thereof, or to any person having a legal claim to said damages;" and in the same section, line 16, after the word "Columbia," to strike out "and in the consideration of such damages the benefits conferred shall be considered in reduction of such damages;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That if said commissioners shall be unable to purchase at a reasonable price any portion of the land so condemned, by agreement with the respective owners, within thirty days after such condemnation, they shall, at the expiration of such period of thirty days, make application to the supreme court of the District of Columbia, at a general or special term, by petition, containing a particular description of the property required, with the name of the owner or owners thereof, and his, her, or their residence, as far as the same can be ascertained, which court is hereby authorized and required, upon such application, without delay, to ascertain and assess the value of said land so taken.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the Senator who reports this bill whether he knows of any precedent in the United States for assessing betterments or benefits where land is taken for a park?

Mr. INGALLS. I agreed with the Senators having charge of the privileged question that if this bill gave rise to debate I would ask that it go over.

Mr. PLATT. I do not want to debate it.

Mr. CHACE. I know of any number of cases. I have one in my memory clearly now, the city of Fall River.

Mr. PLATT. My impression has been that where land was taken for a road, a highway, a street, there betterments were considered, but not considered where it was taken for public parks or a public use of that kind. But I do not make any objection; I do not wish to delay the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5179) to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 9736) to grant the Maricopa and Phœnix Railway Company of Arizona the right of way through the Gila River Indian reservation; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 54) to credit Lieuts. Giles B. Harber and William B. Schuetze with sea-duty and sea-pay while engaged in the search for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also for the time employed in bringing home the remains of Lieutenant-Commander De Long and party.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 4670) granting to the county of Clatsop, in the State of Oregon, the right to construct a bridge across Young's Bay, a navigable stream in said county and State; and

A bill (H. R. 6337) for the relief of James D. Wood.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PUGH. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I rise to make a privileged report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I present the conference report on the naval appropriation bill.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8975) "making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 20, 55, and 56.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 7, 8, 10, 12, 13, 16, 17, 19, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 33, 35, 36, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65, 66, and 67; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the total sum proposed insert "$7,030,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "And other necessary incidental expenses, two hundred and twenty-five thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Substitute for the matter stricken out by said amendment the following: "And for publishing the same;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore of the matter stricken out by said amendment the following words: "Procuring, producing;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the amended paragraph a new paragraph, as follows:

"One or more rifled cannon of each type constructed at the cost of the United States for the Navy shall be publicly subjected to the proper test for endurance including such rapid firing as a like gun would be subjected to in battle. This test shall be under the direction and to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, and if such guns do not prove satisfactory the type they represent shall not be put in use in the naval service."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14 and 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For new ferry launch in place of the one now in use, which shall be sold, and building fuse-room and coal-shed, $8,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "foreign," proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and insert after the word "postage," in line 23, page 6 of the bill, the following: "On letters sent abroad:" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$170,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "absolutely;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "And the sum of $250,000 of the amount now standing to the credit of the clothing fund, and the further sum of $75,000 of the amount now standing to the credit of the small stores fund of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, shall be forthwith covered into the Treasury;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Other necessary incidental expenses;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the total sum proposed insert "$900,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the words stricken out by said amendment and add at the end of said restored words the following: "But the United States shall be put to no charge or expense and shall incur no liability in relation to said vessel while the same is in such use," and insert after the word "Provided," where it first occurs in the matter proposed to be inserted by said Senate amendment, the word "further;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "And other necessary incidental articles;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. All balances of moneys appropriated for the pay of the Navy or pay of the Marine Corps for any year existing after the accounts for said year shall have been settled shall be covered into the Treasury."

And the Senate agree to same.

EUGENE HALE,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

H. A. HERBERT,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
A. C. HARMER,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say that this disposes of the naval appropriation bill. It has in all consumed one hour of the time of the Senate. This ends it. I wish now to give notice that to-morrow morning after the morning business I shall ask the Senate to take up the deficiency appropriation bill, no matter what may be the state of the public business, and to continue its consideration until a reasonable time for a recess in the afternoon, unless it is before that finished, and I shall then ask for an evening session, and request the Senate to continue upon that appropriation bill until it is finished. I do this because I believe that the general sense of the Senate is in favor of putting the business through now and not to delay the necessary business that must be passed before the time for adjournment comes.

I do not seek to bring up the deficiency bill this morning or this evening, because the matter which was in debate yesterday it is said can be finished to-day, and I shall not of course in any way seek to put myself or the deficiency bill in opposition to the sundry civil bill if the chairman of the Appropriations Committee insists upon that being heard or considered; but if he does not, I propose to give the Senate the opportunity to take up the next large appropriation bill and stick to it until it is passed.

I can do nothing of course without the consent and vote of the Senate, but for one I mean that from this time forth at every possible opportunity the Senate shall have a chance to decide whether it will go on with the necessary business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

ROCK CREEK PARK.

Mr. PUGH. I call up the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me a single moment? I wish to make a correction. I find that the remarks which I made a while ago about the consideration of benefits in taking land by condemnation on Rock Creek for purposes of a park were made under a misapprehension. As I understood the amendment read at the desk it was to insert those words, but I find the amendment was to strike out that clause as to benefits from the bill, which I think was entirely proper.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 9736) to grant the Maricopa and Phœnix Railway Company of Arizona the right of way through the Gila River Indian reservation was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Epidemic Diseases, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAWYER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

OHIO SENATORIAL ELECTION.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the reports of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the case of Senator PAYNE, of Ohio.

Mr. ALLISON. I of course do not wish to interfere with the pending matter to-day, although I had hoped we might be able this evening to do something with the sundry civil bill, and I still hope we shall. Of course the moment this business is disposed of I shall move to take up that bill, and will endeavor to have it passed at some early time.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator in charge of the bill will try to get it through.

Mr. TELLER. Yesterday when the Senate adjourned I was about to call its attention to some of the facts presented to the Committee on Privileges and Elections by the report of the committee of the Ohio house of representatives, not because I supposed that that was binding upon the committee or the Senate, but for the same reason that the committee in 1873 examined a case exactly like it from the State of Missouri, the case concerning the title of the seat held by Senator Bogy in this body. In that case the Legislature of Missouri had appointed a committee, the committee had taken testimony, and the testimony was referred to this body. It was alleged that in addition to the testimony then produced other testimony might be had. The Committee on Privileges and Elections making their report by Mr. Morton, the then chairman of the committee, said they had examined into the Missouri testimony, not committing themselves, however, to the fact that this evidence ought to have been admitted, though they had examined it in determining the question presented to them whether there should be a further inquiry, or whether, more properly speaking, there should or should not be an inquiry by this body.

In accordance with that precedent I desire to take up and examine somewhat the testimony that came to the committee. I am justified, I think, in detaining the Senate in an examination of that matter, because the chairman of the committee, who represents the minority in this case, has seen fit to examine and comment upon the testimony in his remarks to the Senate, as well as to incorporate in his report to the Senate some portions of that testimony.

I had hoped when I saw the Senator from Massachusetts with a carefully prepared manuscript, which he read in the main to the Senate, that I should have the opportunity to examine in this morning's RECORD his speech for the purpose of replying to some things that may possibly escape my memory, but I find it is not in the RECORD; therefore I must proceed upon my recollection, and if the honorable Senator from Massachusetts is present I will give him now full opportunity to make any correction in any statement I make or to catechise me with reference to any point that I may make concerning the evidence that was before the committee.

The minority in their report submit their views in the shape of conclusions, which will be found on page 35 of this report. They say:

First. That of the Democratic members elected to the Sixty-sixth General Assembly more than three-fourths were positively pledged to Mr. Pendleton and General Ward, and more than a majority pledged to Mr. Pendleton. This they offer to prove by Mr. Pendleton himself, by Col. W. A. Taylor, and others.

If it would be proper, which I deny, for the Senate of the United States to go into an examination of the question how the members of the Legislature of that State stood affected toward Mr. Pendleton or any other man, the Senate of the United States can see that it is a task much beyond the power of the Senate. It would be utterly impossible for this body to arrive at any just and proper conclusion as to whether, when the Legislature of Ohio assembled, or when it was elected, there was a majority of the members elected in favor of one man or another, unless they did by some act as a legislative body so declare. If there was any doubt about it, it can be seen how herculean would be the task and how futile would be the effort if you take this testimony page by page and line by line, as I have done, and find that one man swears that this member was for Mr. Ward, and another witness comes forward and swears that it was his understanding that the member was for Mr. Pendleton, and the member himself comes and swears that he was for neither. Mr. Pendleton was not present and did not give evidence. Mr. Taylor, the other person mentioned as the witness by whom this is to be proved, was before the legislative committee and gave his testimony in detail. I shall have occasion to refer to that. It shows that he did not declare and could not have declared that any considerable number of the members were for Mr. Pendleton.

The managers for Mr. Pendleton declared that when they got together they sat down and made a list one day, and changed it the next; that men whom they had put down for Pendleton were found to be for Ward, and men they had put down for Pendleton were found to be for PAYNE. They finally made up a list in the beginning of the campaign of twenty members and realized in the outcome fifteen. So I think that part of the minority report may be considered as presenting to the Senate an impossibility, beyond its power, beyond its province, and one that if we should enter upon would only land us in interminable confusion.

Next, the minority say that they will be able to prove if this investigation should be entered upon—

Second. That in these pledges these members represented the opinion and desire of their constituents.

Is it possible that the minority of the committee supposed the United States Senate would sit here to determine the public sentiment in Ohio upon the question who was or who was not the choice of the people of that State for Senator? Is there any method known to the law or to the forum where evidence is carefully scanned and adjudicated and its influence determined that would enable this body to go out in the State of Ohio and determine whether the people were or were not in favor of this man or the other? The impossibility of it shows that the minority of the committee were not willing to rest the case upon the proposition of law laid down by the chairman yesterday. It is thrown in here to make weight; it is thrown in here to give public opinion an opportunity to bring its force upon this body in a matter where the Senate ought to be above and beyond public opinion.

Third. That Mr. PAYNE was nowhere spoken of or known as a candidate during the popular election or until a very short time before the appointment of Senator.

That is mentioned as one of the reasons for supposing that the Legislature of Ohio was corrupted! I submit that no man would be heard to present a case of that kind in an inferior court as evidence. I submit that it is unheard of in judicial tribunals or in judicial inquiries. Mr. PAYNE was not a candidate until immediately preceding the caucus, they say, and that of itself is a suspicion of fraud. Why, Mr. President, admit that Mr. PAYNE was not a candidate; it does not follow, it is not the logical sequence of the statement they have made; on the contrary, the fact that he was not a candidate in the beginning, as is sworn to by more than one witness, kept the members of that legislative body in uncertainty and doubt whether they would support Mr. Ward or whether they would support Mr. Pendleton, and when Mr. PAYNE did become a candidate such was his character in the State that it appears by the testimony of his enemies that there was a stampede from the other two candidates to him. One of the witnesses, when speaking of it, said: "I told Mr. Pendleton that he was a dangerous candidate." "Why?" "He was an old-time Democrat, he had lived in the State, he was influential and popular, and he had held high position in the Democratic party. I said he is a dangerous candidate." Mr. Cole, speaking of it, and speaking of the sentiment of the Legislature, said: "It became so strong that I, myself a Pendleton man, had to guard myself at all times to prevent myself from considering myself also a Payne man."

Mr. PAYNE, with his nearly fifty years residence in the State, with his prominence of such a character that even Republicans of the State were found taking steps to secure his nomination and his election, was not the obscure man who was thrust into politics, was not the unheard-of man who came in at the last moment. If that had been the case there might have been some reason for seeing some other cause than that of his popularity and his high standing as inducing members to change, if change they did.

Mr. President, on very many occasions men who have not been candidates have been put in nomination with the entire approbation of all their constituents and with unanimity by the nominating power. Men have been elected to the high position of Senator of the United States who had not been heard of in connection with the place until a few days before, without corruption and without fraud. Men have been elected to the executive office of this nation who were not heard of as candidates until the meeting of the conventions of their parties. Does it follow because Mr. PAYNE was not a candidate that it must be logically inferred that there was fraud in the procurement of his nomination?

Fourth. That just before the legislative caucus, where the nomination was made, which was one week before the election, large sums of money were placed by Mr. PAYNE's son and other near friends of his at the control of the active managers of his canvass in Columbus. This they allege can be shown by the books of one or more banks.

We are not enlightened in what banks this evidence can be found; we are not told where the evidence is; but we are told from whom it may be proved, that it can be proved that Mr. PAYNE'S sons and others placed it in the hands of Mr. PAYNE'S friends, citizens of course of the State of Ohio. This matter was thoroughly and carefully examined by the committee of the Ohio house of representatives under resolution 28. Who was absent that was necessary to the investigation of that charge? Nobody it is pretended save Oliver H. Payne. McLean was within the State and proffered to go before the committee and testify. Paige was within the State and proffered to go there and testify. All the minor agents who are spoken of were within the State and could have been called on and brought before the Ohio committee.

So it does not follow that there could be proved now any more in this respect than might have been proved before that committee; and unless the minority are prepared to arraign the committee of the Ohio Legislature (which I think they are not) it must be assumed that they followed out the clews, for these charges were as freely made when this committee was in session and before as they are made to-day.

Fifth. Mr. PAYNE's near friends declared that his election has cost very large sums.

A gentleman whose name is offered to be given will testify that David R. Paige declared to him that he had handled $65,000.

That fact could have been investigated into and inquired of. It is no new charge here against David R. Paige. It was before the committee of Ohio; and that is why I yesterday asked the chairman to give us the dates of the letters and reports or whatever you may call them that he read, because I knew they were before that committee; I knew they were matters of investigation there, or might have been matters of investigation if they were not.

Oliver H. Payne stated to the same person that it had cost him $100,000 to elect his father.

Oliver H. Payne was not in the State. I am not prepared to admit that which is asserted here with so much confidence that the precept of the State will not go beyond the State lines. I will admit that they could not bring Oliver H. Payne from New York into Ohio, but they could punish him for contempt when he came within Ohio's borders if he did not respond. It was not necessary to the jurisdiction of that committee that the writ should have been served in the State where the committee sat. Did this committee call Oliver H. Payne? They did not. Did they ask him by letter, by telegraph, or by precept, or by any writ to come before the committee? They did not. And they need not, because if the statement was true they could have called the man to whom he made this statement, who it is not pretended was beyond the jurisdiction of the State at the time.

Now, Mr. President, I come to another charge, which I will read and pass and take up later.

Sixth. That the members of the Legislature who changed from Pendleton to PAYNE did so after secret and confidential interviews with the agents who had the disbursement of these moneys.

Seventh. That members of the Legislature who so suddenly changed their attitude can be proved to have, at about the time of the change, acquired large sums of money, of which they give no satisfactory account.

I will speak of that in another branch of my remarks:

Eighth. Respectable Ohio Democrats affirm that just before the caucus the room of Mr. PAYNE's manager, Paige, "was like a banking-house;" that "the evidence of large sums of money there was abundant and conclusive;" that Paige's clerk declared in the presence of a gentleman of integrity that "he had never seen so much money handled in his life."

That is put forth by the minority for the information of the Senate. It ought to be truthful; it ought to be to the letter correct. I will show that it is untrue in every particular. There is no evidence here, no pretense that there is here any evidence which will justify the statement that Mr. PAYNE'S clerk ever made such a statement, nor is there any evidence that any prominent Democrat of Ohio so stated or that any man of integrity so stated.

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator mean to say that there is nothing in the evidence which justifies the minority of the committee in making that statement in their report?

Mr. TELLER. I mean to say that there is no evidence in my judgment—and I have carefully scanned the testimony four times; I have read every line of it, every word of it, again and again—and I say there is nothing that can be fairly construed into a support of that proposition. The honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] yesterday called attention to the character of that evidence. Let me read the charge again:

Respectable Ohio Democrats affirm that just before the caucus the room of Mr. PAYNE's manager, Paige, "was like a banking-house."

Who were the respectable Democrats who so asserted? Mr. Boyle, a newspaper correspondent, not a Democrat but a Republican, testified that some man, a merchant whose name he did not know, had told him that he was in some little village and went into a tailor's shop to get a button sewed on his coat or vest or pants, and while there he had heard a conversation of the character that the minority mention. Does it follow that respectable Ohio Democrats had made that charge?

Mr. Russell, a bitter opponent of the sitting member, as can be seen by every line of his testimony, admittedly so himself, states that he came in contact with a man of whom he says, "I do not know whether he was a Democrat or not;" he thought he might have been or probably was; "but I do not know;" and he says this man told him that he had been down to Paige's room and there he saw this great amount of money, and when he was asked to give the name of this man to the committee he declined so to do.

That is all the testimony there is upon which the minority can base the charge that respectable Democrats of Ohio are back of the charge as to the vast sums of money in Paige's room.

Mr. President, this charge was made before the Ohio committee. It is no new charge that comes here now. That committee had the opportunity to call the hundreds of men who went in and out of Paige's room, as shown by the testimony, day after day. Is it not strange that nobody was found to testify to that save and except the one man, and we do not know who he was, who had heard it second-hand in a Jew tailor-shop in some neighboring village, and the man of whom Mr. Russell spoke but declined to name at all?

I need not comment upon the absurdity of that statement. I do not know Mr. Paige, but I understand he has been a member of Congress and I think he was at that time. That he would be so stupid, if he was even so wicked, as to put out his money brought there for the purpose of corrupting members of the Legislature, in so public a manner as these unknown witnesses pretend, is not reasonable and is not to be presumed without some clear and positive proof. If the minority had intended to say and had said that these alleged facts might be proved it would be another thing.

Ninth. That the public belief that the choice of Senator was procured by the corrupt use of money prevails almost universally in Ohio among persons of both parties, which finds very general expression in the press.

I commented a little yesterday upon that class of evidence and that claim. What has the Senate of the United States to do with belief? If it should be said here truthfully that every man, woman, and child in Ohio so believed, unless we are furnished with some specific charges we have not the jurisdiction to inquire, can it be proved; is it in proof because the newspapers after their defeat complained? Newspaper man after newspaper man went before that committee, summoned by the committee, and when asked, "Did you charge in your paper that there was fraud and corruption," said, "Yes; irritated, provoked, and vexed over our defeat, we did." "Give us the facts," was the next question, and the answer, "I do not personally know of any; neither do I know of any man who does." More than one newspaper man so testified that he did not know, when he came before the committee, of any facts to sustain the sharp and hot editorials, and all of them excused themselves on the ground of the irritation that naturally grows out of defeat.

Mr. FRYE. Can the Senator give the names of any of the newspaper men who were summoned as witnesses before that committee?

Mr. TELLER. I can in a few moments.

Mr. FRYE. My recollection is that there were not over two of the representatives of the newspapers who have been cited in this case who were ever summoned.

Mr. TELLER. Then the Senator certainly has not read the evidence.

Mr. FRYE. Yes; I have read the evidence.

Mr. TELLER. Well, not with care. I can not give the names now for a moment, because that was not one of the things that I put down; but certainly one man said—I recollect it very distinctly—that he was irritated and that he wrote a very hot editorial—that was the term he used—but said, "I did not know of any fraud." Mr. Taylor, who was a newspaper man—not an editor, but a newspaper man—declared that he knew of no fraud. Mr. Donavin, who was a newspaper man, declared that he knew of no fraud.

Mr. FRYE. They were not down there as editors of newspapers.

Mr. TELLER. They were not the editors, but there were at least two editors who were members of the Legislature who declared before the committee that they had no personal knowledge of fraud.

Tenth. That there is specific proof leading with great force to the conclusion that each of ten members will be shown to have changed their votes corruptly, and thereby that the result was changed.

The minority, like the others, do not deign to say who the ten members were, and I do not know why they confined themselves to ten members except upon the theory that it is sufficient for them to show a change of ten members which would have altered the result, for the evidence points just as positively to a greater number than that as it does to ten. Mr. Donavin, upon whose authority the investigation was made, charged in the publication that brought out this resolution No. 28 that fourteen men had been guilty of corruption. Other newspapers charged at least four or five more. Elliott was charged, and Bunner was charged, and so were Mooney and Roche. Mr. Donavin charged that Baker, Hunt, Schultz, and Ziegler, who were then members of the Legislature, had been corrupted, and specified the amounts. He charged also that Elmer White, Dr. Fierce, Mr. Welsh, and Mr. Ramey, members of the senate, had also been corrupted, and specified the amounts. He declared that Mr. Cable, Mr. Brenner, Mr. McLyman, Dr. Holbrook, Mr. Hamilton, and Mr. Lowenstein had been bribed, and specified the amounts. Other newspapers charged others with having been bribed, and so the minority might have said, I think, with equal propriety that there were twenty if there were ten.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. The Senator from Massachusetts in presenting his views stated that evidence had been offered, proofs had been tendered, indicating that twenty-one members of the Legislature had been bribed, if the Senator remembers. That information was subsequent to making that report I suppose.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, no; it was not, as I understand. I do not understand that anybody claims that they have any evidence they did not have when this committee made its report—I mean the first committee, the Ohio committee. They may have picked up something that they think is corroborative of the charges made, but I venture to say there is not a man now who was a member of the Sixty-sixth Legislature of Ohio that is charged who was not charged in 1884, either by some member of the Legislature, by some friend of Mr. Pendleton or Mr Ward, or by some paper in that State; and aggregating those charges it is easy to get twenty-one, I will admit.

In addition the minority say:

The Senate has also recently referred to the committee certain resolutions adopted by a convention of the Republican editors of Ohio, held at Columbus July 8, 1886, praying the Senate to investigate these charges. The newspaper reports of the convention show that the governor of the State was present at the convention and declared his concurrence in said prayer. There have also been communicated to us extracts from the Democratic newspapers of Ohio, showing that a majority of those papers have declared their opinion that the election was procured by corruption. Copies of these extracts are appended.

I will not venture to comment upon that statement. I will not trust myself to express my opinion in this body of an attempt to compel by a public convention of political editors the determination of a judicial question. I leave that for the minority. I think I only need to state it to have every honest man in the land affronted.

Now, we come down to the specific charges.

One member, after the caucus, deposited $2,500 in two amounts, and being charged that it was the price of his vote, did not persist in a denial.

That is Mr. Elliott. Now, there is nothing found in the report which will sustain that statement, but there is found in the remarks submitted by Mr. LITTLE to the committee a statement that Mr. Hughes, who is now in the foreign service somewhere, would so testify. Mr. Elliott was before the Ohio committee, and testified that on the night of the caucus he took an open ballot and shook it in the presence of the caucus, and said, "Here is a vote for Durbin Ward; if no other man votes for him, I will." Here is a man charged by the minority upon the statement of somebody as to what somebody says would be proved, who swears himself that it was false and could be contradicted by the seventy-nine men of that body, as he shook his ballot in the face of the whole caucus and stated, "Here is a vote for Durbin Ward, if no other man votes for him;" and the minority of the committee knew that that evidence of Mr. Elliott was in the record when they brought in the statement, or the pretended statement, of Mr. Hughes.

Mr. President, is it quite fair that the Senate, which was expected to deal with this question through its committee, should be kept in ignorance of so important a fact as that, that this man had denied it, and the denial was unquestioned and undisputed, and no man appeared before the committee to deny that Elliott had told the truth. The statement of Mr. Hughes goes then for naught, and it had no place in the report, and ought not to have been there.

The minority of the committee say:

Another, who changed to PAYNE, just before the caucus, stated to a colleague that he was offered $5,000 to vote for PAYNE, and intended to accept it, and tried to induce his colleague to do the same. That person's wife just afterward deposited $2,500 in a bank in Toledo, took a certificate therefor, which she transferred to her husband.

That was Mr. O. B. Ramey, a senator, Mr. Ramey appeared before the committee. It was said that he was originally for Mr. Pendleton. He denied it. He declared that he was not for Mr. Pendleton; that he had not committed himself at all. It was a question of veracity between him and another whether he was or was not for Mr. Pendleton the day of Mr. PAYNE'S nomination. At least his word ought to be as good upon that subject as the word of the other party, and I do not think the minority are justified in assuming it to be a fact that he changed suddenly from Mr. Pendleton to Mr. PAYNE.

The damaging part of that statement is—and I come to that now, the other would prove but little or nothing—the damaging part, and intended so by the minority of the committee, is, that his wife deposited $2,500 in a bank in Toledo. If I am not mistaken, the Senator who represents the minority of the committee yesterday stated in his remarks that there were two banks in the town in which she deposited it, and that raised a suspicion of guilt. This was one of the charges made by Mr. Donivan. Mr. Ramey was one of the inculpated members. He appeared before the committee and admitted that his wife had deposited $2,500; but when? Not as the minority say, just after the election, but on the 24th day of July, 1884, and theel ection was in January, 1884. The time might have been material, and was material, but the money was not deposited just before the election. The honorable chairman took that from the speech made before the committee and not from the evidence, because it was charged in the speech, as it will be found, that it was just before the election.

Upon that point there could be no question. The banker in whose bank the money was deposited appeared before the committee, after having examined his books, and declared that the deposit was made on the 24th day of July. Then came Mr. Ramey, a man of character and a man of some means, who testified where he got this money and more too. He testified that he had sold property in West Virginia, gave the date, the description of the property, the name of the agent, and everything connected therewith; and therefore he accounted in a manner that could leave no doubt in the mind of any fair, honest man who read the testimony carefully that he told the truth. He accounted for the money as to where he had received it. That raises no presumption whatever, and yet we have a one-sided statement, one-half of a story told here, and the other held back.

I gave offense once by saying that if any members of this committee should partake of the sentiment of Ohio that was calling newspaper conventions I should be sorry. It strikes me that some of that sentiment crept into the minority report. I would submit that question, as the Senator from Illinois said yesterday, to a jury with confidence of success. The party would be nonsuited who made such a claim as that.

So we may eliminate now from this time Mr. Ramey from consideration. The only possible reason to suppose otherwise is the statement of Mr. Kahle that he had offered him $5,000 and said he had been offered $5,000. Mr. Ramey appeared before the committee and declared that he never made any such statements at all, and he stated to the committee that he and the man making the charge were not personal friends, and I think that was admitted by Mr. Kahle. The only suspicion that could have been thrown on Mr. Ramey really was the statement that his wife had deposited money, and unexplained that might have raised a slight presumption at least; but it is fully explained, and the committee so treated it, I think, although they refer to it in their report.

I do not believe that I should be justified in spending any further time over the testimony touching Mr. Ramey. If the Senate had time, if it was near the beginning of a session, I would inflict upon the Senate Mr. Ramey's testimony. It bears the earmarks of truth. No man, I think, can read it and not feel that he made a clean and fair statement of the case.

Again:

Another who is claimed to have changed suddenly from Pendleton to PAYNE is found making, soon after, expenditures amounting to $1,600 with his own money on land, the title to which was taken in the name of his father, who paid $2,000 for it about the same time. The father and son lived together in the same house. The son testified that he did not know where the father got the money to pay the $2,000. The father refused to state where he got his $2,000, and said he did not know where the son got the $1,600, and if he did he would not tell. The same member also made other large payments of money about the same time.

That matter was carefully and thoroughly examined by the Ohio house committee. Mr. Elmer White is here referred to as a member of the State senate of Ohio and a newspaper man. It is said he suddenly changed from Mr. Pendleton to Mr. PAYNE. He declares that before the election he had determined not to support Mr. Pendleton and tells why. He says that owing to the affairs in Cincinnati, owing to Mr. Pendleton's course with reference to that contest of which every one here knows something, he had determined that he would not support Mr. Pendleton, and that he so announced in his paper before the Legislature met.

Nobody pretended that he had not so declared. Nobody appeared to show that he did not; but an enemy of his had published a statement that there had been undue prosperity on his part since the election. He had gone to work and figured up and shown the number of mortgages upon his property and the fact that they were paid off was asserted as evidence that he had got some money beyond his legitimate business. Mr. White came before that committee and made a full and complete statement; first, that the assertion which had gone out that he had a certain amount of mortgage on his property was not true; that one mortgage of $4,000 had been renewed, and that when it went back it was credited as $4,000, making $8,000 where there was but $4,000. This was long before the Senatorial contest. Mr. White then went on to show beyond any question and beyond dispute, accepted and not denied, that when this controversy arose as to the Senator he had reduced these mortgages to about three or four hundred dollars, and he shows where he obtained the money by which he paid that debt. Then he goes into a careful accounting before that committee to show where every dollar that he had expended came from.

I say that at least to me, after I had carefully read it and reread it, after I had read everything that had been said about his prosperity, I could not but conclude that he had told the truth, the exact truth, and nothing but the truth; that he accounted clearly and satisfactorily for every dollar that he had.

That matter was before the committee in Ohio. No more proof can be produced to the American Senate than was produced to that committee.

Mr. White, the father, who had expended $2,000 in property, when asked said, "it is none of your business; I decline to tell where I got my $2,000." It was shown that the elder White was a man who did occasionally have some money of his own. I submit that it would not be in the power of the Senate to compel him, in an investigation as to the right of the sitting member to his seat, to tell where he got it, unless at least we could bring some connection between him and the transaction. He swore positively and unequivocally that it had no connection with his son whatever; that it was not derived from him nor his wife, mediately or immediately; that nowhere had it any connection with him; yet that is brought before the Senate, one side of it, the charging part only, and the Senate is told upon that, "you ought to enter into an investigation as to the right of a Senator to his seat."

Mr. Elmer White said he did not know where his father got the money. He indicated that his father was not giving him always his confidence in matters of this kind, and he said, "If I did know I would not tell, as it had no connection with this transaction." Then he repeated that he had not in any manner, and never had any connection with the money that his father had invested in that property; and there it must be left as it would have to be left in the meanest court of law that ever sat.

Again:

Another, who had to borrow money when he went to Columbus, and changed suddenly from Pendleton to PAYNE, was shown just after the election to be in possession of money to purchase property, refurnished his house, &c. He was denounced by another member as having sold his vote. He turned exceedingly sick, made no denial, and was taken away.

That is the statement of the minority of the committee which came to the Senate. That is the one-sided statement of one witness who was his political enemy, as he declared, that is Dr. Fierce, a senator of the State. When Dr. Fierce heard that some attack was made upon him, he notified the committee and said he wanted to be heard, and the committee allowed him to testify. When he came before the committee he said to the committee that he understood there had been some testimony inculpating him and he would like to see it. The committee denied him access to it and said he could not see it, that he could not know what it was. Then they proceeded to examine him. Into every act of his life they went; into every transaction that he had had anything to do with for years, and they followed it up to the amount of furniture that he had put in his house, the number of sheep that he had on his farm, and the number of cattle he might have sold for several years past, the amount that he had collected from his profession, and all sorts of things. Sitting down there, he made a statement of all the money that he had received and of the money that he had paid out since 1882, and he accounted for more money than they were able to show he had expended.

When they asked him with reference to certain payments where the money came from he proved that he had sold land in Kansas and received the money, and from the proceeds of that land he had made the payment. He gave the name of his agents in Kansas. He gave the description of the property he had sold. Then he came further with a letter from his agents, who stated that they had sold the property and transmitted to him a draft. Then he gave the name of the bank in which he had deposited the draft and where he had had it cashed. Yet we are told that the fact that he had bought $170 worth of furniture in 1884 indicates that he was indulging in luxuries beyond his means, and that the Senate must infer that he had taken a bribe in this Senatorial election.

The minority of the committee proceed further to say:

Two others, elected as anti-monopolists, became supporters of Mr. PAYNE and were heard discussing together the amount of money each had received.

The Senator from Illinois yesterday commented upon that. He called the attention of the Senate to the fact that Mr. Mooney, who was one of the men charged, had appeared before this committee and desired to be heard but not being able to gain admittance and an audience so as to be heard, he submitted his affidavit, in which he stated that at the time of the caucus he was not boarding in this man's house, and had never been in it, and he submitted the affidavit of his room-mate to show that at that time he was occupying rooms in another and in a different part of the city.

When the minority of the committee bring this here for us to act on why do they not bring us all the evidence? Why do they not give us both sides of the case instead of one? He not only showed what I have stated, but he declared with great earnestness and emphasis that he never had been drunk for twelve years. It was said that he was drunk and quarreling over the money. He declared that he was not using liquor at all, and that he had never had any controversy with Mr. Roche of or concerning money or anything else. Mr. Roche does not appear to be inquired about. I do not know where he was, and nothing appears as to that.

Another, who had before been for another candidate, but voted for Mr. PAYNE, received from Oliver B. Payne $3,500, which he said was a loan.

When did he receive that? I submit now to the Senate, on that statement, when would you suppose he received it? Was it at the time of the Senatorial election or was it years later? A fair construction of that statement is that he received it at the time. The testimony shows, if it shows anything at all about it, that subsequent to the election he borrowed of Mr. Oliver Payne $3,500. Mr. Bruner was the man; Mr. Bruner was never a Pendleton man or a Ward man; he was for Mr. Converse first and last and all the time while Mr. Converse had any show, and when Mr. Converse withdrew and was no longer a candidate, then he was for Mr. PAYNE.

Another man, a Mr. Brenner, who was charged in the public press with having been corrupted in the interest of Mr. PAYNE, and I suppose one of the twenty-one, came before the committee and testified that he had never been for Mr. Pendleton at all; that he was elected upon a ticket of anything to beat Mr. Pendleton; that his people were against Mr. Pendleton and in favor of anybody to beat Mr. Pendleton; and that after the Legislature met forty-six of his constituents met in caucus and directed him to vote for Mr. PAYNE as the most certain to defeat Mr. Pendleton in that contest. Yet he is charged with having sold out because he voted for PAYNE, without a particle of evidence that the committee were able to get on that subject at all.

Mr. GEORGE. There was no improvement in his financial condition shown?

Mr. TELLER. There was no attempt made to show his financial condition.

There are some questions of law, to which, if we were not in the last days of the session, I might be disposed to call the attention of the Senate in connection with this matter.

I forgot one man to whom I desired to call attention, and that is Mr. Welsh. Mr. Welsh was alluded to by the chairman yesterday in his speech as one of the persons who had been put under suspicion. Mr. Welsh lives in the town where one of the members of Congress lives who signed this request for an investigation, the member of Congress of whom the Senator from Illinois spoke yesterday, who felt it his duty to go up to Cleveland and remonstrate with the Cleveland Republicans against their advocacy of HENRY B. PAYNE for the Senate. He testifies that there is nothing in Mr. Welsh's condition in life subsequent to that election to indicate that he had been corrupted.

There is not a particle of evidence in all that has been taken which can be called evidence which looks to any charge against Mr. Welsh. The newspapers had charged, Mr. Donavin had charged, that he was guilty of taking a bribe, and when asked, "Where did you get it?" he says he thinks he put that down himself. Mr. Donavin testified, as it would be seen if there were time to look at this document, that he got the facts from various sources, but the amounts he got from Mr. Taylor, who was a correspondent of one of the Cincinnati papers. Mr. Taylor was before the committee, and he denied having given the list of members as published, but said he had furnished the names of some, and when asked how he obtained his information he candidly admitted to the committee that he had no personal knowledge whatever on the subject, but he said he had made predictions as a newspaper man, and he was exceedingly anxious not to get left. He had predicted that Mr. Pendleton would be elected, and he was greatly chagrined and annoyed that the rush was the other way.

Therefore, so far as these men are concerned whom I have mentioned, the Ohio committee have thoroughly and fully investigated and obtained all the evidence which can be obtained. After careful examination I shall vote that there is no evidence to impute to them wrongdoing.

That public sentiment suddenly changed in the State of Ohio is not to be denied. HENRY B. PAYNE was not a known candidate until just before the election, although a great many at least testified that they had heard his name more or less mentioned in connection with it even before the election, but it was not publicly proclaimed until just before the Senatorial election. But there were reasons why. One witness said it seemed to him as if all the politicians of the State were there, and when asked if the Democracy were for Mr. PAYNE (and he was a Pendleton man), he declared that it appeared to him as if the majority of the Democrats, the great mass of them, were for Mr. PAYNE before they got there.

Shall it be said that the hundreds of men of that State who advocated Mr. PAYNE were all bought with money? Has it come to such a condition that it can be said that the great masses of men are corrupted in a Senatorial contest in that great State? I do not believe it; I can not believe it; and there is no evidence here that would justify the committee in believing that there was undue influence brought to bear on the public. If there is evidence of bribery and corruption it has been withheld from the committee, and the committee, as I said yesterday, are in no condition to enter intelligently upon an investigation of this character.

I said yesterday that I would not yield to the Senator from Massachusetts in devotion to good government and purity of elections anywhere. I realize as well as anybody can the danger that comes to a republic when the country grows rich. I recognize the danger of filling this great body with men who only represent a bank account. I am as sensitive to that as the Senator can be. I have had some observation on that point; I know something about it, and I am prepared to put my condemnation upon it in every case where it can be done within the law. I am for discouraging rich men who have no claim upon the public, who have no fitness for official station, from occupying a place here simply because they are wealthy; but if we proceed to condemn those things we must condemn them within the law; we must follow the usual procedure or else we shall be worse than they.

It is most gratifying, as I said yesterday, that in this case we have it sheared of the usual disagreeable and annoying and humiliating branch of such cases, the charge of guilt against the sitting member. It is most gratifying to us as members of the committee and as members of the Senate that that branch of the case can be put aside, and that we can deal with this now as a question of law independent of him. The simple question is, was there such corruption and improper practices in the State of Ohio; and, judging from what we have before us, judging from the charge, judging from the evidence, is it within our province to find evidence sufficient to determine that question in the affirmative? If we can not, then we have nothing to do with the case.

I said yesterday it was not a question of politics. It is not a question of prejudice, and it ought not to be a question of passion. I said yesterday I would act independent of Ohio. I did not mean that I am not anxious for the good-will of the people of Ohio. I did not mean then, and I do not mean now, that I am insensible to the approbation of the people of that great State. I have in all my public career and private life regarded the approbation of my fellow-men as above everything else. I am prepared to receive it when I merit it, and I am prepared to receive their condemnation with equal equanimity when I do not deserve it. I have acted in this case upon my conscience, and I shall be unmoved by newspapers, by personal appeals, and by political interests, and I shall move forward to do my duty, as I have always done it as God has given me to see it; and in that way I approach my vote in this case.

Mr. SHERMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me a moment, so that I may ask the Senator from Colorado a question? I was very much gratified to hear the Senator from Colorado say that, upon an examination of the whole case, there was nothing in it which tended to implicate the personal honor of the sitting member. I believe that declaration has been made by all. I desire to ask the Senator this question: Has an examination of the testimony convinced him that there was an entire absence of any improper use of money in that election?

Mr. TELLER. I am satisfied from an examination of the testimony that there is no proof of corruption of the members of the Legislature, and that no proof of it can be obtained by the Senate. I do not pretend to say that all the methods of Ohio politics are correct. I do not know as to that. I did not inquire as to what might have been done beyond, during the campaign, or at some other time. I confined myself to the question submitted to us by the Senate; and on that I have acted, on that I am prepared to record my vote, and to record it under the solemnities of my oath without reference to the wishes of any man or men, unmoved by prejudice or passion, by interest or favor, unawed by threats, unterrorized by what they say is public opinion, to vote as I regard it a Senator's duty to vote; and that is all I desire to say.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado one question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would rather go on now.

Mr. BLAIR. Very well.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to perform the most disagreeable duty of my life. During the long time I have been in this body I never have had occasion to bring before the Senate the politics of Ohio. We have had in that State many political battles, and I have fought political contests on this floor with my colleagues, who have been sometimes and most of the time opposed to me in politics, but I have never had occasion heretofore to refer to Ohio politics as distinguished from national politics in its broadest sense.

I wish to say in the outset that in performing what I regard a public duty to the people of Ohio, and especially to the Republican party of Ohio, I do it in no spirit of unkindness to my colleague. I have known him, or have known of him, since I have arrived at the age of manhood. I have always known him as a respected and honored citizen of Cleveland, Ohio, regarded well by his neighbors; and I am glad to say that in this investigation, and in performing this duty, I shall not have occasion to personally arraign him. I believe the evidence shows by common consent that whatever corruption occurred in the process of his election, no personal knowledge of that was brought home to him; and if the investigation which I ask the Senate to grant is given, I sincerely believe that his personal honor will not be touched by the testimony which will be produced.

Having said that much, I wish to say also to the Republican Senators who have differed with me and have signed the majority reports, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], I have no sympathy whatever with the criticisms which have been made upon motives of these honored Senators. I do not think anything which was read from the newspapers by the Senator from Illinois shows that any substantial reflection upon their motives has been made in any paper that I have yet seen. The newspapers, as a matter of course, are often rude and rough in their language about public men; but if any one expects any better treatment he will have to live to some age yet far remote and in some country where free institutions do not exist. It is the history and the life of politics that every man in public life must be subject to the freest criticism, and although this is often unjust no true Republican would be willing to restrain the liberty of the press merely to avoid temporary injustice to individuals. If my honorable friend from Illinois was not so universally combative, as he is on all occasions, he would have found out that it is better not to combat a newspaper, to which he has no fair opportunity to reply.

I therefore on entering into this discussion disclaim any desire to reflect upon the motives, or the honor, or the conduct, or the opinions of the gentlemen who differ with me in opinion. But I must say that I believe from my own knowledge of the history of events in Ohio, as well as from the papers which are sent to us, that there is a profound conviction in the minds of the body of the people of Ohio of all political parties that in the election of my colleague there was gross corruption by the use of large sums of money to corrupt and purchase the votes of members of the General Assembly.

Now, that is a fact. Whether sufficient evidence has been produced before you to justify this belief it is for you to say. Whether sufficient has been said here to put you upon an inquiry, the fact remains that the people of Ohio believe that in the election of my colleague there was the corrupt use of money sufficient to change the result.

What is the evidence of that? Omitting for the time a statement of the fraud and crime which have been going on for two years, let us come down to the official statements recently presented to us. The first was a report accompanied with testimony from a committee of the house of representatives of Ohio, which certainly does not show any personal rancor or hostility to my colleague. Senators must see in the comments made upon the action of the Cowgill committee that there was no passion, no heat, no undue persecution or prosecution of that investigation. Although the committee said that as to the four members named in the resolution (and that was the only subject of their jurisdiction) they found no evidence to implicate them, yet they did find evidence which they undertook partially to detail, which led them to believe a report that there were gross frauds in connection with the election of a Senator from Ohio in 1884; and for that reason, because they had no jurisdiction of that question, they report it to the Senate of the United States to do what they think is best or right about it.

So you have at the outset the statement of a committee in Ohio who have fairly investigated this matter that there was just ground for investigation by the only body authorized to pass upon the election of my colleague. I shall have occasion hereafter to show that while this investigation was imperfect and unsatisfactory, it was for want of jurisdiction and power over the subject-matter, imperfect as it was, yet a majority of that committee come to these conclusions:

> However, although we find that the charge against the four members of this house named in the resolution has not been sustained, certain facts have been developed which we believe to be of sufficient significance to report to the house for disposition as hereinafter suggested.
> There is a general concurrence of testimony upon the following points:
> 1. That the candidacy of HENRY B. PAYNE for United States Senator was not made known publicly until a considerable time after the general election of 1883 at which members of the General Assembly were chosen.
> 2. That suspicion and charges of the employment of illegal means to secure the election of the successful candidate for Senator were very prevalent near the time of, and for weeks after, the Senatorial election, and that in many instances the suspicion amounted almost to conviction.
> 3. That as to choice of Senatorial candidates among members of the General Assembly, there were numerous remarkable changes, difficult to account for without assuming the use of unusual inducements.
> Mention is made of this concurrence of testimony, for the reason that the points specified have a general bearing upon several matters that follow.
> Although, as stated in the outset, the testimony developed nothing of an inculpating character concerning the members of this house named in the resolution of inquiry, we believe that circumstances surrounding the election of HENRY B. PAYNE as one of the Senators to represent the State of Ohio in the Congress of the United States, as presented by the testimony, are such as to warrant us in recommending that an authenticated copy of the testimony and report be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate for the information of the body of which Senator PAYNE is a member, and for such action as it may deem advisable.

That is not all. The members of the house of representatives of Ohio to whom this report was made and who are now our present Legislature, elected after all the storms of our contest for the last two years, have passed a resolution and sent it here. It is now before me, and is made partially the basis of this investigation. I will ask the Secretary to read the resolution, adopted, as far as I know, by a unanimous vote of the Republicans members. I will speak about the Democratic position after a while. I ask the Secretary to read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> Be it resolved by the house of representatives of Ohio, That in the investigation made under house resolution No. 28 ample testimony was adduced to warrant the belief that the charges heretofore made by the Democratic press of Ohio are true, to wit: That the seat of HENRY B. PAYNE in the United States Senate was purchased by the corrupt use of money; and
> Further resolved, That the honor of Ohio demands, and this house of representatives requests, that the said title of HENRY B. PAYNE to a seat in the United States Senate be rigidly investigated by said Senate; and Further resolved, That the governor of Ohio be requested to forward a copy of this resolution to the President of the United States Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senate of Ohio, which had gone through a crucible for more than four months in perfecting its organization, where great party heat was elicited, after the organization had been perfected by the exclusion of what were called the Hamilton County representatives of fraud, passed a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Whereas by common report suggested and corroborated by the public press of the State without respect to party, and by a recent investigation of the house of representatives, the title of HENRY B. PAYNE to a seat in the United States Senate is vitiated by corrupt practices and the corrupt use of money in procuring his election; and

Whereas it is deemed expedient, in order to secure a thorough investigation of his said election as Senator by the United States Senate, that the belief of the General Assembly in this regard be formulated in a specific charge: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That in the opinion of the General Assembly, and it so charges, the election of HENRY B. PAYNE as Senator of the United States from Ohio in January, 1884, was procured and brought about by the corrupt use of money paid to or for the benefit of divers and sundry members of the Sixty-sixth General Assembly of Ohio, and by other corrupt means and practices, a more particular statement of which can not now be given.

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States be, and the same is hereby, requested to make a full investigation into the facts of such election, so far as pertains to corrupt means used in that behalf.

Resolved, That the governor be, and is hereby, requested to forward a copy thereof to the President of the Senate of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. I shall not ask the Secretary to read further because I do not wish to detain the Senate too long, but I will offer the resolutions adopted by the Republican State committee of Ohio, by its unanimous vote, in which they set out in different phraseology a little more specifically the same general statement that is contained in the Senate resolution. Instead of wearying the Senate with reading it, because it is already a public document, I submit it, as follows:

REPUBLICAN STATE COMMITTEE ROOMS,
Columbus, Ohio, May 5, 1886.

Whereas it has been shown to our satisfaction by the testimony taken by the committee of the Ohio house of representatives, under house resolution No. 28, and from other sources, so strongly as to induce us to believe and charge that the election of HENRY B. PAYNE to the Senate of the United States was secured by bribery, fraud, and corruption; and

Whereas the testimony so taken has been by the house of representatives reported to the Senate of the United States, for such action as that body may see fit to take on account thereof; and

Whereas the facts so established reflect upon the good name of the State of Ohio, and affect in morals, as well as in law, the validity of the title of Mr. PAYNE to his seat in the Senate: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the Republican central committee of Ohio, That in the name of all honest people in the State of Ohio, and for the credit of the hitherto unsullied name and reputation of our State, the Senate of the United States be, and hereby is, respectfully requested to prosecute such investigation into the matters suggested by said report, and the charges herein preferred, and to take such action thereon as may be necessary to relieve our State from the disgrace which it now rests under, and to do equity and justice to all concerned: and

Resolved further, That the chairman of this committee is directed to forward an authenticated copy of this resolution to Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR, chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate.

We hereby certify the foregoing to be a true copy of the preamble and resolution adopted by the Republican State central committee of Ohio, at a regular meeting held in the city of Columbus, Ohio, this 5th day of May, 1886.

JAS. E. LOWRY, Chairman.

JOSHUA K. BROWN, Secretary.

I also tender, to be placed upon the record, the statement of the Republican delegation from the State of Ohio in the House of Representatives to the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., June 29, 1886.

To the honorable Committee on Privileges and Elections United States Senate:

GENTLEMEN: The report that your committee is not disposed to grant an investigation into the methods of the election of HENRY B. PAYNE to the Senate of the United States, charged to have been signalized by bribery, petitioned for and requested by each house of the Ohio Legislature, and by representative citizens of the State, and demanded by a large majority in numbers and influence of the press of the State, has produced therein great disappointment.

There is a feeling in Ohio that the State has been deeply wronged by your supposed action. The undersigned are convinced that the facts and records, or some of them, laid before your honorable committee by our colleagues, Messrs. LITTLE and BUTTERWORTH, have, in the press of your other duties, failed to receive that consideration and weight which they merit and should have at your hands. We are informed that additional testimony is in the hands of Messrs. LITTLE and BUTTERWORTH, which they ask an opportunity to present to you.

We, therefore, as citizens of Ohio, venture to request at your hands a reconsideration of the matter submitted to you.

If there be any matter upon which the committee desires further information, we trust an opportunity will be given to furnish it before final action, in order that justice and right may be secured.

We take occasion now to join with our colleagues named in expressing our belief that, if an opportunity be offered, the charge of the Ohio senate will be sustained by testimony to your full satisfaction.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

WM. McKINLEY, JR.
E. B. TAYLOR.
A. C. THOMPSON.
W. C. COOPER.
CHAS. E. BROWN.
CHAS. H. GROSVENOR.
ISAAC H. TAYLOR.
JACOB ROMEIS.

This statement was also supported by oral statements made by Mr. BUTTERWORTH and Mr. LITTLE, which have been printed with the report in this case.

I also present to the Senate, which is also in a public document laid before the Senate, the resolutions of the Republican editors of Ohio, of whom there are sixty-eight in number, sixty-eight firms or editors who publish that many different Republican papers in Ohio. This paper also states in a more emphatic manner what may be said to be the unanimous opinion of the Republican press in the State of Ohio upon this subject, not with any heat or passion as against my colleague, but their expression of the opinion that there was in this election gross wholesale corruption and the use of money in the purchase of members of the Legislature.

There is attached to the resolutions a long address setting out at length their views, which I shall omit:

To the Senate of the United States:

The Republican editors of Ohio in convention assembled respectfully represent that the circumstances preceding and attending the election in 1884 of HENRY B. PAYNE to the United States Senate from Ohio induced the firm belief in the public mind at the time that his election was accomplished by the corrupt use of money. The developments since have confirmed this belief. It has become the settled conviction of the people of Ohio that Mr. PAYNE holds his seat in the Senate as the result of bribery. It would be difficult to find a well-informed person in the State seriously to dispute the fact.

These convictions are not the result of partisan feeling, for it is notorious that the accusations of corruption originated with persons of opposite political principles from ourselves; and yet the influence of money and the power of party discipline have in most cases caused them to defend rather than to denounce these charges first made by themselves.

Your memorialists share the general conviction; the far reaching evils of the situation are manifest; redress can only come from the Senate of the United States.

We therefore respectfully and earnestly request that the Senate will direct an investigation to be made, believing that it will establish the charges of bribery and corruption formally presented by the Ohio senate and house of representatives.

Expressive of the convictions of the Republican editors of Ohio are inclosed resolutions and address adopted; and we ask that the Senate shall vindicate the character of the State either by clearing up these charges or by purifying that honorable body from the presence of a member corruptly elected:

"Resolved, That it is declared to be the belief of the members of this convention, and they so charge, that the election of HENRY B. PAYNE to the Senate of the United States was procured by the corrupt use of large sums of money, furnished and disbursed by the acknowledged agents and representatives of Mr. PAYNE, and that this convention further declares its belief that an investigation by the Senate will substantiate this charge; and they are not aware that the fact has been in any direct and responsible way denied.

"Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections be, and it is hereby, requested to act favorably upon the communication of the members of the Ohio delegation in Congress asking for a reconsideration of the vote whereby the committee declined to recommend an investigation of the election of Mr. PAYNE, and also to take into consideration the final communication of Representatives LITTLE and BUTTERWORTH, offering further evidence of bribery in the election of Mr. PAYNE and further weighty reasons for investigation.

"Resolved, That in case the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections adheres to its reported decision, that the Senate of the United States be requested to take this decision of its Committee on Privileges and Elections into consideration and reverse it.

"Resolved, That it is suggested to the Senate of the United States not to ignore its time-honored precedents and turn from its doors a State which comes so fully supported, preferring the charge that one of its seats in that body was purchased with money, a charge which, if ignored by the Senate, must unfavorably influence the reputation of the body itself.

"Resolved, That it is the right of the people of the State, fundamental and vital in character, to have an investigation into a Senatorial election therein when the same is charged by representative and responsible authority, as has been done in this case, to have been accomplished by bribery or other corrupt means.

"Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, attested by the officers of this convention, be transmitted to the President of the Senate."

Mr. President, something has been said both by the Senator from Illinois and by the Senator from Colorado as to these documents. The Senator from Colorado went so far as to say that the expression of a belief by all the people of Ohio would not make him vote to order an investigation. If he had said that the expression of the opinion of all the people of the State would not make him vote against his judgment to convict my colleague then there would be some strength in his position. When passing upon the life and property of another, as judge or jury, all the motives that could influence mankind ought not to sway one a hair's breadth from rendering a conscientious judgment free from bias or corruption.

But that is not the question here. The question here is, when a charge is made affecting the right of my colleague to his seat by both houses of the Legislature, by the organs of opinion opposed to him, by the whole college of editors engaged in developing and making public opinion, backed, as I will show you after a while, by the opinion of forty Democratic papers expressed two years ago, the question is whether you will allow this charge to be explored, whether you will permit the truth to be found out, you having the power and the jurisdiction, and the only tribunal in the wide world that has power to pass upon the election of a United States Senator.

There is the question, and Senators ought not to avoid it. It seemed to me that my friend from Illinois and my friend from Colorado entirely mistook the issue. The questions in these papers were sent to the committee not to pass upon the merits of the accusation. They have not reached that far. A committee of this body has no power to pass upon that until after an investigation. But it is to say whether upon a showing made before them there was cause sufficient to induce an inquiry into the facts and circumstances.

Mr. President, this leads me to make a remark, that I did believe at one stage of this controversy my colleague for his own vindication would at once demand an investigation. I believe, with due deference to his more experienced judgment, that it would have been better if he had seen his way clear to do it. I can say that I believe that a full investigation would acquit him of personal participation in bribery; but if, as it is alleged, others did by the corrupt use of money, public or private, control his election, while he would not be dishonored and disgraced, the public would be satisfied of the extent and nature of the actual offense committed, whether it was one that called for any further notice, whether the means employed was only the usual efforts in party warfare, whether it was a mere contest between party factions or factions within the Democratic party, or was open bribery and corruption or the purchase of a seat in this body. The sentiment in the Senate and among the people would have been just and generous and forbearing to my colleague. That was my opinion; but I suppose my colleague must have felt possibly an honorable feeling like this, that while he was conscious he was free from blame he did not choose to compel an investigation when others who were bound to him in various ways might be affected by the investigation.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. I believe I did not misunderstand the Senator when he said he thought I had mistaken the issue, the question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do think so.

Mr. LOGAN. In the next sentence the Senator says that he does not believe an investigation would inculpate Senator PAYNE, but that it would ascertain other persons who might be guilty. Do I understand you?

Mr. SHERMAN. Substantially so.

Mr. LOGAN. Then is not this the fact—we will see who understands the issue—if Mr. PAYNE can not be inculpated, he is the one we have jurisdiction over, and if other persons violate the law over whom we have no jurisdiction, is it not the duty of Ohio to proceed against those persons and investigate them, and not the duty of the Senate of the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. I intended to come to that. I think the Senator overlooks the whole controversy here. The question is whether enough members of the Legislature have been corrupted to poison the election, not to affect the character of my colleague, but to poison the election and change the result, and no power in this world has jurisdiction of that question except the Senate.

I might here change the course of my remarks. The Senator asks, Why do we not indict our criminals? We have sent more men to the penitentiary for criminal offenses against the elective franchise in the last two or three years than Illinois has done, and she has done nobly in two or three marked cases.

Mr. EVARTS. Not in this case?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not in this case, but in connection with our election frauds. But what could be done in this case? Where would we find a bill of indictment? This is the first time it has ever been urged in the Senate of the United States that it will not examine into the character and conduct of the elections and qualifications of its members unless the record of indictment and conviction is first produced.

Mr. LOGAN. The Senator asks, where will you find your bill or indictment? I can tell him. At Columbus, the capital of the State of Ohio, where he charges that certain persons committed offenses. By their grand jury and before their courts they can try these men and convict them if they have been guilty of these offenses. There is where you can find your indictment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Would my honored friend from Illinois say to the people of the United States that the Senate will investigate no charge against a member of this body unless the person accused shall first have been convicted by a trial before a jury of twelve men?

Mr. LOGAN. No, sir; that is not the point. The Senator will not get away from the point. The point is this: that you say this man is not guilty but others are. Over them we have no jurisdiction. If they are guilty it is the duty of the State to indict them and to prosecute them. I do not say that you have got to find a man guilty, but I say that is the duty of your State, and unless it performs its duty it can not ask us to go around hunting up evidence for the purpose of having men indicted over whom we have no jurisdiction.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Constitution of the United States, to which we have all sworn our allegiance, declares that the Senate shall be the judge of the election returns and qualifications of its own members. When a great State, with over 3,000,000 people, through its organs, comes here and says that they believe that the election of a Senator has been tainted with fraud and corruption it will not do for Senators or for the Committee on Privileges and Elections to say, "We do not believe it; you have not evidence enough; you have not convicted the rascals who participated in this offense."

Now let us go a little further. My friend from Illinois complained of injustice having been done him. I think that injustice was done him. I sympathize with him heartily, but who can not quote newspapers to show that injustice is done to us all? What was the necessity of showing that Halstead——

Mr. LOGAN. Why does the Senator quote the newspapers in order to get an investigation, then, if he says the papers ought not to be quoted here? It is the resolutions of these newspaper representatives now that he makes a part of his argument.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have not yet quoted a newspaper. When I do the Senator may then ask me that question. I quote the opinions of editors of newspapers who come together and resolve and send here their opinions.

Mr. LOGAN. Exactly.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is not their opinion worth as much as yours?

Mr. LOGAN. Nobody doubts that; but if the Senator criticises me for quoting newspapers, I think the same criticism would apply to himself.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not criticise you, except I say I do not see what effect that has in this debate except to show that injustice was done to the Senator. I admit that. What Senator here has not had such injustice done to him over and over again? He seems to throw the whole burden of the accusation made by the editors upon Murat Halstead, who is a kind of a fierce fighter, fighting everybody at times. The Senator says that Halstead has abused Grant, abused him, abused me, and everybody else. Suppose that to be true. Is it the position of Mr. Murat Halstead that is now commented upon? No, sir; it is the position of sixty-eight leading publishers of newspapers of Ohio, whose opinions are worth noting, nearly every one of whom is a warm friend of the Senator from Illinois. Do you suppose that there is nothing in this, that this is a mere partisan movement——

Mr. LOGAN. I do not propose to be placed in a false position by anybody. Inasmuch as the Senator admits that I have not been very well treated in this case, I propose to protect myself. He speaks about these editors. I have no complaint to make of these editors; I have not made any complaint; but when he speaks of their opinion, it is a mere request of these men. They do not give you any evidence; they do not name a man who knows anything; they do not present any fact; they do not present any case.

Mr. SHERMAN. The fact that these men say that——

Mr. LOGAN. They merely request that we shall do something, that is all.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have had their resolutions sent to the desk for publication to show what is the feeling in Ohio, that it would not be easily smothered, and that a resolution to investigate only would put an end to it. Do you not suppose it is a strong feeling which would induce General Kennedy, one of the bravest and truest soldiers of the war, to write that letter to his comrade and friend, the Senator from Illinois? It may have been unjust, but the very fact that men like Kennedy, the lieutenant-governor of our State, a man of character, and conscience, and honor, and courage, as the Senator knows, would state this thing to his fellow-soldier and friend, is an evidence of the strong feeling which prevails. The very editorials contained in the newspapers that my honorable friend read are an evidence of strong feeling. Nothing else could prove it so well. You can not move great masses of men, you can not move half of the people of a great State like Ohio unless something fearful is behind it. These newspapers may publish their arguments and their talks. That is not the thing that is behind this movement. It is the fear, I may say the conviction, that their most sacred right of representation has been tampered with by corruption. This is not a newspaper charge. It is no idle charge, but made firmly and openly, perhaps with heat but it is made nevertheless with honesty and sincerity. You may heed it if you will; you may reject it if you will.

The Senator from Colorado said that this newspaper meeting of editors was an affront. He expresses his opinion upon the result of the transaction, as he has a right to do. These editors who were interested as being represented, whose reputation in common with the people of Ohio is affected, can not express their opinion, and if they do it is an affront to us.

Sir, the Senate of the United States can never put itself so high that even the petition of the humblest citizen, black or white, may not be received with respect, and when a respectable body of men like this send their petitions in plain and not offensive words, it can not be treated as an affront, even if it does not harmonize exactly with the opinion of a Senator on this floor.

I might go on and show further evidences of the current state of opinion—what it is now. This investigation is an honest demand of a great State.

But there is another more important consideration I wish to mention, and I know my friend from Illinois will sympathize with me in this. There have events happened in the last two or three years in Ohio, of which the alleged corrupt purchase of a seat in this body is only one and not the most important, which have aroused the feelings of the people of the State to fever heat. They have gone through a contest unlike any that has ever happened before in the history of our Government. Up to three years ago our politics had been practically pure. We had had our manly contests, man to man, boldly contested on the stump and elsewhere, but in the summer of 1883 a new method of politics crept into our canvass. It first appeared at Cincinnati. Its first appearance was at the Highland House convention in the city of Cincinnati in August, 1883.

Up to that time, there had been here and there fraud, and men were tried and convicted sometimes and sent to the jails and the penitentiary for election frauds. Among the rest a man by the name of Mullin was sentenced for a year, and was pardoned out by the President of the United States. Waiving that for the present, we had had our contests; but in August, 1883, there first appeared an organized and wholesale scheme to control by fraud the primaries, an important agency in our party politics. That was not a contest between the Republicans and the Democrats, but it was an internecine contest in the Democratic party. A small interest in Cincinnati got the control of what is called the Democratic executive committee. They had primary elections for delegates from Cincinnati to meet in convention and name candidates for the Legislature, and so on. This was the beginning of this legislative contest. Then it was that the night before the convention was to be held, before a single lawful delegate could meet to assert his power, this executive committee undertook to organize the convention by appointing a president, a vice-president, and all the officers. They appointed themselves a committee of credentials and passed upon the credentials of the delegates who were to meet the next day. They were a committe of organization, of credentials, and nominations, and mapped out even to the candidates who were to be voted for.

How was that scheme carried out? Sir, this executive committee acting as a committee of credentials rejected over two hundred Democrats, elected on what is called the Pendleton ticket in opposition to the ticket that was setting this machinery in motion. Those delegates were excluded by the fiat of this executive committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me to ask him whether the Highland House convention was not organized precisely as conventions of the Democratic party in Cincinnati had been organized for years previous, and whether the gentleman who presided over that convention was not an avowed friend of Senator Pendleton for the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. The best answer I can make to that is to have a single extract from a Democratic paper published in the city of Cincinnati read.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Does not the Senator know that there are on the files in the committee-rooms of this body affidavits made by the president of that convention and by the friends of Mr. Pendleton in reference to the proper organization of that convention?

Mr. SHERMAN. I know that a habit had sprung up there to allow the executive committee to do certain things, but it had not been the fixed or universal habit and it never had been perverted for the purpose of overthrowing the people elected by the Democrats of Cincinnati. It is their fight; I do not care anything about it. I will allow one of their newspapers to tell what was done. It is an extract I copied from the very paper there referred to.

Mr. LOGAN. It was a Pendleton fight.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; an internecine fight.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The article referred to will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Extract from the News-Journal, Cincinnati, Sunday, August 19, 1883.]

Before the meeting of the executive committee he had "fixed" his ticket, and "fixed" the agencies through which he carried out his designs. The most important of these was the committee on credentials, and this was firmly anchored and armed with five reliable (?) men, with L. G. Bernard at the helm. The primary elections occurred and the McLeanites met with defeat, the majority of the legally-elected delegates being men who were unpledged. The McLeanites openly boasted that no man opposed, either actively or passively, to the McLean interest would be allowed to have a voice in the convention, and the result proves that the boasts were not idle words. Every elected delegation opposed to the McLean interest was contested. The committee on credentials met in a saloon late Friday night and heard the contests, but reserved all decisions and refused to make any statement as to their number. It is understood that about one-half the city precincts were thus put in the hands of this committee. In many cases the contestees did not know that their rights were being questioned, and of course had no hearing. The committee reported (that is, Mr. McLean published a list of his delegates) and the committee tendered a copy of this to the convention as its report. By this means about two hundred legally-elected delegates were ruled out, and when the question came before the convention almost one-half of those voting were acting as judges and jury on their own cases.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the account given by one of the papers of this controversy. Some Senators near me seem to think, and as the conversation is so loud I must hear it, that we are not interested in that, that this was a mere McLean and Pendleton fight. We are just as much interested in the purity of these primary meetings among the Democrats as we are among those of the Republicans. It is a very foolish idea to suppose that the people of this country are not interested in wise and judicious party organization, and if one party introduces fraud in order to defeat each other they will carry those same frauds into the final contests between the two great parties, and thus poison the Government of the country. When I show you here that the very motive and spirit that actuated all the movements of that party during the two years in Ohio started in the commencement to cheat themselves, or a portion of their own number, I show you a movement organized in fraud, born in fraud, which I will show had its natural results in stirring up the people of Ohio to an extent that they never have been before in a political matter.

After this was over and the ticket was nominated, then a combination was made between the Democratic party and the liquor dealers' organization, openly and boldly, by resolutions mutually passed during that fall; and at the same time the temperance people, being largely interested in the question of prohibition, went off in a side-show by themselves. The result of the combination between the liquor dealers' association and the Democratic party against the Republican party, weakened as it was by the deflection of many persons, led the Democratic party to success that fall, and a Democratic Legislature was elected.

After all the internecine contests, in which I felt and feel no interest whatever, between the members of that party, it was apparent to every one, according to the testimony here produced over and over again, that Mr. Pendleton had a majority, sometimes contested more or less, and that General Durbin Ward, a gallant soldier, now since dead, had a large vote also. My colleague then had no show, or at least there was no general agitation of his candidacy. No doubt he was spoken of by friends, as he has always been. He has been for many years spoken of as being worthy of a seat in this body, but there was no movement for him, nor was there any until some time in December. The extracts read by the Senator from Illinois show the fact that then some of the Republican papers, probably to create a diversion or division, commenced suggesting PAYNE, and movements were then set on foot for the nomination of Mr. PAYNE. All that only shows that up to that time in December there was no thought of Mr. PAYNE. The contest was supposed to be between Durbin Ward and Mr. Pendleton.

Soon after that the General Assembly convened. Then it was that corruption occurred, as it is alleged by these various people, not by the actual purchase of members of the Legislature to vote for Mr. PAYNE at the election of Senator after it was organized, but by bribery and corruption of the members of the Democratic party in the caucus to nominate a Senator. In this the friends of Mr. PAYNE, it is alleged, controlled a sufficient number of votes to change the result of the election and defeat Mr. Pendleton and defeat Mr. Ward and elect my colleague.

Mr. President, I do not intend to go into a critical examination of all this testimony. I am perfectly content with the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I am perfectly willing to rest the case upon the arguments made by the several members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I am perfectly willing to take the statement of this case as made by Mr. LITTLE, a member of the House of Representatives, and also by Mr. BUTTERWORTH in his able speech, who refers to it. But before coming to that I wish to follow the election by bribery of a Senator in January, 1884, by a brief statement of the effort to elect another Democratic Senator by fraud, forgery, and perjury in January, 1886, for these events and attempts are kindred and associated with each other.

I said that I would show that this fraud, commenced in the Highland House convention, continued afterward, but was resisted at every stage by the popular will. At the very first election that occurred after the election of my colleague the Republicans carried by their usual majority the State of Ohio and overthrew the Democratic party. In the State election in October, 1884, we carried the State of Ohio by an overwhelming majority, and in the November election that followed, when Blaine and Logan were our cadidates, the majority was 50,000. This is the evidence of estimation in which the Senator from Illinois was held by the Republicans of Ohio. They admired him for his courage and stalwart Republicanism.

If there was a feeling of disappointment shown when his position in this matter was known which led to the act of striking his name from the Blaine and Logan Club at Good Hope, Ohio, it should only show to him how intense and great must have been the feeling of disappointment that he was not fighting their battle for them now as they supported him then in the same cause of republican government. I do not blame him, I do not call in question his conduct, but the very evidence he produced shows how intense must be the feeling of these people that they would suddenly change their attitude in regard to him.

In October and in November, 1884, we carried the election by an overwhelming majority. So again in the following spring we carried the election in the city of Cincinnati by six or seven thousand.

But in the summer of 1885, last summer, this same evil and corrupt influence was organized, after having captured one Senator, to capture another, and they organized in every part of Ohio schemes of fraud, of forgery, of ballot-box stuffing, of perjury, as well as of bribery.

These have been developed now by judicial process, and we can speak of them openly and boldly. In the city of Cincinnati there was a majority of several thousand for the Republican ticket if there had been an honest count, even if all the fraudulent votes cast were counted. This is shown by the testimony now produced both in court and by the committees of investigation. This corrupt gang of criminals practiced every manner of fraud that has been practiced in any city of the United States. In one single precinct of a single ward in the city of Cincinnati they changed enough votes by taking out Republican ballots and putting in Democratic ballots, and put in fraudulent votes known to be such, and then changed and altered the returns by palpable forgery so as in this precinct alone to reverse the election of ten members of the house of representatives and four senators in the State Legislature, and then upon these forged and fraudulent returns gave certificates of election to ten Democratic members and four Democratic senators. This is now admitted on all hands to have been a wholesale organized fraud and the trial of one of the chief guilty parties is now going on in Cincinnati. Why, Mr. President, the frauds committed in that city I will not detail to you, because no doubt you have heard enough of them.

Nor were these crimes confined to Cincinnati, but after the election was over they committed a forgery, an admitted forgery, of the returns of the election from the city of Columbus, which would have secured the return of a member of the Legislature and perhaps affected the result of the Senatorial election. These were plain and palpable forgeries. In the case in Cinninnati the forgery was so manifest that everybody could see it, and it was excluded afterward by both parties from the count. In the case at Columbus the successful consummation of the fraud was defeated, as I have always thought, by Judge Thurman and by other Democrats in Columbus who would not tolerate or permit such crimes. So the attempt to bribe a member of the Legislature at Dayton, Ohio, after he had been elected was clearly proven and admitted on all hands.

These were the incidents, these were the events that aroused the people of Ohio; and, sir, they are not a people who would submit to this thing. They can not be ridden over by fraud or violence, and the time was rife just after the election in October last when in Cincinnati if it had not been for prudent and wise and conservative counsels there might have been scenes even more dangerous, even more terrible than the burning of the court-house, which was one of the results of the previous fraud, by placing in power a corrupt police, men who would not stand by law-abiding citizens in their rights, but would protect and foster and aid the criminal classes.

Sir, happily that was passed by; and by peaceful methods, the ordinary course prescribed in the constitution and laws of the State of Ohio, having carried the election by a majority of nearly 20,000 on the State ticket and more than 30,000 on the legislative ticket, they corrected these errors in the Legislature according to the constitution of Ohio, and in this way saved another terrible contest that might have occurred in that State, and God knows where it would have ended. It was this hegira of fraud, this appearance there of all the election frauds that had been perpetrated North and South in our elections that stirred up our people in Ohio, if possible, to explore to the uttermost the beginning, the progress, and the end of this most infernal conspiracy to elect two members of this body by bribery and fraud.

Now, Mr. President, I return to the election in January, 1884. What was the result? Mr. PAYNE was elected. What was the opinion expressed at the time by the people of Ohio? My friend from Illinois, who reads newspapers by the wholesale, complains and seems to fear that I will read newspapers. I have here published in this document——

Mr. LOGAN. I want the Senator to keep within proper bounds. He says that I fear that he will read newspapers. What right has he to say that? What have I said that caused him to say that? I have said nothing about his reading newspapers. He can read the Bible if he wants to, or newspapers either. I make no objection to that. If he ever has read the Bible, he can read it here.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is very stale wit.

Mr. LOGAN. I know it is very stale, but that is the only kind of wit the Senator appreciates.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do think I was justified in saying that the remarks of my friend from Illinois about newspaper extracts, made before I read anything, before I proposed to read anything, when I had read only a petition in proper terms from editors of newspapers were uncalled for. I suppose he probably thought I was going to read all these newspaper extracts.

Mr. LOGAN. You can read them if you want to; I have no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I know I can without asking the Senator. I do not propose to read them. They are here in this public document, but not one-half of the utterances made by Democratic papers are gathered here.

What do they say? They uniformly with one voice pronounce the result of this election the act of fraud—call it a purchased seat obtained by corrupt methods—forty Democratic papers in the State of Ohio. It is said they were Pendleton papers. I do not know whether they were or not, but that was the judgment of the Democratic press of Ohio. That was not all. I read you here the words of a man written in his own handwriting who will command the respect of Senators and people, written at the very moment these transactions were going on, and I ask you think of his opinion, and that is Allen G. Thurman. Here is his letter:

The editor of the Times called upon ex-Senator Allen G. Thurman at the United States this afternoon, and asked him to let the Democracy of Ohio know his views. He stepped to his table, called for paper, and this is what he wrote:

"I have nothing against either of the candidates. They are all men of ability. My personal relations with each of them have always been friendly and pleasant. But there is something that shocks me in the idea of crushing men like Pendleton and Ward, who have devoted the best portions of their lives to the maintenance of Democracy, by the combination against them of personal hatred and overgrown wealth.

* * * * * * *

"Why, then, prefer PAYNE to him?

Speaking of Ward.

"The answer, I fear, is perfectly plain. There never has been any machine politics in the Democratic party of Ohio. We have, as a party, been freer from bossism than any party that ever existed. But some men seem to think that we ought to have a machine, amply supplied with money to work it, and under absolute control of a boss or bosses, to dictate who shall and who shall not receive the honors and rewards within the gift of the party.

Then the closing paragraph:

"I want to see our officers elected in the good old-fashioned Democratic mode, and not by some new-fangled mode that, to say the least of it, wears an evil-omened and inauspicious aspect. I want to see all true Democrats have a fair chance, according to their merits, and do not want to see a political cut-throat bossism inaugurated for the benefit of a close party corporation or syndicate."

That was the opinion of Thurman as to what was going on there. He also quotes the fact that when the people elected the members of the Legislature only two men were thought of or spoken of before or after. These extracts follow in this document. I will read a statement, not from a newspaper, but a statement——

Mr. FRYE. The Senator will allow me.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I would like to have the Senator read what Judge Thurman said immediately afterward, on page 78, in the Columbus Times, January 9, 1884, more significant still than what the Senator has already read.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, this is a quotation from the Columbus Times, a leading Democratic paper:

The Democratic clock is put back four years, and corruption is given a new leasehold in our land. Syndicates purchase the people's agents, and honest men stand aghast.—Columbus Times, January 9, 1884.

Mr. GEORGE. Is that Judge Thurman's language?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is in the Columbus Times, a paper published in his own town, right under his nose, and never has it been contradicted.

Mr. GEORGE. A Democratic paper?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. Friendly to Judge Thurman?

Mr. SHERMAN. I presume it is. It was a leading organ of the Democratic party at the time. Many of these extracts are from other Democratic papers. One of the papers most severe in its comments on the result of that election was owned by a gentleman who published the Bucyrus Forum. He was a member of the Senate who participated in these events. I have extracts from his paper by the score.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio, does that extract from the Columbus Times purport on its face to be the language of Judge Thurman?

Mr. SHERMAN. It does. It is in quotation marks here. It was not like the other, written by him. This I can not say except that it was published in the daily paper in his own town, and I never heard it contradicted. Now, I will read you a statement made at this time by a member of the House of Representatives, a Democrat, whom you all respect, Mr. WARNER:

I protest that what has been done at Columbus is not the deliberate act of the Democracy of Ohio. On the contrary, I affirm, in the face of all that has been done, that the great body of men composing the Democratic party of my State have been, and still are, sincere in their opposition to monopoly and the corrupt use of money to gain political advantage and their declarations in favor of a better civil service. The nomination of Mr. PAYNE was the result of a cut-throat combination between McLean and the Enquirer crowd of Cincinnati and the Standard Oil Company. It was brought about by methods which every one who is a lover of free institutions and has faith in popular government must abhor and condemn. The truth is that the Democracy of Ohio has been deceived and basely betrayed by certain men to whom it had confided sacred trusts.

Now I ask you, Senators, whether this is a mere party contest, when I produce the general voice of the Republicans of Ohio, who have been baptized in a contest with fraud and have finally overcome it, and superadd to that the testimony of such men as Judge Thurman, Mr. WARNER, an honored member of the House of Representatives, and add to that forty Democratic papers with their stream of charges, sometimes too strong, that I do not desire to read. There is the condition of the matter.

We come next to the Cowgill investigation. The Senator from Colorado, I think, and perhaps the Senator from Illinois have said, "Why do not the people of Ohio investigate this matter?" Well, Mr. President, after this election took place all these charges were rife in the air, and within a week after my colleague was elected there was a resolution introduced into the house of representatives of the Ohio Legislature, then largely Democratic. I will ask the Secretary to read the resolution presented by Mr. Love.

H. R. No. 24.

Whereas the press of the State and reputable men of both political parties have openly charged that bribery and corruption have been resorted to and successfully practiced in securing the election of Hon. HENRY B. PAYNE as United States Senator from Ohio, and that members of the house of representatives of the Sixty-sixth General Assembly have solicited and received bribes for their votes for United States Senator: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a select committee of five to make a full and complete investigation of said alleged charges of bribery and corruption, and that said committee shall have the power to send for persons, books, and papers, and shall report to the House at the earliest date practicable.

Mr. SHERMAN. That resolution was introduced by a Republican within a week after the election, right there before the very men who were charged with participating in it. How was that treated? Was it denounced as an unmeasured slander, as any man in this body would do? Was it denounced and was it said, "We dare you to this accusation; it is an infamous falsehood and lie?" No, sir. As I will show you that Legislature acted like a bought Legislature from the beginning to the end of its existence. They then offered an amendment, which I ask the Secretary to read. One of their leading members, Mr. Bohl, gave notice of his intention to discuss, which under the rules, like an objection, carried it over. Mr. Love moved that the rules be suspended, which was agreed to.

The question being on the adoption of the resolution,
Mr. Myers—

Mr. Allen O. Myers, whose telegram was read here last evening, moves this amendment as a rider.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The question being on the adoption of the resolution,
Mr. Myers moved to amend the resolution by inserting after the preamble the following:
And whereas, it is charged by newspapers and other irresponsible parties, that one Charles Foster, late governor of Ohio, has corruptly expended money to debauch the voters of Ohio and corruptly secure the votes of candidates for the Legislature to vote for him for United States Senator in the event of their election and a Republican Legislature being chosen, and to secure his nomination and election for governor: Therefore,
Be it resolved, That said committee be authorized to investigate all said charges, beginning with the nomination of said Foster in Cincinnati in 1879, until the present time, and charges relating thereto or any other subject that may be called to their attention; said investigation shall be full, thorough, and complete, and the committee shall employ stenographers to make full reports of all their proceedings, and said committee may meet here or elsewhere and shall always sit with open doors.

Mr. SHERMAN. Instead of meeting this accusation that was hot and imminent before them, it is met with a rider that is voted on by these Democrats, the Republicans protesting that they are perfectly willing the examination should be made by a separate committee, but they did not desire the two matters to be mixed together. The one was there, immediate, the other was of the past, and they were perfectly willing to have an investigation in regard to Governor Foster.

Now, I ask the Secretary to read the next movement that was made after this was put on. See what was done next.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Jones raised the point of order that the amendment was out of order, inasmuch as the matter contained therein was not germane to the resolution.
Which point of order the Speaker decided was not well taken.
The question being on agreeing to the amendment,
Mr. Sheppard moved to amend the amendment by adding the following:

Mr. SHERMAN. Sheppard was a Democrat.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading, as follows:

And whereas it is publicly charged that one Allen O. Myers obtained his nomination for a candidate for member of this Sixty-sixth General Assembly by stuffing the ballot-box; therefore said committee shall also fully investigate said charges, and shall report the result of the same to this house.
Which was agreed to, Mr. Myers accepting the amendment.
The question being on agreeing to the amendment as amended, it was agreed to.
The question now being on the adoption of the resolution as amended, the yeas and nays were taken; and resulted—yeas 35, nays 52; as follows:

That was the way in which this first demand for investigation was met. Three times during that Legislature the journals will show that an effort was made to get an investigation, and this same Allen O. Myers stood up there one day when he wanted to carry a point and was threatened with expulsion, and dared those men to expel him and said he knew the price of every one of them.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. EUSTIS. I ask him whether or not a considerable number of Republicans did not vote against the adoption of that resolution?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly; when they found it laden down in this way some of them did.

Mr. EUSTIS. So those Republicans voted against the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. SHERMAN. That may be, loaded down as it was with superfluous matter, but they demanded at the time, and the records will show it, an investigation. There was no charge against Mr. Foster; no public sentiment pointed out such a charge, and this was a rider to avoid an investigation. Day after day and week after week, when the Democratic party were making charges against their faithless servants, the Republican papers demanded, and Mr. Boyle, one of the leading correspondents of the Cincinnati Commercial, day by day charged members of the Legislature with bribery and demanded an investigation; but they never answered to that appeal. No man among them desired an investigation.

What would have been the feeling of any man who hears me under those circumstances? Who of us when faced by an enemy with a specific charge would refuse to face him manfully? And yet these members of the Legislature who were charged by their own constituents at home with bribery dared not ask in their own vindication an investigation, and whenever the proposition was made by the minority of Republicans in either house it was voted down in this kind of way.

And so that Legislature lived out its time, the worst we ever had in Ohio. They left our financial affairs embarrassed; they left our State degraded and dishonored; but I say proudly for the Democratic party that there were but four men of those who survived the burial that occurred at the very next election of the members who were suspected of this fraud. When some of these suspects were proposed for nomination they were defeated in their own party. When a few of them got the nomination some of them were defeated at the election. Four alone of the members of that house who were suspected of having voted for my colleague came back as members of the next house, four out of the one hundred. The Democratic party was not unobservant of its duty in this regard. And now this day the men whose names are connected with this offense are marked men in the communities in which they live.

Mr. President, it is said, however, as an answer to all that I have said, that this Cowgill committee's investigation was unsatisfactory and insufficient. Suppose it was, suppose we leave it out of view entirely, and take the broad allegations by men of both parties against this election, and how can you refuse to grant the investigation?

It is said the Cowgill committee was an imperfect one. So it had to be. What jurisdiction had that committee? Nothing except to investigate the conduct of four men, and they were only pointed out because they happened to be members of the Legislature that had been charged with this offense, shown to be guilty of this fraud or participation in it. One or two of them indeed claimed to have voted for Ward and not to have voted at all for Mr. PAYNE. They were acquitted. Does that investigation show any hostility or hard feeling or resentment or any desire to persecute or prosecute? No. They acquitted unanimously the four men whose names had been mentioned, suspected only because they were spared monuments of the old Legislature; but at the same time they do say in their report that the evidence did lead them beyond the mere examination of the four men, but they never pressed that examination so as to compel the attendance of a witness; they never pressed the examination so as to compel an unwilling witness to testify. They knew under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States the perils of a legislative committee proceeding to investigate beyond its power; but they did say and they do say to you that although they found these four men guiltless, yet the testimony did disclose in their opinion such a state of affairs in regard to the election of the Senator from Ohio as to demand the jurisdiction of the only body that has power to act upon it. The language is here. I may be able to turn to it to show you that they go just as far as they dare go under their authority.

Mr. TELLER. If it will not interrupt the Senator now, I should like to ask him a question. He says this committee knew they had not the authority to compel the attendance of witnesses. I ask the Senator if anybody declined to attend that they requested to attend?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know, indeed.

Mr. TELLER. I will state that no one who was called on declined to testify. The Senator says further that they had not any power to compel the witnesses to testify. I ask if any witness declined to testify of and concerning the matter that the committee were investigating because of any lack of jurisdiction or even a suggestion of it? If the Senator does not know, I can state that there was nothing of that kind.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Colorado should convince himself and even convince the Senate that this committee failed to do its duty, it only strengthens the case for an investigation here. If on the other hand, as I believe, this committee, a modest committee of the house of representatives of Ohio, feeling that they were treading upon ground sacred to the Senate of the United States, did not choose to go further than send forward this testimony, then I can see my way clear.

Mr. TELLER. I am not reflecting upon the committee; it is the Senator only who has suggested that they did not have power. They never suggested it.

Mr. SHERMAN. They do suggest it in their report.

Mr. TELLER. But not in their testimony.

Mr. SHERMAN. They do in their report set out exactly the reason why they did not go further. As a matter of course it did not appear in the testimony, because that is the action of the committee. Here they say, after speaking of the four persons implicated—

RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION.

However, although we find that the charge against the four members of this house named in the resolution has not been sustained, certain facts have been developed which we believe to be of sufficient significance to report to the house for disposition as hereinafter suggested.
There is a general concurrence of testimony upon the following points:
1. That the candidacy of HENRY B. PAYNE for United States Senator was not made known publicly until a considerable time after the general election of 1883 at which members of the General Assembly were chosen.
2. That suspicion and charges of the employment of illegal means to secure the election of the successful candidate for Senator were very prevalent near the time of, and for weeks after, the Senatorial election, and that in many instances the suspicion amounted almost to conviction.
3. That as to choice of Senatorial candidates among members of the General Assembly, there were numerous remarkable changes difficult to account for without assuming the use of unusual inducements.

Then they go on and give the different cases mentioned, which have already been discussed sufficiently in the Senate, and they conclude as follows:

Although, as stated in the outset, the testimony developed nothing of an inculpating character concerning the members of this house named in the resolution of inquiry, we believe that circumstances surrounding the election of HENRY B. PAYNE as one of the Senators to represent the State of Ohio in the Congress of the United States, as presented by the testimony, are such as to warrant us in recommending that an authenticated copy of the testimony and report be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate for the information of the body of which Senator PAYNE is a member, and for such action as it may deem advisable.

That is the modest statement. They do express their conviction strongly, and if you believe what they believe and what they here assert and report, you may not convict anybody, you may still say the evidence is insufficient, but for the purpose of an inquiry it goes far beyond any case I have ever known in my time in the Senate of the United States or any that I believe is shown by the public records.

Here is a demand by one great party, here is a complaint made by the leading papers of the other great party, here is a refusal by the Legislature that was charged with bribery to make any investigation or inquiry into the matter, here is the report of a committee impartially stating the impression the testimony has made upon them, and they send it to you to say whether or not it is sufficient to induce inquiry; that is the point; not whether the accused is guilty or not guilty; not whether my colleague should be expelled; that is not the question at all; but it is a question whether upon these allegations and upon this imperfect information given to you without examining the men who know the facts, it is sufficient to cause you to inquire into a charge which if true demands your consideration not now, but at some future time. There is the question.

Mr. President, this matter never can be quieted until there is a full inquiry. I tell Senators frankly that there are six or seven men who are known—I could name them, they are named in the testimony all the way through—who if they were brought before this Committee of Privileges and Elections would settle this matter forever one way or the other, in my judgment. In less time than has been consumed in disputing and discussing over this question, the whole matter would have been settled, and I do express my earnest hope and wish that all these charges may be dissipated into thin air and that after a full investigation of the men who know about these things it should appear that this charge made against a portion of the people of Ohio is unfounded no man will rejoice at more than I. It is no party advantage, no desire to see our Democratic friends tainted with anything wrong or corrupt, because I know the mass of the Democrats of Ohio are as honest and as true and as faithful to the obligations of honor and duty as any other portion of the people of the United States. All that can be reasonably asked—and that I hoped my colleague would agree to—is a means by which the men who have been pointed out here and named shall be brought forward to testify. I know some of them and I believe they would tell the truth frankly. If they went beyond the bounds of legality and propriety, let them say so; if they did not, let them say so.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. LOGAN. Does he not know—and I am sure he has three of those men in mind that he says he might name—does he not know the fact that three men offered this committee to appear before them and testify and that the Ohio committee never sent for them. Does he not know that?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want to stand in the position of arraigning these men or prejudicing the public mind against them; but I know one thing, that the leading one among them was not there and was away from the State in which he lived until just at the conclusion of the examination, and at the time when the committee had resolved to proceed no further, when they were satisfied, so far as the four men were concerned whose case they had power to investigate, what would be the good of the examination of these three?

Mr. LOGAN. I will state to the Senator what would have been the good of it. If that committee intended to present anything to the Senate of the United States they certainly could have presented their evidence with the rest. The Senator well remembers that in one case here that came before the Senate affidavits were presented, affidavits of men were absolutely offered for the purpose of showing that there had been fraud in one case which I could mention. It will not do to say they had no jurisdiction. If a man chose to submit himself to the jurisdiction and testify, that was all that could be asked, and these people did. One of the men that he refers to—for I know very well to whom he refers—wrote a letter to the committee some time before they closed the investigation notifying them of the time he would be there and saying that if they desired his evidence they could take it. What was the response? The Senator says they had closed. That was a mistake. The chairman of the committee wrote him a note saying that if he desired his evidence he would notify him. That is the case and those are the facts.

Mr. SHERMAN. Suppose what the Senator says is true—suppose this committee neglected to do what they ought to have done, and as the Senator seems to wish to convict them of doing——

Mr. LOGAN. I do not wish to do any such thing. The Senator has been trying in several insinuations to put me in a false position. I do not charge any such thing. I only say it would have been a convenient method of getting that testimony before the Senate so as to give notice as to the evidence that would be produced, and where a man is willing to submit himself to a jurisdiction whether the tribunal has jurisdiction of him or not, the other party can not complain that there is no jurisdiction when the party is willing to submit to the jurisdiction.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no further answer to make in regard to that than that I think it sufficient that the committee went to the extent to which they were authorized to go and then turned it over to us.

If there was no objection to the examination of these eight or ten witnesses this whole controversy might be settled at once. I could give a list of eight or ten witnesses to examine whose names are mentioned in these papers, and they are mentioned by my colleagues in the other House, and if there was any wrong done it must have been done by them. Let these men go before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and expurgate themselves. There is one pregnant piece of testimony that can only be had by taking a deposition in Germany, the testimony of as honest a man as is, the late Lieutenant-Governor Mueller, of Ohio. It is true it is hearsay, and therefore it would not in a court of justice be evidence, but it is that kind of evidence we always take in a preliminary inquiry to get at the facts, and here is the name of a gentleman we shall be able to furnish, and whose testimony is entirely consistent with his character and consistent with the honor and good fame and name of my colleague; his testimony ought to be obtained, and can only be obtained by sending and getting his deposition. Here is the testimony of a Democratic lawyer of Akron, by the name of Hall:

Q. Do you recollect any conversations with any other persons about the use of money, Mr. Hall?

A. I had a conversation with Mr. Mueller, ex-Lieutenant-Governor Mueller. I don't remember the time; but I was at his house. He lives in West Cleveland. He took me in his carriage and brought me into the city (I think I went out on a street car); anyway, we were riding into the city from his residence, and he told me that by accident (he was here in the city) he went into Mr. Paige's room—

The testimony was given in Columbus. Therefore he speaks of "here in this city"— went into Mr. Paige's room—

Mr. Paige was the one to whom was attributed the care and custody of money.

He said it looked to him like a banking-house. There was a large amount of money in plain view. He said he found out that he was not wanted there and he went out. He went immediately and told Mr. PAYNE about it, before the election; told him they were using money here; told him what he had seen. Mr. PAYNE'S answer was, "You don't suppose I would indorse anything of that kind, do you?" He said he didn't know. That was about all he said about it. That is all the conversation that I know of directly with reference to this.

Mr. Mueller must have been there. He was a Democrat of high standing. He was an intimate friend of Mr. PAYNE, and also of Colonel Payne. His testimony would be important in this controversy. It is true he is not here. This is not evidence, but it is that kind of statement which is always admitted, and is essential and necessary in a preliminary inquiry. You never can convict any man except by first hearing what he said, gathering up reports, hearsay testimony. You do not offer it at the final trial until it is robed with all the sanctions of legal testimony, but in the scrutiny and finding out of fraud and wrong you use every kind of means possible, even to the offensive way of hiring detectives.

Here is the testimony of a gentleman whom I might name which would at once and could at once settle this controversy, and it seems to me end this matter, end it for the honor of Ohio, end it, I trust, for the good name of my colleague and with his continued seat here, no doubt.

No man can claim, unless this fraud or bribery or corruption can be shown to have gone to the extent to have caused enough members in the caucus to have changed so as alter the result, that it would affect the election. The rule is laid down in numerous cases; but here the allegation is that there were more than that. You say you do not believe these allegations, and here members of the House of Representatives who have their constituents behind them, men of high character and honor, come and tell you what they expect to prove.

You say the evidence before you was not sufficient, but yet you refuse to let other evidence be brought. Why this haste? Why this hurry? Why not give an opportunity to present this evidence? My own opinion is that most of this difficulty has grown out of a misapprehension by the people of Ohio. When the people of Ohio sent here their respectful petition by the two houses of the Legislature, by the members of the Republican committee, by this convention of editors, by this imperfect proof, and asked you to simply inquire into that which affected their honor and your duty, they supposed as a matter of course the request would be granted, and I was of that opinion myself. I supposed that as a matter of course inquiry would be at once entered into. Since I have been a member of the Senate I have seen Senators get up and read a newspaper paragraph without sanction or name, and upon that somebody else would demand a committee of inquiry, and it was always granted.

My friend from Massachusetts, and I do not know but I did myself, in the case of the Virginia troubles and the Mississippi troubles offered resloutions for inquiry. I have myself when charged with offenses that would have been improper in a Senator, when charged by newspapers, demanded an investigation. Therefore it was supposed that as a matter of course when this petition was presented there would be no lawyers' quirks and stratagems to avoid an investigation, but that on the assertion of these people it would be granted. A man may be arrested for murder, the highest offense known to the law, on the mere affidavit of a man who swears he believes that A B committed murder at such a time and place upon the body of C D. Such affidavits are sufficient on which to base an accusation. The grand jury hears all kinds of testimony, and that is the second stage of these inquiries; but in the preliminary stage, in the stage in which this case is here before the Senate, a mere charge is sufficient.

Mr. President, it is not sufficient for us to state that the case made by this printed testimony is not strong enough to convict. It is a question whether it is sufficient to excite a suspicion because upon a suspicion a Senator's seat and his right to hold his seat here may be inquired into. Therefore with due deference to the distinguished and eminent gentlemen who treat this case as if we were now passing upon the guilt or innocence of an accused with the view of a lawyer and the strictness of a lawyer, it seems to me they have confounded the stage of this inquiry. It is now an inquiry only in the hands of a committee of our body to advise whether or not in these papers or in any that can be produced there is cause for investigation, or whether there is reasonable and probable cause that can be produced. If so, then the inquiry goes on. The final judgment, however, is only arrived at when we shall have completed testimony of a legal character, when with grave and deliberate justice, and with the kindness that we always give to our colleagues here, we proceed to render our judgment.

Mr. President, I have said more than I intended to say when I rose. I will now add in conclusion that I consider that I perform a duty to my State, and especially to the party that I represent here, and all we can say to you is that we have believed and do now believe, mainly upon the statements made by Democratic editors and Democratic citizens, for they know more about it than we do, that upon the belief generally held in the State of Ohio that fraud and corruption did supervene in this election we ask you to make such inquiries as will satisfy your conscience whether that charge is true or false. If it is true, you alone are the judges of it. If it is false, then you should punish the men who started these charges and you should vindicate the men who have been unjustly arraigned.

In any view I can take of it, I believe it is the duty of the Senate of the United States, as it regards its own honor and the future of our country, never to leave this matter in its present condition, to be believed by some and disbelieved by others, to be made the subject of party contest and party chicanery, but let us have a fair, judicial, full investigation into the merits of these accusations. If they are false, stamp them with the brand of ignominy; if they are true, deal with the facts proven as you think is just and right.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I did not intend to take part in this discussion, but the majority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections who made this report have been arraigned in such severe and acrimonious terms and have been exposed to such a severe judgment by the appeals made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], that, having shared the responsibility of the majority report made by that committee, I deem it incumbent upon me to justify and to defend the conclusions which I have reached and the judgment which I have rendered as a member of that committee.

It is needless for me to say that that committee appreciated fully the very grave and serious responsibility which the Senate of the United States dictated that they should assume. It was a responsibility which became the graver from the fact that it is a question not only affecting the integrity of this body, the honor of the State of Ohio, but the interest which the American people will feel to know whether or not a committee of this body charged with this duty has been faithful and honest to the trust which has been imposed upon it.

Mr. President, whenever an inquiry is to be instituted in this country in whatever tribunal, whoever may be the accused, it has always been the boast of Americans that under our free institutions there are certain rules and laws which protect the citizen in the enjoyment of every right that he possesses.

I have myself been present at a memorable trial; I have been present at the trial of a French general when that man was condemned to be degraded and to be shot, and it was indeed a shocking spectacle to sit there and listen to those judges, the presiding officer of that court being no less than a high judicial officer, and despoiling that man of his reputation and of his rank, threatening to have him shot, and all that upon hearsay testimony; and I could not help but contrast that extraordinary proceeding and that extraordinary trial with what takes place in this country, which is a country of laws and of constitution; and as a member of that committee I wish to give to the Senate the reasons which actuated and influenced my judgment in reaching the conclusion that I did that there were not sufficiently specific and circumstantial charges made before that committee to authorize an investigation of such a character as is here proposed.

I overlooked, as I have no doubt the other members of the committee did, the merely personal considerations involved in this question, knowing that the honorable Senator whose seat was to be questioned by this proceeding has always borne a pure and a blameless life, that his private character and his public career have remained unassailed and unassailable to this moment. I sat in that committee as a judge overlooking and discarding whatever measure of respect and of friendship might be entertained for the honorable Senator.

What was the first proceeding which was had? The house of representatives of the State of Ohio had been engaged for two months and a half and had examined fifty-seven witnesses to ascertain and to determine the question whether certain members of that Legislature had been corrupted. That testimony was sent here by that house of representatives without any request or demand as regards the United States Senate. It was simply transmitted for our information, but the Senator from Massachusetts moved to have that testimony referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. That was the first branch of this inquiry.

There was no suggestion from any one that we should inquire into other sources of testimony. There was at that time no demand made from any quarter whatever, not even from either branch of the Legislature of the State of Ohio. We examined that testimony and we reached precisely and exactly the same conclusion that was reached by the house of representatives that had made that investigation, and in that conclusion the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections coincided. Was there anything very extraordinary in that? Here was an investigation that had been passed by the legislative department of the government of Ohio, the whole body, and the result of that investigation was transmitted to the Senate of the United States and by their order a committee of the Senate investigated that same testimony and came to the same conclusion, which was declared explicitly and without equivocation by that investigating committee. I ask whether after reaching that conclusion, whether after forming that same judgment, for entertaining that same opinion we are liable to any criticism from any quarter whatsoever.

The Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Ohio, knowing the damaging effect that the mere statement of the committee that there was nothing discoverable in that evidence to substantiate or to sustain a single charge would have, have sought to shelter themselves under what I call a special and misleading and indefensible proposition of law; and what is that? That this house of representatives of Ohio had not jurisdiction of this investigation. After that evidence is transmitted to our committee, after we are required to examine that evidence, after we have carefully examined and carefully weighed that evidence, having, I say, reached the same conclusion that the investigating committee of Ohio reached, we are told by the Senator from Massachusetts as a legal proposition that the investigating committee had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and after all our labors, in order, as I say, to escape the terrible force, as a mere matter of argument, which that conclusion necessarily involves, he uses this language in his report:

> But the result of the investigation in Ohio seems to the undersigned absolutely unimportant.

What does the Senator mean by that? I understand perfectly well that the investigation of the committee of the house of representatives of Ohio does not conclude the United States Senate. That we all understand. We all understand that the United States Senate has original jurisdiction to institute and prosecute an inquiry of this kind. But what does the Senator mean by stating that that investigation is wholly unimportant?

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator want an answer to his question?

Mr. EUSTIS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I mean exactly this: They were authorized to investigate facts, whether four particular men, A, B, C, and D, were guilty or not guilty. They find they were not guilty. That is the result of their investigation, all they were charged to do; and whether those four men were guilty or not guilty is, in my judgment, absolutely unimportant to us. That is what I mean.

Mr. EUSTIS. Now, Mr. President, I propose to show to the Senate as a legal proposition that it is simply preposterous for a lawyer to assert that that house of representatives did not have ample, complete, and absolute jurisdiction of the whole subject-matter of investigation.

Mr. HOAR. Did the committee have it?

Mr. EUSTIS. Yes, sir, and I wish to call the Senator's attention to a confusion of ideas which was perfectly apparent to me when he was discussing this question. He says in his argument and he says in his report that that house of representatives of Ohio had no jurisdiction, because it could not invalidate or vacate the seat here of the sitting member. That is true. That is to say, that house of representatives could not render the judgment which we can render. We have under the Constitution supervisory jurisdiction and we are the power which renders judgment declaring that a seat shall be vacated because the election has been illegal or corrupt. The power conferred upon the United States Senate is not only a power of investigation, but it is a power of jurisdictional authority to render judgment in the case; but whereas the Ohio house of representatives has not jurisdiction to render judgment, I maintain that it has full jurisdiction to investigate for the purpose of expressing its opinion, whatever that may be worth, with reference to who shall be a representative from the State of Ohio.

The Senator from Massachusetts told us that the honor of the State of Ohio was involved in this question. I grant that. If the honor of the State of Ohio be involved in this question, as we all know that it is, certainly the State of Ohio and its Legislature have jurisdiction over its own honor.

The Senator from Massachusetts told us that the integrity of the legislative proceedings by which the member seated was elected was in question. I admit that. If that be true, has not the Legislature of the State of Ohio jurisdiction over the question of the integrity of its legislative proceedings?

The honorable Senator from Massachusetts referred us to the case of Kilbourn vs. Thompson as applicable to a question of this kind. I must express my surprise that he has produced such an authority as that. That was a case where the House of Representatives of the United States passed a resolution to investigate certain matters with reference to dealings in real estate in the District of Columbia, and when they came to inquire into the private affairs of Mr. Kilbourn, matters which were purely of a private character, he refused to testify and he refused to surrender his books, and the Supreme Court of the United States held that the House of Representatives had no right or power to pass such a resolution and compel him to testify.

But here is a great public question, a question of supreme public moment, involving the issue, is the sitting member entitled to his seat as a representative from the State of Ohio in this body, involving the further question that if this tribunal should declare that he is not entitled to his seat the Legislature of Ohio would have the power to fill that vacancy, a question in which the State of Ohio has never ceased to have an interest, in which the people of Ohio have never ceased to have an interest, because the question is, who shall represent the people of that State in this body? And to tell me that with reference to such a question as that the house of representatives of Ohio had not jurisdiction to institute an investigation, to compel the attendance of witnesses, to summon those witnesses, and to compel those witnesses to testify, is to my mind a preposterous proposition.

I maintain on the contrary, and I will show by the authority of precedents in this body that that house of representatives had ample and complete and absolute jurisdiction of this whole question of the investigation of Mr. PAYNE'S election, not only with reference to the four members who were subsequently elected to the next assembly but with reference to every person and every transaction and every proceeding in the State of Ohio, because the State of Ohio has a right to-day, although she can not revoke or cancel the credentials of the Senator now representing that State, to inquire and to demand to know who represents her in this body and whether his title as a representative of Ohio is a legal, a constitutional title; and for the purpose of aiding the Senate of the United States that body has the right to exercise an original and auxiliary jurisdiction, to summon whom they please, to compel whom they please to answer, to explore every field of investigation in order that they should lay a basis and a foundation for the action of the Senate of the United States according to the nature of the transaction. That was the doctrine which was very clearly stated by the Judiciary Committee in the report made in 1857. That committee was then composed as follows: Messrs. Butler of South Carolina (chairman), Bayard of Delaware, Toombs of Georgia, Pugh of Ohio, Benjamin of Louisiana, Collamer of Vermont, and Trumbull of Illinois. I certainly think—and I do not speak in any spirit of disparagement of any one—that a collection of stronger, abler constitutional lawyers could hardly be made from a selection in any period of the history of the United States.

I wish to draw the distinction between this case and the case under consideration. That was a case where there was a protest made by forty-four members of the Legislature; there had not been any investigation made by the Legislature as has been made in this case, but that committee reported, with a single member dissenting, as follows:

> Under no state of facts could your committee deem it consistent with propriety, or with the dignity of this body, to send out a roving commission in search of proofs of fraud in order to deprive one of its members of a seat to which he is, prima facie, entitled; still less can they recommend such a course when the parties alleging the fraud and corruption are themselves armed with ample powers for investigation. If it be, indeed, true that members of the house of representatives of Pennsylvania have been influenced by corrupt considerations or unlawful appliances, the means of investigation and redress are in the power of the very parties who seek the aid of the Senate of the United States.

The Senator from Massachusetts stated yesterday that he did not believe that these gentlemen intended by "redress" that a legislative body of a State could by their decision affect the title to a seat in this body. Of course not; everybody understands that; but what these gentlemen reported to the Senate was this, that there being no specific charges, there being no specific accusation as regards time, place, individuals, and circumstance, the Senate of the United States would not be justified in even instituting or initiating an investigation or an inquiry, and that it was perfectly competent for the legislative body of the State to prosecute that inquiry because they had full and ample power to exercise their jurisdiction over the question of the investigation.

If that proposition be correct, this house of representatives of Ohio did have jurisdiction of this question. They certainly exercised that jurisdiction; they examined fifty-five witnesses; they spent two months and a half conducting that investigation, and came to the conclusion that there was no evidence whatever to substantiate or to sustain the charge of corruption or bribery, and we came to the same conclusion upon examining that same evidence; and I must, speaking as an individual, say that the fact that there had been an investigation by a legislative body, a full and complete investigation, that committee admitting that they received hearsay testimony, that they accepted rumors, surmises, conjectures, that they followed every trail, made every possible inquiry in every possible phase that an investigation can assume, and deliberately came to the conclusion, as I have already stated, that there was no evidence whatever to sustain or substantiate the charge made, ought to have great weight at least, if it be not conclusive.

If the proposition which I have endeavored to maintain be correct, that that investigating committee did have jurisdiction of the subject-matter, what becomes of the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts when he made the denial of that jurisdiction in his speech yesterday?

The other branch of this investigation was what I was going to call newly-discovered evidence, but I will correct myself and say newly-discovered zeal; and that was that after the Committee on Privileges and Elections had, I may say unanimously, unless the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] corrects me, reached the conclusion that there was no evidence whatsoever developed in that investigation which would justify an inquiry, then appeared two gentlemen from Ohio.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Upon what does he base the statement which I have heard other people make, that the Committee on Privileges and Elections ever reached a conclusion that there was no evidence which would justify an investigation?

Mr. EUSTIS. Here is the report.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me I desire to state——

Mr. EUSTIS. My recollection is that that was the report made by the chairman of the committee to the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Let me state the facts, because that has been alluded to. Evidence taken by the Ohio committee was sent to the Senate accompanied by no request whatever from any quarter for an investigation, but simply as was said for the Senate's information. I undertook to look at that and see what it contained, and I reported that while it contained certain facts that I stated, to wit, that there was a general public belief that the seat was obtained by bribery, that one or two members were shown to have been offered money for their votes, and that several others were shown to have received money under very suspicious circumstances, yet there was nothing that showed that Mr. PAYNE was implicated, and there was nothing in that evidence which showed that the result was thereby changed, and that Mr. LITTLE, the representative of this complaint, desired to be heard, and that I was informed that the four gentlemen who were Mr. PAYNE'S managers kept out of the State and did not testify before the committee.

Certainly it is one thing to say that the sitting member is not implicated, which everybody says now, and to say that that evidence did not tend to show that the result was changed, and quite another thing to say that the general belief in Ohio that there was a fraud, accompanied by evidence that several members, though not enough to change the result, were bribed, did not warrant an investigation.

The Senator from Maine, of course, will speak for himself when he comes to speak; but I never said anywhere that I had formed an opinion that an investigation should not be had. On the contrary I accompanied that report, as appears in the printed copy in the RECORD, although it is left out in what was sent out to the press, with the statement that there was an application for a further hearing on the subject, and when I made the report to the committee I urged a further hearing, and it was given to Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire either from the Senator from Louisiana or my colleague as to this fact: I understood the Senator from Louisiana to say that the committee arrived at a unanimous conclusion.

Mr. HOAR. There never was an expression of conclusion by any human being on the committee until after Mr. LITTLE was heard except in that printed report of mine.

Mr. DAWES. I understood the Senator from Louisiana to say that the committee arrived at a unanimous conclusion unless the Senator from Maine should correct him. Now, what I want to know was if the committee took any action as a committee on that subject?

Mr. HOAR. None whatever that I know of.

Mr. FRYE. I was waiting to see whether or not the Senator from Massachusetts would answer the inquiry which was made by the Senator from Louisiana, and he having done so, I now call his attention to the fact that the two gentlemen from the other House, Mr. LITTLE and Mr. BUTTERWORTH, were requested to make their statements before the committee; and I being required to be present before another committee stated my conclusion to the committee; and that was that I was in favor of an investigation, and gave some reasons for it. That was before any hearing had been completed, and therefore I did not agree to the Senator's construction of the report of the Senator from Massachusetts at all, and I am free to say now that I do not agree with the report of the Senator from Massachusetts, if there is anything in it which intimates directly or indirectly that there is not evidence enough in the report sent to us from the State of Ohio, accompanied with the request made, not only to justify but to demand from the Senate of the United States an investigation.

Mr. EUSTIS. I understand the Senator from Maine to state that he dissented from the view presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, that the Senator from Massachusetts agreed there was nothing in that evidence.

Mr. FRYE. No. I say if the Senator from Massachusetts can be construed to have taken that view, then while he was taking it I was dissenting.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Maine if ever in his hearing he knew me express the opinion that there was not enough to warrant an investigation into the case at any time?

Mr. FRYE. I must confess I never did.

Mr. EUSTIS. The statement that I made was also made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] and also by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], and is based on the language contained in the report of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator read that language from the report itself?

Mr. EUSTIS. Yes, sir:

Report made by Mr. HOAR, chairman of the committee, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

I have examined the evidence forwarded by the house of representatives of Ohio.

The investigation was under a resolution directing an inquiry as to the charges that four members of the present Legislature, being also members of the last, were guilty of being induced by corrupt means to vote for Mr. PAYNE.

These charges were not sustained, and the committee so report.

Mr. HOAR. As to the four members.

Mr. EUSTIS.

But the inquiry took a wider range.

Do you want the whole of it read?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. EUSTIS.

There was evidence tending to show—

That Mr. PAYNE's name was not publicly suggested as a candidate for Senator until after the State election;

That it was not very prominently suggested until shortly before his election in January;

That many persons who had been supposed to favor Pendleton voted for PAYNE;

That there was a widespread belief that corrupt means were used to procure the result;

That one member was offered a large sum of money for his vote by another member;

That there were hearsay statements charging corruption as to several others;

That two members of the Legislature received large sums of money about the time of the election, of which they, being called as witnesses, gave no satisfactory account;

That the principal managers of Mr. PAYNE's canvass, namely, Paige, McLean, Huntington, and Oliver H. Payne, did not testify before the committee, but there is not evidence tending to show the bribery of any member unless as above stated;

There is no evidence to connect Mr. PAYNE, the sitting member, with these transactions;

And none tending to show that the result was changed or affected by such means;

Informed that Mr. Little wishes to be heard;

That these persons kept out of State and reach of process.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator find there any statement that I saw nothing for investigation?

Mr. EUSTIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOAR. Where is it?

Mr. EUSTIS. I mean that is the inference. What you state is that you agree on the report made by the investigating committee of the Legislature of Ohio that there was no evidence to sustain the charge of corruption as made.

Mr. HOAR. Does not my honorable friend see the difference between saying that I think there is no evidence there which shows that the result was changed, and reporting and saying that I do not think there ought to be an investigation, when I report at the same time that there is a widespread belief in the State that the result was changed by bribery, that that belief is supported by hearsay testimony in regard to several members, is supported by direct testimony as to one or two offering bribes, and direct testimony as to two others who had got money suddenly and unaccountably, and that there was a desire for a further hearing? The Senator may think on that statement that there should not be an investigation. I never thought so. I merely was stating the result of a part of this case.

Mr. EUSTIS. I say, Mr. President, that the Senator from Massachusetts did come to this conclusion, that so far as there was any direct or legal evidence there was no testimony to sustain the charge made and as presented in the house of representatives of the General Assembly of Ohio. Am I correct in that?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. EUSTIS. Now with reference to these other matters——

Mr. HOAR. Those were charges against four members alone, so far as that question goes.

Mr. EUSTIS. With reference to these other matters which appear as suggestions, those are matters which are not based upon any established facts. They are mere inferences; they are mere indefinite and unsupported inferences. Is it to be established in this Senate that because an individual does not happen to be a candidate for election on a particular day, therefore that is to be held as a ground of investigation on the allegation of corruption? And all such propositions as those are stated by the Senator from Massachusetts. But I say that so far as the direct and legal and substantial evidence is concerned, evidence that goes to the proving of a fact and to the ascertainment of the truth, the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections concurred with the views which are expressed by a majority of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. If my friend will pardon me once more, I will not interrupt him again, for I confess the interruptions are a great tax on his patience as far as they have gone. Suppose I had reported this one fact alone, that there was nothing in that testimony taken before the committee of the Legislature of Ohio except that there was a universal popular belief that their Legislature had been corrupted, and it had stopped there, or had gone on to say that universal belief does not prove the fact. Suppose that had been my report, would that give the Senator the right to say that I came to the conclusion that there ought not to be an investigation? I think the question whether you shall investigate is a very different thing from the question whether you shall vacate a seat, and I think the statement of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] alone, made just now, would be enough to require an investigation by the Senate. The Senator from Louisiana may make an inference, but he has no right to say that because from a certain condition of facts at a certain preliminary stage in the case which he thinks does not warrant an investigation, I came to the conclusion that there ought not to be an investigation, because that is adding his logic to my facts. When he states my conclusion he must add my logic to my facts, and not his.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts, with the permission of the Senator from Louisiana, if he states the fact that that committee instructed the chairman to take upon himself the duty of investigating the report and evidence submitted by the Ohio Legislature and to make his report to the full committee. He did undertake that work; he did examine it; he did report to the committee just what has been read, without any recommendation whatever for a further investigation of the subject. And I ask the question now of the Senator if he did not understand that to be the opinion of the committee, that no further investigation of the matter was to be had, but that Mr. LITTLE, a member of the House, desired to be heard.

Mr. HOAR. I did not understand it to be the opinion of the committee; on the contrary, I do not remember that any member of the committee expressed an opinion on that subject except the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who expressed the opinion that he has stated sometime in the inquiry; whether it was before Mr. LITTLE began his address or afterward I can not recall. But I supposed when I said "This thing shows so and so, here are people who want to be heard," that every member of the committee would keep his judgment in suspense on the question whether there should be an investigation, until that hearing had been had.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As a member of that committee I was not present when the Senator from Massachusetts made his report to the committee. When I came back I was informed that the whole matter had been concluded, that the Senator from Massachusetts had made an investigation and come to the same conclusion that the Ohio Legislature did, that there was nothing in the testimony requiring investigation. That was my information, and I so believed at the time.

Mr. HOAR. My learned friend should remember that nothing happened in that committee after the reading by me of that written document, the original of which I am fortunate enough to have preserved, and which I read to the Senate yesterday, and therefore the informant of the Senator from Delaware made the same mistake in his conclusion that the Senator from Louisiana seems to me to make now. Nobody has a right to take one man's facts and apply his logic to them and say that his own conclusion from the facts is the other man's conclusion. I affirm here again that I never dreamed of such a conclusion as the Senator from Louisiana imputes to me. I made that report as to what that original document meant. Whether that taken alone warranted an investigation I expressed no opinion whatever upon, and waited for the hearing of Mr. LITTLE. But whether that would or would not warrant such investigation I did not say.

When Mr. LITTLE came he brought with him in his hand an offer of abundant additional proof. He brought with him the request for an investigation of each house of that Legislature, which was not before me or before you or the committee. He brought with him the opinions of the Republican editors of the State, which was suppiemented by the opinion of their convention and these extracts from their papers and the opinion of the governor of the State. He brought with him the direct application of the Republican State central committee of the State, and that opinion now supplemented by the statement of the lieutenant-governor of the State read by the Senator from Illinois, and the senior Senator of the State representing it on this floor in the speech he has made here. And the idea of undertaking to fasten a charge of inconsistency upon me out of that report, when this case has been so increased, is not worthy of being considered.

That is my question.

Mr. EUSTIS. Is that the Senator's question?

Mr. HOAR. That is my question.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I am a very young member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, but this occurred to me: Knowing that this proceeding can not be assimilated to any other proceeding known to any condition of things whatever, it certainly is not the case supposed by the Senator from Massachusetts that you can go before a police magistrate and provoke an inquiry, treating it as though it was a criminal process in the case of some colored gentleman who had visited uninvited and at a very unseasonable hour a hen-roost. We are asked to initiate a proceeding to impeach and to nullify the solemn judgment of a State. The State of Ohio has designated and appointed a certain individual, who is the sitting member, to represent that State in this body. He holds the mandate of that State, and we are asked to revoke and cancel that mandate by a judgment which we shall render under the Constitution of the United States, to nullify and to vitiate the most solemn act that can be performed by a State, one of the highest acts of sovereignty; that is, that we, the Senate of the United States, shall sit in judgment upon the appointment made by the State of Ohio, and set aside, vacate, and nullify that judgment. Is that the case of going before a police magistrate for a warrant of process?

What is the answer that we have made—and, in my judgment, very properly made—to the request which has been preferred? I care not whether that request be preferred by an individual; I care not whether that request be preferred by a political opponent; I care not whether that request be preferred by a party friend; I care not whether that request be perferred by the General Assembly of a State; I say it is a proper, an orderly, and a constitutional response for us as United States Senators to make to that request, that if you have charges to make they shall be serious, specific, substantial, provable charges; and that is the answer, as I understand, which the Committee on Privileges and Elections has made.

We can not accept the belief of any one. When the house of representatives of the Legislature of Ohio send a resolution here declaring that it is their belief that such charges can be substantiated and they had examined themselves a part of them which they had already declared sustained a contrary belief and a contrary conviction on their part, I say under our responsibility we have a right and it is our duty to tell the Legislature of the State of Ohio that we can not and we will not accept your belief and your suspicion, but the doors of the Committee on Privileges and Elections have been and are to-day, and will continue to be, wide open to any party who chooses to come there and to show to that committee that serious and substantial charges can be maintained by proper and by legal evidence.

We can not accept the belief of Republican papers, not because they are Republicans, not because they are editors, but because under our responsibilities and under our oaths we can not accept the belief of any one; and it is utterly futile, so far as I am concerned, to ask me to institute an inquiry, an investigation involving the constitutional integrity of this body, involving the right of a State to her constitutional representation in this body, involving the gravest question of sovereignty that can be presented for our judgment and determination—I say that it is useless to ask me to accept the belief of any one, while I am ready and willing to have an investigation when proper charges are made, made responsibly, made seriously, and not for any mere partisan or political purpose.

Mr. SAULSBURY. As a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections I would, if it were an earlier stage of the session, like to express my opinions to the Senate; but in view of the fact that we are approaching the time when we must adjourn, and I am anxious to have a vote on this proposition, notwithstanding the great desire I had felt to take part in the discussion, I shall decline to occupy any part of the time of the Senate. In justice to the sitting member and in justice to this case I should like to express my opinions, but I decline to do so. Having been a member of that committee for twelve years I should have felt it incumbent on me to participate in the debate under other circumstances; but under the circumstances that surround us I deem it proper not to take part in the debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the report of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the adoption of the report of the committee.

Mr. INGALLS. Let the question be stated.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed the question was on the resolution reported by the minority as an amendment. I offer that as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Massachusetts state his amendment again?

Mr. HOAR. I suppose the question is on the resolution offered by the minority. I offer that as an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the majority report, the only one before the Senate that the present occupant of the chair has heard.

Mr. HOAR. I move, as an amendment to the motion to agree to the majority report, the adoption of the resolution offered by the minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to investigate the charges affecting the title to the seat of Hon. HENRY B. PAYNE, and to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and employ a clerk and stenographer, and to sit during the recess of the Senate; and that the expenses of the investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I was entirely willing that a vote should be taken upon the resolution now, for I am not in physical condition to make a speech, and I am aware that the Senate has listened to this discussion as long perhaps as is profitable, and certainly as long as is pleasant on such an oppressive day as this. Beside that, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] made, much more ably than it was possible for me to have done, the greater portion of the speech which I had in mind. I hope I shall not detain the Senate long, but urged by others to do so, I will submit a few words for their consideration; for I differed from perhaps all the members of the committee and, as appeared a few moments ago, very early in the investigation gave my opinion and left my vote with the committee, being called elsewhere.

I hold to the opinion that if a great State by its house of representatives, and by its senate deliberately and solemnly submits a resolution calling upon the United States Senate to investigate the election of a United States Senator, declaring that in their deliberate opinion corrupt means have been used to promote that election, it is not only the right of the United States Senate to proceed with the investigation but it is their duty to. I say if the United States Senate neglects to comply with such a request, that is the body which requires vindication.

Mr. President, this is not a question of vindicating the Senator from Illinois nor the Senator from Colorado nor the Senator from New York.

Mr. TELLER. We do not need any.

Mr. FRYE. As the Senator says, they do not need any; they need none here, they need none elsewhere; and yet in the discussions which have proceeded thus far, there has been great danger lest the Senators lose sight of the real issue in this case in their wish to vindicate these Republican Senators. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] is not on trial, and yet there is great danger that this may be regarded the issue, whether the Senator from Ohio is guilty of a crime or not.

Yet there is no such question pending here, nor is there a question as to whether or not the seat he occupies shall be declared vacant. The only question before the United States Senate to-day is whether or not it is our duty to investigate an election in the State of Ohio of a United States Senator, which has been declared to have been procured corruptly, by the Legislature of that State, by eleven members of the house of representatives familiar with the election in that State, by the Republican central committee, representing at least an equal number of the people of that State, by one-half of the Democratic press and by all the Republican press of that State—whether it is the duty of the United States Senate to so far give ear as to make inquiry whether there has been bribery or not, and to extend that inquiry to the question of whether or not the Senator occupying the seat was himself a participant in it, and whether or not if he was not a participant it so far affected the result that the seat ought to be declared vacant.

There is no resolution here declaring the seat vacant; there is no resolution of expulsion; yet, judging from the arguments which have been urged, it would seem that we are compelled to be bound and tied and repressed by all of the rigorous rules of the criminal law, as we ought to be if either of those questions was pending before the United States Senate.

The question is only, is it the duty of the United States Senate to investigate this matter of bribery which a great people charges against the members of its own Legislature? From the first reading of the evidence submitted by that Legislature down to now I never have had the slightest question of my duty. It has seemed as clear to me as the pathway to the stars, and it does now, notwithstanding the able arguments to which I have listened.

There is another thing asserted here, namely, that there is no testimony in the case submitted by the Legislature of Ohio which ought to induce an inquiry. I join issue. I am willing to agree with the chairman and with the other members of the committee that there is no testimony which proves that the Senator from Ohio has been guilty of bribery, or which even shadows the suspicion that he has been. I admit there is not testimony enough on which to declare that the Senator's seat is vacant; but I claim there is testimony, and abundant testimony, to put the United States Senate upon the inquiry, to make it its sworn duty to institute it and proceed with it rigorously.

Sir, the United States Senate is a powerful and a dignified body, unequaled by any other on the face of this earth; but it is not high enough nor great enough to refuse the demand of the people of the Republic.

The press within the last ten years has abounded in statements that the United States Senate is made up of men of great wealth, the children of overgrown monopoly power. What for? What is the insinuation? What else other than that United States Senators with their wealth have bought their Senatorships and that their presence here is not the result of a freely formed and expressed judgment of the people, but of purchase.

That is the insinuation. It has no convincing power with me, for I know these Senators and appreciate their worth; but what are the people thinking about it? I know, and so do they, that a man of great wealth, who loves money, easily grows into the idea that money is God, omnipotent, omniscient, can do whatever it pleases, and go whithersoever it may. I know that he proceeds upon the hypothesis that it can purchase anything he seeks or anything his heart may wish. I know that he names his price for every man, and declares that he can find the price that is fit.

The United States Senate, when the question comes before it as this has been presented, whether or not the great Standard Oil Company, the greatest monopoly to-day in the United States of America, a power which makes itself felt in every inch of territory in this whole Republic, a power which controls business, railroads, men and things shall also control here; whether or not that great power has put its hand upon a legislative body and undertaken to control, has controlled and has elected a member of the United States Senate, that Senate I say can not afford to sit silent and let not its voice be heard in an inquiry as to the truth of the allegations.

Mr. President, I say there is evidence here ample, abundant. Look at it for a few moments. Here sitting, a year or two ago, was the Senator from Ohio, Mr. Pendleton, a favorite in the United States Senate, a favorite, too, in Ohio, a handsome man in personal appearance, a man always full of courtesy, attractive in manners, with every element of popularity it is possible for the dear Lord to give one of us men. He served his State well; he served his country faithfully. His first term in the Senate was expiring. There was the great State of Ohio with a rule which had been almost an iron rule, declaring to a faithful Senator, "Our party being in power, you shall be returned a second time to the Senate."

The canvass came on in the State. Two men were recognized in it and two only, General Durbin Ward, a brave soldier, a man actively engaged in political affairs; Mr. Pendleton, just leaving his first seat in the Senate with the rule that he should be returned if a faithful Senator, and one of the most popular men in his party in the State. No others. The canvass was fought through, day by day, week by week, and the Senatorial question was the issue. It finally closed, and Mr. Pendleton, according to the testimony here, for an offer to prove by a counsel in the case in the mere matter of preliminary inquiry is as evidence itself, had a clear majority. The offer of proof is that Mr. Pendleton is ready to testify before the committee that when that canvass was over he had a clean, clear majority of all the Democrats elected to that Legislature. There is also the testimony in this book of his private secretary, his business agent, who says that he knows Mr. Pendleton so believed and that he believed it from personal interviews with members-elect and letters from them, which he had received.

Now comes the time for the election, and the Standard Oil Company by its president, I believe he is, or treasurer, Oliver H. Payne, by, another officer, Mr. Thompson, by another, Mr. Huntington, appears on the scene, and takes charge and control of the political machinery of the Democratic party of Ohio, and what is the result? Presto, change! Pendleton, the peerless, 15 votes; HENRY B. PAYNE, 46; and General Ward, 17.

Now, sir, how was that accomplished? Was it a miracle? The Senator from Illinois suggests that the Republicans took a hand in it and helped nominate the Senator from Ohio, that they did it because that Senator was a brave, fearless Union man, standing by the armies of the United States all through the terrible war. The Senator from Illinois forgets that a large majority of the Democrats of the State of Ohio worshiped Vallandigham, the spirit of rebellion in the North, and it did not commend to the Democratic party of Ohio a man for election to a high office that he was a Union man in the rebellion.

Mr. Pendleton had behind him nearly all the recognized leaders of the Democratic party in Ohio, headed by Allen G. Thurman. Colonel Taylor, a leading Democrat and a man familiar with the political affairs of the State, traveling entirely over it during this canvass, James Boyle, another leader, doing the same thing, and Allen O. Myers on pages 118, 119, 51, 53, and 267 of that book of evidence, declare that Mr. PAYNE'S name was not mentioned during this canvass, and Myers, an enemy to Pendleton, says that it was concluded to adopt Mr. PAYNE'S name to beat Pendleton with, after the election was over.

How after the election? Baldwin on page 219, Taylor on page 119, Hall on page 48, declare that when the election was over, Pendleton still had a majority of the representatives and senators elect; that he counted upon that majority; and Hall says that he reported the majority from day to day as Pendleton, until within two days of the caucus.

Mr. TELLER. Who was that?

Mr. FRYE. Hall, a gentleman to whom the Senator referred.

The election occurred on the 15th day of January, 1884, and, as I have said, a wonderful change had come over the spirit of the dream. I say this testimony here satisfies me that when the Standard Oil Company appeared at Columbus money came with it; its recognized power was money. It brought its recognized power and strength with it, and put it into the headquarters of the Democratic party. I call attention to the testimony of Hall on page 49. That testimony has been read here in part. Hall says:

I had a conversation with Mr. Mueller, ex-Lieutenant-Governor Mueller.

He said he "by accident went into Mr. Paige's room," who was the acting attorney and agent for the Standard Oil Company:

He said it looked to him like a banking house. There was a large amount of money in plain view. He said he found out that he was not wanted there and he went out.

That was immediately on the arrival of the company's agents.

Take page 213, L. A. Russell. This has been alluded to also. He says: A man whom he knew told him that he was in Paige's room; that "Mr. Paige went out with one of the men then present;" that—

He sat there by the table, and he said there were canvas bags, and coin bags, and cases for greenbacks littered and scattered around the room and on the table and on the floor.

The Senator from Illinois did not quote this correctly in his speech, when he undertook to raise a laugh in relation to it. He said there was a bag of greenbacks lying on the floor, the greenbacks sticking out of it. The testimony is not that, but that there was a bag lying on the floor; that he saw under it something green that looked like a revenue-stamp; he pushed the bag away, picked up the supposed revenue-stamp and it was a ten or twenty dollar bill; that Mr. Paige came in and he told him what he had, and Paige let him have the ten or twenty dollar bill. Yet I understood from the speech of the Senator from Illinois (he did not mean it probably) that a whole bag of greenbacks was lying there and Paige said, "Oh, well, take the bag of greenbacks."

Mr. LOGAN. I said no such thing.

Mr. FRYE. That is the way I understood it.

Mr. LOGAN. You could not have so understood it. The RECORD shows no such thing. I said he found it on the floor, and Paige told him to keep it, which he did. That is what he said.

Mr. FRYE. That man told this to L. A. Russell, a leading Democratic lawyer in the State of Ohio, who can be had before any investigating committee of the United Senate, and will testify as to the truth of it.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask why was he not called before that committee? I said yesterday that this Mr. Russell who stated this told the committee that if they would allow him to ask from this man his consent to give his name he would do it, and there the committee ceased and asked him no further question. That is the fact, and the evidence shows it. That is what I said, and that is the truth.

Mr. FRYE. I hoped that I would not be obliged to say anything about the committee of the Ohio Legislature, but from the examination I have made of this testimony, I am satisfied it would be utterly impossible to find a more incompetent one. I understand that the chairman of the committee of investigation was a farmer and not a lawyer, probably a thoroughly honest man, but clearly he had not the first principles of examining witnesses. Then, again, I can find twenty persons named in that testimony, who were stated to have known important facts they could have made known to the legislative committee, and they never summoned one of them. They are not on trial here, however.

Judge Little offers to prove that David R. Paige carried $65,000 to Columbus on this occasion. I say that this offer to prove, by the counsel in the case, a member of the other house, respected here and at home, is, so far as this matter now before us is concerned, as if proof.

Mr. LOGAN. Did not Mr. Paige offer to go before the committee and be sworn?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Illinois has stated it. I have never been able to find it.

Mr. LOGAN. He says so himself. I had his statement here yesterday and read it.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator know why they did not take him?

Mr. LOGAN. I do not.

Mr. HOAR. Why did not he come here?

Mr. LOGAN. Now that——

Mr. FRYE. No controversy in my speech, please, with another Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, the Senator from Massachusetts has the habit of saying things sometimes with meaning and sometimes without. This is certainly a thing without meaning. "Why does he not come here?" Who has asked him to come here?

Mr. HOAR. Why did you not ask him to come?

Mr. LOGAN. The committee have made their report. The chairman of the committee asks me why I did not ask him to come. You were chairman; why did not you ask him to come?

Mr. HOAR. That is just what we ask the Senate for authority to do.

Mr. LOGAN. I want these statements to be fair and honest and just. This man offered to go before that committee in Ohio, and they refused to examine him by saying that they would notify him if they wanted him. Now the Senator asks why does he not come here? That is a nice answer for a lawyer to make to a proposition of that kind.

Mr. HOAR. I think it is a better answer than yours.

Mr. LOGAN. It is a very good answer for the Senator from Massachusetts to make, however.

Mr. FRYE. Judge LITTLE and General BUTTERWORTH offered to prove that Oliver H. Payne stated to as respectable a man as there is in Ohio that it had cost him $100,000 to elect his father. Oliver H. Payne was not before the committee, however.

Mr. LOGAN. He was ready to go.

Mr. FRYE. As I was informed, he was not at home to go, and they could not reach him. These gentlemen offered, further, to prove that Mr. Oliver H. Payne drew a check for a large amount of money, payable to Thompson, one of the agents of the Standard Oil Company, and one of the political agents at Columbus, and indorsed by him to Huntington, another of the agents of the Standard Oil Company and political agent, cashed by him, and the money taken by him to Columbus.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. Thompson wrote a letter to that committee, to Mr. Cowgill, stating that he was ready to go before the committee and testify in reference to these charges, and they declined to ask him to come. He was at Cleveland, where they could have got him during the whole session.

Mr. FRYE. That only proves the incompetency of the committee. It does not affect the case here in the slightest degree; it does not affect the duty and responsibility of the United States Senate that that committee neglected its duty and did not call these gentlemen. I have here the affidavit of Mr. Criswell, which I ask the Secretary to read.

The Secretary read as follows:

After the October election of 1885 Mr. McLean came into the Enquirer office, where I was at work, and complained in a rather bitter spirit against the Standard Oil Company not having reciprocated to him in a proper way, and said that they had sent $250 into some county near Cleveland to help them elect the candidate for representative, or senator, I don't know which; and said that when Mr. PAYNE was a candidate for United States Senator he (Mr. John McLean) had spent $100,000 of his own money to effect Mr. PAYNE's election. I remarked that that was a good deal of money for a private citizen to spend for a big corporation like the Standard Oil Company; and Mr. McLean said nevertheless he had spent that much money of his own to elect Mr. PAYNE, and had elected him; and in return for that they had sent $250 into this county.

And prior to the election of Senator PAYNE, and prior to the caucus that nominated him, Allen O. Myers came into my office in the Enquirer office and said that Casper Loewenstein, a representative from Franklin County, had demanded $5,000 to vote for Senator PAYNE. Mr. Myers was apparently very indignant at that fact; that the price was exorbitant, and that he didn't want to pay it—didn't want to pay so much money. I got the impression that they were willing to pay a reasonable sum, but that $5,000 was too much; but he said that Casper Loewenstein had marked up the price, knowing they had to have his vote. But he said before he would pay $5,000 for him he would have to see Mr. McLean; and he left the office, I suppose, with the intention of seeing Mr. McLean about it.

When I suggested to Mr. McLean that it was a big amount of money to pay for another man he said that it cost a great deal of money to get these representatives and senators to vote for Mr. PAYNE and they had to be bought. It took money and a good deal of it to satisfy them.

And he (Mr. McLean) has frequently told me that he would defeat Senator Pendleton's election, no matter what it cost him. He told me that on a number of occasions.

Q. You are willing to make oath to these matters before the committee?
A. Oh, yes; entirely so.
Q. Do you object to putting that in the form of an affidavit?
A. Not at all.

He (Mr. McLean) appeared to be very much in earnest when he talked about spending this $100,000.

In addition I wanted to say that W. P. Thompson, who is supposed to be an officer of the Standard Oil Company, had been in consultation with Mr. McLean at the Enquirer office prior to the caucus which nominated Senator PAYNE. I would like to be positive about one occasion. I remember very well about the fact of his having been there. He was introduced to me by Mr. McLean, and sat in the office talking with me waiting until Mr. McLean had time to talk privately with him.

R. W. CRISWELL.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
City of Washington, ss:

R. W. Criswell, being sworn, says that the foregoing statement contained on pages 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5, to which his name is subscribed, is a true one. He further states that he made, in substance, the same statement at Cincinnati, Ohio, some ten days or two weeks ago to Harry R. Probasco, affiant being at the time an editorial writer on the Cincinnati Enquirer. Affiant further states that when he saw so much corruption in the Cincinnati elections and heard so much about it in Senator PAYNE's election, he felt that it was his duty as a citizen to make this statement.

R. W. CRISWELL.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 17th day of June, A. D. 1886.
[SEAL.] THOS. J. MYERS, Notary Public.

Mr. FRYE. Enough certainly, Mr. President, to establish a very profound suspicion that there was money there to be used in that election. Was it used?

Mr. LOGAN. Who is this man?

Mr. FRYE. He was a leading writer on the Enquirer, of which Mr. McLean, I believe, is the proprietor, and I understand an entirely respectable gentleman and a Democrat.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not asking anything about that. I only ask who he is. He is a writer now, is he?

Mr. FRYE. He was discharged after this Payne investigation.

Mr. LOGAN. You mean before?

Mr. FRYE. No, sir; I do not; I mean after it; exactly what I say.

Mr. LOGAN. Do you not know that McLean wrote a letter to that committee and offered to go there and testify to anything they wanted to ask him?

Mr. FRYE. For Heaven's sake, what is the use to keep thrusting that committee's dereliction of duty into my face? They are not on trial here.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state to the Senator why. It is because upon their testimony we are asked here as Senators to act, and if they have failed that is not my business nor is it his. We are not asked as Senators to substitute for their dereliction our action, but we are asked to act upon their action. That is the reason why I say so. I say to the Senator that Mr. McLean (and I know nothing about the person who has made this affidavit, I probably might say something about it but I do not desire to do so) stated in a letter addressed to Mr. Cowgill, the chairman of the committee, that he would be at Cincinnati or Columbus at a certain time. He said he would go before the committee if they desired him to do so and answer any question that they might ask him, and they declined to have Mr. McLean by saying to him that if they wanted him they would let him know, and they never let him know. Now then——

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. LOGAN. I say this——

Mr. FRYE. I think this is going too far.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine decline to yield further to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FRYE. I am standing right in the way of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], and I am ashamed of myself for doing it.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to say this: This evidence does not prove that Mr. McLean spent a dollar. If Mr. McLean expended money Mr. McLean can say so. That committee declined to ask Mr. McLean to appear before them. I say that any collateral evidence with reference to what he may have said, or any remarks he may have made to some outsider is not such evidence as the committee or the Senate could be guided by for the purpose of making this investigation when he himself offered to go before the committee of the Legislature and testify fully in reference to his conduct in connection with the matter.

Mr. FRYE. I say, on the contrary, it is the solemn duty of the United States Senate to see to it that Oliver H. Payne, and Mr. McLean, and Thompson, and Huntington, and Paige, and every other agent, if there are others, of the Standard Oil Company shall come before a committee of the United States Senate and under oath tell whether or not they purchased the seat of a United States Senator.

Mr. LOGAN. In response to that, if the Senator will allow me, I just want to make one remark, and then I will retire so that he can have the rest of the evening to himself. Inasmuch as the Senate has no jurisdiction over Mr. McLean, if Mr. McLean corrupted men it is the duty of the State of Ohio through their grand juries to indict him and prosecute him, and we can not do it. When the Senator makes that statement and charge he goes outside of the legal proposition, because it is the duty of Ohio to indict, prosecute, and convict Mr. McLean if he is guilty of the charge, for we have no jurisdiction whatever over him.

Mr. FRYE. Whether Ohio performs her duty or not is no question for the United States Senate. The United States Senate has no power under law to convict criminals for the benefit of the State of Ohio, but it has power and a duty and a responsibility to bring these men before a committee here and let them tell whether they have disgraced this body in which we sit and imposed upon it a Senator by bribery. That is a question in which every man and woman in the United States of America has a direct interest.

Now, Mr. President, did they use the money after they brought it to Columbus? I call attention to this testimony—and I am obliged to, because it has been somewhat disguised in the progress of the debate—I call attention to the testimony of Mr. Kahle, page 67, a member of the Legislature, a man of high character. I read but a little:

Q. Did Senator Ramey at any time make to you what you regarded at the time as a corrupt proposition?
A. He did.
Q. Now, that is definite and distinct. Can you tell the nature of that proposition?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Please do so.
A. He offered me $5,000 for my support.
Q. He told you he would obtain for you $5,000?
A. He told me he would stick it down in my pants pocket.
Mr. TOMPKINS. Will you please state where this conversation occurred?
A. If I am not mistaken it was on the third floor of the Neil House, in Mr. Ramey's room.
Q. When was it, in reference to the caucus that nominated a United States Senator?
A. The night after the caucus.

The argument here and in the minority report of this committee is that this statement is absurd and not entitled to belief because the word "after" the caucus is used, and yet on inquiry of stenographers I find that in stenography the signs for the word "after" and the word "of" are almost exactly alike, and I find that was the mistake here, because I turn to the next page of the testimony of the same witness and he says:

Q. Did you ever have any subsequent conversation with Ramey about this transaction after the election was over?
A. Once.
Q. When and what was that conversation?
A. He asked me if I had told anybody that he offered me $5,000.
Q. When was that?
A. Well, that must have been within a month after, I can not say exactly, but it must have been within a month or so after the election of Mr. PAYNE.
Q. Did he ever say anything about his getting anything?
A. He talked about it.
Q. What did he say?
A. He said that he had a standing offer of $10,000 for his vote and mine.
Q. When was it he said that to you?
A. He told me that—now I am not certain whether he told me that on Saturday night or whether it was the evening before the caucus.
Q. Well, you can not just fix the time of the conversation in which he told you that there was $10,000 in it for your vote and his?
A. I think it was in the afternoon or toward the evening before the caucus of the senate.

Mr. LOGAN. Did he take it?

Mr. FRYE. No, he did not; he voted for Pendleton.

Mr. LOGAN. What did Mr. Ramey swear?

Mr. FRYE. I do not care what Mr. Ramey swore. Perjury just as logically follows corruption and bribery as death follows life. The man who offers the bribe will commit perjury when cornered. The man who takes the bribe will commit perjury if compelled.

Considerable discussion has arisen about the testimony of Elmer White. I am not going to read all that testimony. I have been over it. I call the attention of anybody who has the curiosity to read it to the testimony of K. V. Haymaker, page 230; Edward Squires, page 223; S. P. Moon, page 244; Lyman White, page 247; and Elmer White, page 254. Notwithstanding the Senator from Colorado joins issue with me, I say that the testimony of these men satisfies me beyond any reasonable doubt that Elmer White was bribed to vote for Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. TELLER. That is a mere matter of judgment, then.

Mr. FRYE. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. It did not satisfy me that way.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator differed from me, I know. I put my statement as against his, and I have examined the testimony. Elmer White's father lived with him, before this election, in a rented house in Defiance. After this election they lived no longer in a rented house. His father bought one, or somebody else did for him, and they lived together in the new house. Elmer White put $1,800 cash into the new house, the title being in his father, paid off mortgages, and all that sort of thing. They were called before the committee and Elmer White——

Mr. TELLER. I beg to correct the Senator. It was not $1,800; it was $1,600. It is not very important, but it shows that the Senator has not read the testimony with that critical care that he would have the Senate believe.

Mr. FRYE. In stating the testimony in this way, if I get even within $200 of it, it is doing better than some Senators who have preceded me.

Mr. TELLER. Besides I should like to call attention to the fact that it appeared by other evidence than that of Lyman White or his son Elmer that Mr. White had been for more than a year before that talking of buying property in that town and looking for property.

Mr. FRYE. Yes, and he did not have the money with which to buy.

Mr. TELLER. For a year before the election.

Mr. FRYE. He bought it just as soon as he got the money. He did not wait long after the election.

Now, Elmer White denies. Of course Elmer White denies. A man who would receive a bribe and not commit perjury if asked about it would be a fool. His father, on the contrary, stands up for his rights like a man, and to the questions of the committee, he says, "I will not tell you where I got my money; it is none of your business." Well, perhaps it was not, but under the circumstances it creates a reasonable suspicion in my mind that he did not wish to tell. It seems to me an honest man would have been perfectly willing to tell where he got his money.

I am not proposing to inflict upon you all, this testimony, but I wish especially to call your attention to that in relation to Dr. Fierce, because the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] discussed his case with, it seems to me, more ingenuity than correctness.

Mr. Gunning, a prominent man, a friend of Pendleton, who had assisted in the election of Fierce, hearing that he was faltering by the way, had an interview with him, in which this occurred:

Before I could follow the note Dr. Fierce came in and sat down, and when my client went away he turned to me and made this statement. He says, "Mr. Gunning, I find that I am under the necessity of voting for Mr. PAYNE. I find that the universal sentiment of our citizens in Vinton County—the Democratic citizens—is for Mr. PAYNE. * * * The only thing that I regret is that I have not the means of paying back to Mr. Pendleton his $250 which I got of him." This was the first intimation which I had that he had received through the agency of my letter to Mr. Pendleton any money. Of course my conversation with him for a little while was somewhat powderish.

Q. We would like to have it, Mr. Gunning, if you please.

A. Oh, Lord!

Q. We would like to know what you said to him about the sentiments of his constituents.

A. I can tell you that. I told him that he knew that he was telling an unmitigated—and I am sorry now; but I told him, "a God-damned lie." That is what I told him.

Q. Didn't you challenge him to produce in Vinton County a man of any prominence that was in favor of Mr. PAYNE? There were several Vinton County men in the city at the time, weren't there; and didn't you challenge him to produce a Vinton County man that was for Mr. PAYNE?

A. I told him he couldn't do it. I dared him to point out a man who favored Mr. PAYNE. * * *

Q. Did he name any Vinton County man, or any prominent Democrat from Vinton County, that was favorable to Mr. PAYNE?

A. No, sir.

Q. He named none at all?

A. No, sir; he didn't name any one. My question was such that I would not like to have it down on paper. It was very violent language. * * * When he came to me in October he said that he was poor, and couldn't raise any money. I believe he said he had raised some $300 or $400, and spent it all. I have no personal knowledge. I visited the town of Wilkesville (the home of Dr. Fierce) occasionally, having a married daughter there, and I am well acquainted with the inhabitants of the village, and I knew of his property. He was a poor man—quite a poor man.

Q. (P. 32.) Well, I think it is competent for you to state, Mr. Gunning, what those conclusions were which you reached.

A. I will answer your question in this way: In my remarks to Dr. Fierce on the occasion of his telling me he would have to vote for Mr. PAYNE, among other things I said to him that he was bought with 30 pieces of silver; that he was a corrupt scoundrel, and so on, for quantity; and from circumstances which have come to my notice since, I am convinced that I absolutely, whether through passion, or by accident, or what, told about the truth.

Q. When you made these statements to Dr. Fierce, what reply did he make?

A. He became exceedingly sick, white as a sheet, and answered not. I had to take care of him and send him away, and he went away and laid in bed for two days. He made no reply.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the case of Mooney and Roche, because that has been considerably debated. Vernon E. Hanna, a man "sixty-six years old, soliciting for newspapers, for the Columbus Record and Market Reporter, resides in the city of Columbus." He goes on to state that he was at a hotel at the time of this caucus, that he roomed near Mooney and Roche; that they occupied the same room; that he, at the request of the landlord, sat up on the night of the caucus to let them in; that they came in about 4 o'clock in the morning; that he heard them discussing and quarreling over the question of money, about $50 that one had received more than the other; that one had received $350 and the other one only $300; that he opened the door at 4 o'clock and let them in. I am aware that the Senator from Colorado says that Mr. Mooney went before the committee and testified that there was no truth in that. The Senator said he testified positively he did not go to this house to board but he went somewhere else. The witness says he thinks he did not go to this house until the 18th. He says, "I believe I did not go to the house until the 18th. He is only certain about one thing, and that was that be said not a word about money.

Mr. TELLER. No; he is certain that he was not there the night of the caucus, and his room-mate, Mr. Harbaugh, swears that he was not there the night of the caucus.

Mr. FRYE. But this gentleman swears that Mooney and Roche were there together and slept in the same room and he let them in. Now, on page 184 comes the landlord of the hotel, James Finley Brown, and he corroborates this man in his statement that Mooney and Roche were living at his house at that time, and he says he remembers the night of the caucus that this man sat up to let them in; that the man told him in the morning that he did let them in, and that it was 4 o'clock before he did it.

I wish to call attention to the testimony of Donavin, who never was alleged to be a drunkard until he made these charges. He was always regarded as a highly respectable Democrat. He was clerk of the Democratic Legislature for a number of years and was editor of the Columbus Democratic paper, the only one I think there is there, and I do not know but what he is now. Donavin says:

Senator Elliot informed me that in conversation with Mr. Cable and another senator that Mr. Cable acknowledged that he had received $5,000 for his vote.

Again:

W. H. McLyman voted for you for $2,500 and future prospects.

Mr. TELLER. That is Donavin's statement in the press.

Mr. LOGAN. That is not his sworn testimony. He did not give that in his testimony, for it is not his testimony.

Mr. FRYE. It is testimony I am reading.

Mr. LOGAN. We will see.

Mr. FRYE. We will see.

Q. When was it and where that Mr. Elliott informed you of this confession of Mr. Cable?

A. In the city of Washington, some time in the month of December. I guess it was just before the holidays, or in the holidays.

How now?

Q. In what year?

A. The year just passed, 1885.

Q. You say here that "W. H. McLyman voted for you for $2,500 and future prospects."

A. I got that information from two parties; one party is Michael Harriman, of Toledo.

Now, the committee never summoned Michael Harriman, of Toledo, before it, and he never was there and testified.

The other gentleman's name I will give you and you can summon him as a witness. He told me he was purchased, and it could be proved that he was. He did not name the amount though.

* * * * * * *

You say, then, colonel, that "O. B. Ramey voted for you for $3,000 in hand paid." What is your information concerning that?

A. My information in regard to that is the same as in regard to Mr. McLyman.

Q. It came through the same source?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say "C. S. Welsh is placed at $2,000." What is your authority for making that statement, that he is placed at $2,000?

A. My authority for making that statement (the words "is placed," I guess I put in there myself. It was $2,000, the information came to me) came from two sources. One from Dan Grosvenor, and the sum was fixed by W. A. Taylor.

Now, Dan Grosvenor was not before that committee.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. Taylor was, and denied it.

Mr. FRYE. Denied that he fixed the sum?

Mr. TELLER. Yes; and denied that he had any knowledge of the matter at all.

Mr. FRYE. Dan Grosvenor was not there.

Mr. TELLER. No; he was not. I do not know where he was. His brother was there and testified about Welsh.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Secretary to read the testimony of James Boyle, an honest man, a newspaper reporter, where I have marked it.

Mr. TELLER. On what page?

Mr. FRYE. Page 58.

The Secretary read as follows:

Q. (By Chairman COWGILL.) Give us any information you have bearing on this inquiry, where you obtained it, and from whom.

A. Mr. Norton, correspondent of the Cleveland press, told me at the door of the Neil House, I think, on the occasion of the meeting of the Republican State central committee to fix the place for holding the last Republican State convention, that, I understood him to say, a partner of Mr. FORAN (Congressman FORAN, of Cleveland), who was I think he said a Republican, had told him a good story on Carron, I think that is his name, of Cleveland. I then remembered that I had heard something about Carron, and asked him for particulars. I recollected that Carron was here during the Senatorial fight, and was very active in behalf of Mr. PAYNE; and I was rather astonished at his taking such an interest, as he was a Republican. The story was this as told to me by Mr. Norton, and as corroborating what I had heard in a kind of a floating way. At the meeting of the Payne managers attention was drawn to the vociferousness of one member of the Legislature, who was working in behalf of Pendleton; and it was stated that he was such a sharp talker and worker that it was necessary to silence him; that Mr. Carron was selected as the man to perform this office; that he was given a thousand dollars to hand to this member. At a later meeting of the PAYNE managers, complaint was made that this Pendletonian still raged, and it was remarked that it was curious that he remained a Pendletonian in spite of the fact that he had got a thousand dollars. A member of the cabal, if you may call it so, or one of the gentlemen interested in Mr. PAYNE's election, went down to the lobby of the Neil House and secured this mossback and induced him to go down to the room of the Payne managers. He was there in the presence of Mr. Carron asked the straight question whether he had not received a thousand dollars. He declared he had not received a cent. Mr. Carron insisted that he had given him a thousand dollars to quit booming Pendleton. The two gentlemen quarreled and a scene occurred. To fix matters up, one of the Payne managers there and then gave this gentleman a thousand dollars. And it is still an open question (I am giving the story as told to me) whether Mr. Carron kept the thousand dollars and lied, or whether the Pendletonian lied. Shortly after this conversation with Mr. Norton, which, to the best of my recollection, was on that occasion when I was up in Columbus as political correspondent and as having some interest in the matter to be decided by the committee, I met Mr. Eck Heisley who saluted me, and, without any attempt on my part to draw him out, in most bitter and extravagant language, denounced the election of H. B. PAYNE as corrupt, and asked me whether I recollected a fight or row he had in the lobby of the Neil House with Senator Williams on that very question. I followed the conversation, and stated that I had written a pretty rich thing within the last two weeks about a townsman of his, a Republican, Senator Carron. He says: "Oh, yes; you mean that thousand-dollar story." "Well," he says, "it is true." He took such an interest in the matter because it had never been published. I believe in my publication I stated that this story had never been published, although I had this information and had had for a long time, but I had no recollection of seeing it in print. Mr. Heisley urged me to send him a paper containing the account of it. He said every word of it was true. He took position against Mr. Carron in the matter.

Mr. FRYE. I wish the Secretary to read further what is marked at the bottom of page 57, showing the method which these agencies of the Standard Oil Company adopted in order to detect whether or not a man who was purchased, paid the price by his vote.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Q. To further the PAYNE movement?

A. Yes, sir. The story in relation to which I had the memoranda was that Senator Elliott, after being elected as a Ward man, had been induced to promise to vote for Mr. PAYNE, but that the parties handling the money would not pay him. They did not pay, so it said, a number of other gentlemen, until after the vote in caucus; that Senator Elliott was to stand outside of the Neil House and a man was to come up to him and slip money into his hand if he voted for PAYNE; that he stood out there, but did not get any money. When he asked the parties about the money he was told that he did not vote for PAYNE but voted for Ward. There was a controversy over it in which Allen O. Myers cut quite a figure as to who Senator Elliott voted for. My information was that the means by which it was discovered that Senator Elliott did not vote for PAYNE were these: Certain members being doubtful, that is, they had been induced to promise to vote for PAYNE, but they fearing [the PAYNE managers] that they would go back on them, ballots had been handed about prepared; that certain lines were drawn on these ballots. Then the end of the ballot prepared, containing a portion of these lines, were saved and the name of the suspected member to whom the ballot had been handed written on the torn off portion and preserved. My information was that in the rough the ballot was in this form: [Referring to a diagram.] It was a fact, I believe, generally stated in the press at the time, and I believe is a fact, that as soon as the ballots were cast they were taken possession of by a member of the PAYNE adherents, generally stated to have been Mr. Myers, and by him sent over to the Neil House, and then the torn off edge was compared with the ballots.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator ought not to object if I should ask to read a word or two from Mr. Elliott's statement. If he will not object I should like to do it. It is the same Elliott of whom he speaks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TELLER. The question is:

I believe you stated that you voted for Durbin Ward?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you vote in the caucus openly or secretly?

A. I held up my ballot that way [indicating] and says, "Here's a vote for Ward if he never gets another!" and I put it in the hat.

There is a witness who testifies that this man told him so, and makes it as a big thing that he had voted for Ward.

Mr. FRYE. Here is a Democratic member from Hocking County, Col. Seth Weldy, I understand one of the leading men, who states he was there and a part of this concern; that he saw a great deal, and that he made up his mind that money was used. The question was asked him.

Q. While it is not evidence in the strict sense, yet I am going to ask you this question: Without absolute knowledge of the fact, did you believe that money was used to influence certain things of which we have been speaking, so as to amount to a conviction in your mind that such was the case?

A. Well, that would not be strictly testimony, as I said here. I suppose that the committee ought to confine its questions, and the answers of the witness, I suppose, ought to be confined, before a committee of this kind, to the rules which govern testimony in courts, probably.

Q. We understand that, colonel.

A. And my answer, whether in the negative or affirmative, would not assist any in the investigation here.

Q. In other words, you would rather not answer that question?

A. Well, I haven't much objection to answering it. I have repeatedly said, and I say now, that in my opinion there was money used.

Q. Yes, we have understood, colonel, that you have repeatedly said so, in your own office, in your own town, on the streets of Columbus, to newspaper men and to other persons, and that you have frequently and repeatedly expressed that opinion and conviction, so I simply wanted you to reaffirm that conviction before this committee.

Q. (By Mr. LE BLOND.) Now, I would ask you if that opinion and conviction is not based wholly upon newspaper report and common conversations held at the time of the contest?

A. No, sir.

Q. Isn't it based on common report?

A. No, sir.

Q. Without any direct knowledge of the facts whatever, but it is simply based upon rumors?

A. It is based not upon rumors nor upon newspaper statements or charges. It is based upon my own judgment of the circumstances.

He was present all the time.

Mr. TELLER. Had you not better read another sentence?

Mr. FRYE. No; I do not care to do so.

Mr. TELLER. Where he says he has no knowledge of any bribery?

Mr. FRYE. Very well. He says further:

A. Understand me, I have no knowledge of any specific acts or facts concerning any member or senator.

Q. (By Chairman COWGILL.) But the conviction remains with you, you say, colonel, that improper methods were employed in the Senatorial contest of 1883-'84?

A. Well, what I would call improper methods would be using money.

Q. Yes, that is what we mean.

A. I am opposed to all matters of that kind, and I introduced a bill, &c.

Is there anything more the Senator wants me to read?

Mr. TELLER. No, that will do.

Mr. FRYE. O. T. Gunning, a leading lawyer of Columbus, a Democratic lawyer, testifies on page 35:

Q. You have no other way of accounting for these sudden conversions from the adherents of Pendleton to the adherents of PAYNE except upon that presumption?

A. I just have my belief about that matter from the circumstances. While it is very probable in my mind that money was used somewhere, but I have never yet believed or thought that at the time it was used, however, it might have come to PAYNE's knowledge afterward, that he knew anything about it at the time. At the time it was used I don't think that Mr. PAYNE took any part in the matter, but I thought it was entirely from another source, which, in looking over the whole field, every one ought to see. That is simply a belief that I have had all along; but whether he was not afterward aware of it, and is aware of it now, why, as a lawyer, I should say the circumstances are rather shaky upon that point, but at the time I don't think he knew it.

Q. (By Mr. TOMPKINS.) Were you of the opinion at the time that money was used to secure votes for Mr. PAYNE?

A. Yes, sir; I am of that opinion.

Q. And were you at that time?

A. I was. It was based on these very sudden conversions. The case that I have related to you is sufficient to fix in any lawyer's mind the opinion that there was something more than simply moral persuasion.

Q. It was a common report on the streets, in the hotel lobbies, and elsewhere that money was being used to secure Senatorial votes?

A. Yes, sir. There was a common rumor to that effect, but we paid but little attention to that, because it could very easily be started by the opposite party; there was no trouble about that; that might be started and permeate every circle and line of society.

Q. (By Mr. LE BLOND.) That is a very common occurrence in politics, isn't it?

A. Yes, sir; a very common occurrence in politics.

Q. (By Chairman COWGILL.) But as I understand you it was not rumor that operated upon your mind?

A. No, sir; not at all. It was certain facts that came to my mind, and the overwhelming circumstance was that of the personal knowledge I had of Dr. Fierce's action in the matter.

Q. (By Mr. LE BLOND.) Then I understand you that the case of Dr. Fierce was the principal fact that entered into your mind in arriving at a conclusion in the matter?

A. That was the principal fact, but supplemented, as a matter of course, by similar results in other cases, in which I had no immediate connection, like conversion of other men.

There is the case of L. R. Bruner, which has been presented by the chairman of the committee, and by the Senator from Colorado; there are the additional cases on page 37 of this report submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts, three more cases given by the gentlemen from the House of Representatives, Mr. BUTTERWORTH and Mr. LITTLE, making in all, as asserted by the chairman of the committee [Mr. HOAR], twenty-one cases of alleged bribery. I wish also to call attention to the case about which the Senator from Illinois made a good deal of amusement for the galleries—the case of "Blank," "Blank," "Blank." I am happy to inform the Senator from Illinois that I am prepared to supply the blanks, so that the amusement will be over.

Mr. LOGAN. Why was it not supplied to the committee?

Mr. FRYE. I send to the desk to be read a letter.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CHAS. T. CLARK, Esq.,
Attorney, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR CAPTAIN: As the Cowgill committee is now investigating the Payne Senatorial election I thought I would suggest to you "a pointer."

A few days after the caucus I had an interview with Hon. L. C. Cole, representative from Stark, and who, by the way, is an excellent gentleman, barring his politics.

Our representative, Dr. C. C. Stouffer, had been elected as a Pendleton man, and he agreed with McSweeney, Zimmerman, and others to support Pendleton. A few days before the caucus it was whispered that "Stouffer had been seen" and that he would vote for PAYNE. A telegram was at once sent from here to Stouffer by the leading Democrats warning him against such a course, and Zimmerman and others at once went to Columbus and saw Stouffer. He hooted at the idea that he would vote for PAYNE, and Zimmerman assured Pendleton that Stouffer would support him, and Zimmerman then came home feeling confident that Stouffer would not disappoint him.

All this I got from Zimmerman at the time. At the interviews between Stouffer and John Zimmerman Mr. Cole was present as the friend of Pendleton.

Now, Cole informed me that after this he kept an eye on Stouffer, and that S. up to within an hour of the caucus said he would support Pendleton.

As the hour of meeting approached Cole noticed that Stouffer was not present, and he went to Stouffer's room at the hotel to bring him over.

He there found him in company with one of the men who was handling the Payne boodle, and was much embarrassed at Cole's appearance, but he went to the caucus with Cole, and on the way again asserted his allegiance to Pendleton. If I remember correctly, Cole said that they had printed ballots for both candidates and that he (Cole) gave S. a Pendleton ticket, but when the vote was taken Cole observed that S. wrote something on a piece of legal cap and then tore it off. He afterward discovered that S. put in the hat the same piece of paper, and then C. quietly went to Stouffer's desk and tore off a piece of the legal cap large enough to include the small piece torn off by S. I think C. was one of the tellers. At any rate he got the ballot which fitted the piece of legal cap and which S. had voted, and found that PAYNE's name was on the ballot.

The next week our Wayne County Democrat charged Stouffer with having betrayed his friends, &c. Last fall Stouffer announced his name as a candidate for renomination, but the leading Pendleton men of the party made a "Coal Oil" attack on him and he withdrew.

Mr. Cole said to me that Stouffer had been bought.

Whilst I don't care to be known in this matter, yet you may use this if it will aid the committee. I think John Zimmerman ought to be subpœnaed.

Very truly,

JAMES B. TAYLOR.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think it is fair for the Senator to put in these things that have not been before the committee, without at least allowing Mr. Cole to be heard, who was before the Ohio committee. Mr. Cole said before that committee:

I won't say, in my judgment, there were any improper influences brought to bear in the sense of corrupting members. I want to be distinctly understood now as disclaiming any reflection upon any member being improperly influenced. I say this, that I doubt whether or not the members were corrupted, in the sense of using money corruptly to induce them to vote for Mr. PAYNE, but I say that sentiment was manufactured by the bringing in of great delegations from every part of the State in the interest of Mr. PAYNE, and were kept here to work up sentiment for him. I think their expenses were paid and they were brought here by the corporations of the State.

This is the same witness of whom I spoke, who said he found it difficult himself to keep from being a PAYNE man.

Mr. FRYE. I see he did. Mr. President, I have been over the testimony which the Legislature sent to us and about which it has been asserted over and over again here, that there was no testimony, that the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the committee, declared there was no testimony. He made no such declaration; there has been no such declaration on the part of either of the members of the minority; on the contrary, both have declared from the beginning that there was testimony enough to justify an investigation. I have been over it, grouped it here so that it might be seen at a glance what there was before that legislative committee, which, while it perhaps would not properly convict those members, would clearly justify, and not only justify but compel, an investigation on the part of the United States Senate into the seat occupied by the Senator from Ohio and into the question of corruption. But the testimony in this case was not limited to that report. There were other cases presented in the report of the committee; there were seven more cases, which were read by the Senator from Ohio in his speech, presented, after this report was made, by the Representatives of the State of Ohio from the other House; and I will not occupy the attention of the Senate further with them.

Now, Mr. President, there is another thing I will call the attention of Senators to. I do not think public opinion is to be disregarded. I do not believe that a Senate can disregard it, or any man despise it. I believe that public opinion, as a rule, is an opinion which is entitled to the greatest weight, and ordinarily—not always—is entirely justified by the evidence on which it is founded. Mr. President, the press largely represents public opinion, oftener represents it, than creates it. I propose to read some of these extracts, which gentlemen do not like, from Democratic newspapers. I am going to do it even at the risk——

Mr. TELLER. I will not allow the Senator to say I do not like them. Everybody can see how unfair it is to read them and say that. I am quite willing the Senator may proceed to read them.

Mr. FRYE. I said some "gentlemen;" I did not say the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. I will claim the right whenever the Senator does it to call attention to the balance of the testimony.

Mr. LOGAN. What gentleman does the Senator from Maine allude to?

Mr. FRYE. That is not necessary for me to say.

Mr. LOGAN. I want to know if you allude to me?

Mr. FRYE. No; because the Senator made a speech——

Mr. LOGAN. If you did, I only say I have never objected to reading any extracts from newspapers, Democratic or Republican.

Mr. FRYE. ——during which he read a heap of them, which I would not have read under any circumstances.

Mr. LOGAN. I read those on your side of the case—articles written for the purpose of destroying as good Republicans as you are.

Mr. FRYE. I will read from the Clinton County Democrat, Wilmington, Clinton County, January 19, 1884, a Democratic paper:

The nomination of Mr. PAYNE of itself would signify no harm to the party; but his nomination is what every well-thinking mind can not but admit—the fruits of corrupt methods. * * * As a Democrat we repudiate the corrupt methods of, what is clear to every decent mind, a purchased nomination.

Democratic authority.

Investigation and purification is what is now wanted.

Again, on January 18, 1884, this Democratic paper says:

The Cleveland Plaindealer says "Mr. PAYNE succeeded because he had the most votes." The crying shame is the manner in which the most votes were obtained. That's what's the matter.

From the Banner, Mount Vernon, Knox County, a Democratic organ, January 10, 1884:

It is painful and humiliating to record the fact, but it is nevertheless true, that a considerable number of members who went to Columbus professing to be the friends of either Pendleton or Ward, by some mysterious influence or agency, were as suddenly converted to PAYNE as Paul was converted to Christianity on his way to Damascus.

Not in the same way, though, I guess.

Had there been an open ballot, as was desired by the friends of Ward and Pendleton, there would no doubt have been a different result; but behind the secret ballot the recreant members took refuge and betrayed their trust. For the man who voted for Mr. PAYNE as a matter of duty and conviction, we have the highest respect. But for the men who sold their votes for money we have no other feeling than loathing and contempt.

For these men there will be a hereafter. An investigation will no doubt take place, and startling revelations be made, &c.

From the Cambridge Jeffersonian, another Democratic paper in Guernsey County, January 17, 1884:

Mr. PAYNE could not have been made Senator from Ohio with, as is the case, nine-tenths of the Democratic voters of the State against his selection, except by the use of corrupting influence to an extent heretofore unknown in the politics of the State, and which went to such dirty depths as to astound and shock the sentiment of justice which prevails among all honest men.

Again:

The Democracy of Ohio has until now been free from the domination of bribing cash; but when it fell a prey to the mercenaries, it fell to a depth which would degrade the worst Republican coterie of bribe-givers and bribe-takers which ever invaded the capital of any State. This is written in sorrow.

Now, from the Greenville Democrat, in Darke County, another Democratic paper, January 16, 1884:

The defeat of Pendleton * * * will be and remain a loathing stigma upon the treacherous political career of the miserable mercenary purchased of the so-called representatives of the true, just, and ever anti-monopoly Democracy of Ohio. There is no excuse, no explanation, or even palliation of the infamy which can be rendered an intelligent public. For base political outrage it is without a parallel in our history.

Again, from the Butler County Democrat, of Hamilton, Butler County, January 17, 1884, a Democratic paper:

It might be hard to prove that the Standard Oil Company used money to elect H. B. PAYNE, but Democrats went out from Columbus to all parts of the State with the firm and honest conviction that it did.

From the Delaware Herald, Delaware County, January 24, 1884, a Democratic paper:

No Democrat who has the future welfare of the party at heart and loves the institutions of his country but feels saddened and heartsick at the result of the Democratic legislative caucus at Columbus Tuesday night of the 8th instant. All the traditionary principles of the party were ignored and its future interests jeopardized by the men chosen by it to represent and uphold its great principles in the legislative halls of the State. These mercenary wretches, who would, like Esau, sell their country for a mess of pottage, and, like Judas, betray their God for money, sacrificed the interests of the party they professed fealty to for a money consideration to a corrupt ring, and thereby prove recreant to the sacred trusts imposed in them and false to their duty and to the interests of their country.

The Van Wert Times, January, 1884, a Democratic paper, said:

And thus has the machinery of an overshadowing, tyrannical, corrupt, and grasping corporation triumphed over the ingenuous, honest counsels of the rank and file of the Democracy of Ohio. The money gods * * * can now score another victory. We do not hold Mr. PAYNE responsible for the evil influences which secured his election.

Again, from the Experiment, Norwalk, Huron County, January 19, 1884, a Democratic paper:

It is Standard Oil that made PAYNE Senator, which, being fairly and liberally interpreted, means money. That tells the whole story.

From the Spirit of Democracy, Woodsfield, Monroe County, January 15, 1884:

We were present at the Senatorial contest in Columbus last week.

* * * * * * *

The Standard Oil combination made use of every known means to obtain votes for their candidate. They feared the people, and through a packed caucus committee fixed the nominating caucus for Tuesday evening, the 8th instant. They obtained more than enough to nominate on the first ballot. How they obtained them is no secret, and the methods and means employed are a disgrace and a stigma upon the fair fame of the Democracy of Ohio.

Again, from the Troy Democrat, Miami County, January 1884:

The Democratic party will gain nothing in this event. In the election of PAYNE they sacrifice much that Pendleton achieved for his party, by placing it upon a platform of justice to every man; securing to every son of America equal rights to hold an office, based on qualification. It is a war of monopoly against honest government—the Standard Oil Company, worth its untold millions, against the friend of the people.

So I might go on reading. I will read only one or two more. I now read from the Catholic Universe, Cleveland, Cuyahoga County, January 18, 1884:

This Columbus debauch is no surprise to us. For years we have seen the evil trail of these monopolies and corporations in Cleveland, dictating our Democratic local politics while preparing to grasp the State organization, and in the end to clutch at the very throat of the Democratic party in its "national" convention. We have witnessed how the money power wielded lash and bribe till an independent, manful Democratic politician of prominence in this city is a rarer bird than a white crow, or a swallow in winter.

So we are not surprised that Senator Williams, of this city, who, when nominated, was a declared free-trader and friend of Durbin Ward—so it has been publicly stated—was converted as suddenly as Saul of Tarsus, and donned the Standard Oil collar as gracefully as Mayor Farley has ever worn it.

I next read from the Cincinnati News-Journal, Hamilton County, Ohio, January 9, 1884, as follows:

Bad men, corrupt men, men who, by means of money or ability to use the bummer element for their own ends, have acquired brief standing, place, and power; men who, stripped of money, would be the tag end of the lowest element in society, have made it necessary to expose their foul doings. In a few days they will be complaining bitterly of exposure, and denouncing those who have exposed their rascality for disgracing the Democratic party. The public fortunately no longer doubts.

Again I quote from the same paper:

The work is done, and the sale is complete. Bosses and monopolies and rings for the control of political patronage have won a complete victory in a Legislature elected by the people struggling against bosses, monopolies, and spoils rings. They have not yet gained a victory over the unpurchasable Democratic people of Ohio. Money has been shamefully used to buy a seat in the Senate by men professing to be of the party which opposes the use of money in politics.

From the Columbus Times, Franklin County, January 19, 1884, I read:

Thirty pieces of silver bought Judas Iscariot, the arch-traitor. But it cost the Standard Oil-McLean faction a much larger bundle to subvert the will of the people.

Report of the caucus which elected HENRY B. PAYNE United States Senator, and sold out the Democracy to the money power.

I read now from the Bohemian, Columbus, January, 1884:

The Democrats of Ohio have howled against monopoly for the last twenty years, and when the opportunity came for them to give monopoly a stinging blow and at the same time reward one of their true and tried leaders they sell themselves out for a few shining dollars and crown monopoly king. Fie, on such men! When such noble and able leaders as Thurman, Ward, Converse, Geddes, and Morgan are cast aside for the sake of pelf and personal interest it is high time for the honest voter to act for himself and see that such men as are willing to sell themselves for a dollar or so are let severely alone. There was a time when a poor man stood some show in Democratic politics, but that time has passed. Democracy has joined hands with monopoly, and hereafter no poor Democrat need apply for favors.

The Clermont Sun, a Democratic paper, of Batavia, Clermont County, in January, 1884, said:

If Mr. Pendleton is defeated it will be by some bargain and sale, or low trickery, through a secret ballot that conceals and covers up legislators who have sold themselves, like Judas, to betray Ohio's honored Senator.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] read the letter of Allen G. Thurman. I call his attention to what Judge Thurman said in the Columbus Times January 9, 1884, the day after the caucus. Judge Thurman was there during this controversy, and knew all about it. He is not a man to jump at conclusions, nor is he a man carried away by prejudice or enthusiasm. He says:

The Democratic clock is put back four years, and corruption is given a new leasehold in our land. Syndicates purchase the people's agents, and honest men stand aghast.

Judge Thurman ought to have an opportunity to come before a Senatorial committee and give the facts on which he based that plain, clear statement of his judgment.

Again, Judge McKemy, a judge of the court of common pleas of Butler County, who is a good Democrat, says:

Why, it was no caucus—t'was only a sale with but one bidder.

Judge Coryell, a leading Democrat of Adams, says:

Such infamous corruption I never saw in forty years of public life.

He ought to go before a Senatorial committee and tell them what he saw to justify that statement about his party friends. Again, E. K. Heisley, a leading Democrat of Cleveland, thinks "such a nomination, procured by such methods, a stench in the nostrils of honest men."

Colonel Mosher, of Morrow, a leading Democrat, wants it understood that the bosses may purchase a Senatorship, but the people will never ratify the sale.

I could read a great many more extracts from Democratic papers, and they are healthy extracts to read. They give me a new respect for the Democratic party of Ohio.

Mr. President, there is the evidence; there is the public opinion of the State of Ohio, as expressed in the Democratic newspapers of the State, a majority of them; there is the expression of all the Republican newspapers in the State read here by the Senator from Ohio; there are the resolutions of the Republican editors of Ohio, read also in this presence; there is the declaration of the senate and house of representatives of Ohio, the declaration of the Republican central committee, the declaration of a convention, and yet Senators say there is nothing presented here which justifies the United States Senate in making an inquiry as to whether or not these things are so. I admit, sir, that if the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] was on trial, they would not justify his conviction, because there is not a thing there that touches the skirts of his garments. I yield to no man in my respect for the Senator from Ohio. I served with him in the House of Representatives. I believe him to be a man of the strictest integrity, and the only thing that has ever shaken my confidence in him, is that, under this perfect storm of testimony, of assertion, of resolutions of Legislature and convention and committees, of denunciations of Democratic newspapers, he could content himself to sit here in the United States Senate without promptly demanding an investigation which should show to the world that his skirts were clean from all this foul stuff.

I believe in the history of the United States there never has been but one case before where a charge affecting the personal character of a Senator or his right to his seat has been made that he has not himself promptly demanded that the charge should be investigated, and that the truth should be known; and yet here, with Ossa piled on Pelion, investigation upon investigation, denunciation upon denunciation, resolution upon resolution, the Senator from Ohio has not demanded an investigation, but, on the contrary, his party friends in this House have insisted that no investigation shall be had.

I say, sir, with pain in my heart, that there is nothing in this whole transaction that has touched in the remotest degree my respect for and my confidence in the Senator from Ohio except this silence under these charges. How any Senator, taking a seat in this Chamber, could calmly consent to occupy that seat an hour without demanding indignantly an investigation is certainly beyond my comprehension; and I say that there is no Senator within my knowledge, on that side or on this side, who under the same circumstances could hold his seat in silence and retain my unshaken confidence.

Mr. President, if I had not felt exceedingly cramped for time, knowing that I was keeping from the floor the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS], and that the hour was getting late, I should have presented this case in better form. It was not my intention to speak, but a Senator and some gentlemen from the other House desired me to go over this evidence and I have done so, not from a wish to participate in this debate, for to me there is nothing of pleasure in it. I voted for an investigation, and to me nothing on earth could be more painful as a legislative duty than an investigation into a matter of this kind. But, sir, duties must be performed however disagreeable their performance may be. Public life is not one of pleasure.

Neither I nor any Senator could be induced to vote for this investigation by any motive whatsoever other than from a stern sense of duty and the safety of the Republic. Surely no committee of this body would be eager to enter upon such an inquiry, affecting so seriously an honored Senator and a respected friend.

But, sir, in my opinion the United States Senate will be derelict in duty, will fall infinitely below its proper place in the Republic, if under these statements it fails to make inquiry further into this alleged corruption.

The result of that inquiry, I sincerely hope, will relieve the Senator [Mr. PAYNE], restore the confidence of the people of Ohio, and commend the Senate anew to the Republic. But if, on the contrary, it shall satisfy the Senate that corruption has entered its Chamber; that money has purchased a seat there, and then it shall declare that disgraced and degraded seat vacant, it will have served magnificently well our beloved country.

Sir, if popular government is still an experiment and shall become a failure, that failure will be the legitimate result of unfaithful citizenship. If this Republic shall be wrecked on the shoals, the rock on which it breaks shall be named "corruption of the ballot." The ballot-box is the fountain-head of a government of the people; whosoever defiles that, destroys the whole.

The Senate can engage in no holier, no more responsible duty than to devote itself to a work which, however painful and disagreeable, may result in a warning, a terrible warning, which shall sound from the East to the West, from the North to the South, declaring, with no uncertain voice, that the corruption by money power of the citizen at the polls or of the legislator in a State, must stop at once and forever.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from Vermont will not move an adjournment until we conclude this case. I understand the Senator frow New York [Mr. EVARTS] desires to speak and that he has the closing argument.

Mr. HALE. If we do not sit to-night we shall run on for a week.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I withdraw the motion temporarily.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the burden of the speeches which have been addressed to the Senate on the other side has been very largely an attack upon me, a misconception or misunderstanding of my original position before the committee, and a misconception or misunderstanding of the arguments which I had the honor to address to the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not hear a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please be in order.

Mr. HOAR. I had expected to reply, to occupy half an hour or three-quarters of an hour in that, which I think no Senator would deny was fair and proper, considering the large number of speeches that have been made on the other side; but I am so anxious to promote the convenience of the Senate, so near the close of the session, and in this heated term, that I will refrain from that privilege unless something should come up hereafter which will require it.

Mr. PUGH. As far as I am concerned I am very anxious that the vote should be taken on this matter to-night, but it is with the Senate. If it is their pleasure to have it go over until to-morrow with the certainty that this case will be considered to-morrow and closed, I have no objection, but I insist, so far as I am concerned, upon the conclusion of the case without adjournment.

Mr. ALLISON. If we can have an understanding to-night that at 1 o'clock to-morrow a vote shall be taken upon this question, it will suit me. We can begin at 11 to-morrow, and that will give two hours. If we can have a vote to-morrow at 1 o'clock, I shall not ask that the sundry civil bill be taken up before that time.

Mr. HOAR. What about the Calendar?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know what we shall do about the Calendar. I desire that this matter shall be commenced in the morning immediately after the ordinary morning business, and that we take the vote at 1 o'clock.

Mr. PUGH. With the understanding that we commence the consideration of this case at 11, I will agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no arrangement about the Calendar for to-morrow.

Mr. TELLER. It does not seem to me that we ought to limit the time for taking the vote. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] expects to be heard. I think the proper way would be to take the vote at the conclusion of his speech, and not limit him to any particular time.

Mr. ALLISON. I have consulted the Senator from New York, and I made the suggestion with a view of giving the Senator from New York time to conclude his remarks. I understand from him that the time I have indicated will be ample.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the arrangement proposed by the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HOAR. I do not think I wish to absolutely cut off the right to say anything.

Mr. ALLSION. Well, I will say half past 1.

Mr. HOAR. I do not expect to speak at all.

Mr. CALL. I desire to say before any agreement is come to on this matter that I wish to occupy about ten minutes of the time of the Senate before I give my vote on this subject. I think we can very well employ the time to-night, by returning here after a recess, in hearing the speech of the Senator from New York and any other that may be made and may dispose of this question to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate agree to the proposition of the Senator from Iowa that a vote be taken on this question to-morrow at 1 o'clock?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Massachusetts objected to that, if I correctly understood him.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw his objection.

Several SENATORS. Half past 1.

Mr. HOAR. My objection does not relate to the time at all. What I have to say is this: I have not the slightest expectation of addressing the Senate again on this subject, though I had prepared some notes which would involve half or three-quarters of an hour.

I think it is due to the convenience of the Senate that I should forego that privilege under the circumstances. I do not suppose there is the slightest probability that I shall desire to speak, but I do not propose, considering the course this debate has taken, to put myself in a position where if any statement is made hereafter in regard to my position like that made by the Senator from Louisiana or the Senator from Illinois or anybody else, my mouth is to be shut, that I am to agree that I shall have no right to speak on this question after a particular moment, or after the Senator from New York has got through. At the same time I say in all good faith that I have not the slightest expectation that any such thing will happen, but I do not think I ought to be cut off.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I propose this: That after the Senator from New York shall have concluded his remarks the Senator from Massachusetts shall be entitled, if he desires it, to three-quarters of an hour to reply—he holds the affirmative of this proposition, and according to the ordinary rules of fair play he is entitled to a reply—and that then the vote be taken.

Mr. BUTLER. I object to that.

Mr. HOAR. I am bound to say in all good faith, though I agree with the Senator from Vermont as to my right, that the question came up between me and the Senator from New York in private, and I agreed with him that I should submit to the Senator from Alabama whether I was entitled to reply or not, and the Senator from Alabama decided that I was not, and I am bound therefore not to put it on that ground.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand objection is made to my proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection has been made to the proposition of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EVARTS. I regret personally to come so much into the arrangement. I was expecting to close the argument on the part of the majority report, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH] did not desire to make a second speech in the case and I desired to make but one speech in this case. I do not understand that I am departing at all from the general course of debate here, that the majority report which opens a case has the right to close it. Everybody has a right to reply afterward. Every Senator has a right to speak as much as he pleases; and just now it was a matter of private discussion between the Senator from Massachusetts and myself, and whether he accepted that view or not it was so adjusted. Later he has informed me that as it was getting late he thought he would not speak at all before me. Now he suggests that if it goes over until to-morrow, then what he said to me that he would not speak before me ought not to bind him in regard to the disposition to speak before me to-morrow if he so desires.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to save the time of the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. EVARTS. Then when I am understood to have closed the debate for the majority report every Senator has a right to speak, and the Senator from Massachusetts has intimated very properly that he would like to reserve the right to reply if he thinks it is required. Under these circumstances, Mr. President, it will be quite safe to take the vote at two hours after we start, with the understanding that the two hours are not out until I have got through. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. That brings it to half past 1 o'clock. Now I ask again unanimous consent that the vote be taken to-morrow on this question at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. HOAR. I object.

Mr. ALLISON. Then, Mr. President, I give notice that to-morrow morning after the morning business is concluded I will test the sense of the Senate as to whether the appropriation bills are to be passed or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Regular order.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think there was objection on the other side. ["No."]

Mr. HOAR. I understand the Senator from New York has said (which I had not heard when I objected) that he expects to get through at 1 o'clock to-morrow. If that is true, my belief is that we can take the vote at once; and I will certainly make no objection to a proposition to take the vote at half past 1.

Mr. EVARTS. Provided we start at some time or other.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to put the question on 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will put the question again. Is there objection to fixing the time for taking the vote on this question at 2 o'clock to-morrow. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CALL. I object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, July 23, 1886, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 22, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. BULLOCK.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HARBOR OF NEW YORK.

Mr. BURLEIGH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD the following resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of New York and memorial of merchants of New York city in regard to New York Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

At a joint session of the executive committee and the committee on the harbor of the chamber of commerce, held Thursday, June 10, 1886, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That these committees learn with pleasure and gratitude that through the efforts of Senator WARNER MILLER an appropriation of $1,000,000 has been placed in the river and harbor bill for the improvement of New York Harbor. And we respectfully request that such amount be placed subject to the discretion and judgment of the Secretary of War, but not be entirely confined to any one locality or plan of improvement.

Attest:

CORNELIUS N. BLISS,
Chairman Executive Committee.
A. FOSTER HIGGINS,
Chairman Committee on the Harbor.

NEW YORK, June 11, 1886.

To the honorable the Commerce Committee of the United States Senate:

By and with the consent of General Newton and the Board of Engineers, having put into the river and harbor bill an admendment appropriating $1,000,000 for commencing the permanent work of deepening the water over Sandy Hook Bar to 30 feet at low tide, the undersigned, merchants of New York, hereby express their approval of the same, and respectfully request the Senators and Representatives from this State to do all in their power to secure the passage of this amendment by the Senate, and also the concurrence of the House therein.

The undersigned believe this to be of paramount importance, not only to the commerce of this city but to that of the entire country.

Dated New York, June 14, 1886.

REBECCA STRAIT.

Mr. GROSVENOR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 9929) granting a pension to Rebecca Strait; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. BEAN. I ask unanimous consent to have taken up and put on its passage now the bill (H. R. 9736) to grant the Maricopa and Phœnix Railway Company of Arizona the right of way through the Gila River Indian reservation.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will ask——

Mr. REAGAN. In order that we may continue the consideration of the interstate-commerce bill I must ask for the regular order.

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. REAGAN). Withdraw the demand.

Mr. REAGAN. If the bill can be voted on without debate I will not object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not of course speak in regard to that.

Mr. COX. I want the report read.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw my objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. JAMES. I would like to have the report read.

Mr. REAGAN. It is only four lines long.

Mr. JAMES. I withdraw the demand for the reading of the report.

There being no further objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DORSEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TERRITORIAL LAWS.

Mr. SPRINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5179) entitled "An act to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States," after a full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert at the end of section 3 "except that in addition to any indebtedness created for such purposes the Legislature may authorize a loan for the erection of penal, charitable, or educational institutions for such Territory if the total indebtedness of the Territory is not thereby made to exceed 1 per cent. upon the assessed value of the taxable property in such Territory as shown by the last general assessment for taxation, and nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit the refunding of any existing indebtedness of such Territory or of any political or municipal corporation, county, or other subdivision therein;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "two," in section 4, and insert "four;" and at the end of section 4 insert the following: "That nothing in this act contained shall be so construed as to affect the validity of any act of any Territorial Legislature heretofore enacted, or of any obligations existing or contracted thereunder, nor to preclude the issuing of bonds already contracted for in pursuance of express provisions of law, nor to prevent any Territorial Legislature from legalizing the acts of any county, municipal corporation, or subdivision of any Territory as to any bonds heretofore issued or contracted to be issued;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "law," where the same occurs the second time in section 6, the words "of Congress;" and the Senate agree to the same.

WILLIAM M. SPRINGER,
WILLIAM D. HILL,
Managers on the part of the House.

BEN. HARRISON,
M. C. BUTLER,
CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report is as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 5179, entitled "An act to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States," submit the following explanation of the effect of the amendments ageed to by the committee of conference:

The fifth amendment of the Senate prohibited Territorial Legislatures from incurring any indebtedness except to meet casual deficits, to pay the interest upon the Territorial debt, to suppress insurrection, and to provide for the public defense. The House agrees to this amendment with an amendment to the effect that in addition to any indebtedness created for such purposes the Legislature may authorize a loan for the erection of penal, charitable, or educational institutions for such Territory if the total indebtedness of the Territory is not thereby made to exceed 1 per cent. of the assessed value of the taxable property in such Territory. The act is not to be construed to prohibit the refunding of existing indebtedness.

The sixth amendment of the Senate prohibited counties and municipalities from incurring indebtedness beyond 2 per cent. of the assessed value of the taxable property of the Territory. This amendment is amended by striking out "two" and inserting "four;" making the limit of such indebtedness 4 per cent., and providing that the validity of existing indebtedness or obligations shall not thereby be impaired.

The seventh amendment enlarged the general law applicable to Territories, so as to authorize general incorporation laws to be passed to include some other subjects specified, in harmony with the spirit of the general law.

The other amendments submitted to conference were merely formal, and are agreed to by the House managers.

The bill as amended will have a very important bearing upon the future of the Territories, and result in checking and preventing reckless and burdensome legislation.

WILLIAM M. SPRINGER,
WILLIAM D. HILL,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Colorado, one of the managers on the part of the House, is absent sick. He has agreed to the recommendations of the conference committee, but was not present when it was finally submitted for signature.

The report was adopted.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of submitting a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send the report to the desk.

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire to reserve the right to make a point of order against that report if it is the bill I think it is.

The SPEAKER. This is the bill to impose a tax upon oleomargarine.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then I make the point of order that it is not a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. On what ground?

Mr. DUNHAM. The forty-ninth clause of Rule XI provides as follows:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely:

The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat.

This is certainly not a report from the Committee on Elections, nor has it anything to do with the right of a member to his seat.

The Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue.

This report does not come from the Committee on Ways and Means, but comes from the Committee on Agriculture. The rule then goes on to provide the other committees which shall have the right to report at any time, namely:

The committees having jurisdiction of general appropriation bills; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, on bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors; the Committee on the Public Lands, on bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroads and other corporations, &c.

These are the only committees which are authorized by the rule of the House to report at any time as a matter of privilege. My point of order is that this report does not come from any committee of this House that is authorized to make a privileged report upon this subject. The rule specifies clearly and explicitly what committees are authorized to make such reports, and this is not one of the committees. It is therefore, I hold, under the express language of the rule not a privileged matter within the spirit and meaning of the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri on the point of order.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, there was so much confusion in the Hall that I was not able to hear distinctly what the question of order was.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that under the rules of the House the only committee which has the privilege to make a report at any time upon bills raising revenue is the Committee on Ways and Means, and that the only privilege of the Committee on Agriculture is to make reports as to the agricultural appropriation bill, and that this is not such a bill.

Mr. HERBERT. And I make the further point of order, while this is pending, that this day has been set apart for another bill.

The SPEAKER. That has not been called up yet.

Mr. HATCH. In reply to the point of order I think it is only necessary to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that by a vote of the House this bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture for its consideration and report to this House, with all the rights and privileges obtaining under the rules to a revenue bill, and in every stage of its consideration it had the same privilege that it would have had if reported from the Committee on Ways and Means. On the day before yesterday the bill with the Senate amendments was referred to the Committee on Agriculture for their action. They report it back to the House to-day, and that report is as much privileged as if it came from the Committee on Ways and Means or any other committee of the House. The action of the House has itself fixed the status of this bill, and under the rule in regard to ordinary reports from committees it is unquestionably a privileged report.

Mr. DUNN. If the gentleman from Missouri will have the order of reference read so as to determine whether that order confers on the Committee on Agriculture the privilege which is conferred upon the Committee on Ways and Means in this regard his position will doubtless be good. If that order does not, however, confer such privilege, I do not see how his position could be maintained.

Mr. HATCH. That is a point of order that the Chair will decide, not the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. DUNN. I do not undertake to decide anything, but simply asked if you would have the order of reference read, so that the House could see for itself the condition under which this bill went to the Committee on Agriculture. I do not see how such a reasonable and respectful request could give the gentleman offense.

Mr. HATCH. I merely stated what I wished to have done, to let the Chair decide.

Mr. DUNN. Of course the Chair will decide.

Mr. HATCH. But the gentleman asks me to decide a question that has been submitted to the Chair.

Mr. DUNN. Not at all; I do not ask the gentleman to decide it. I ask to have the order of reference read. The gentleman need not be ill-natured about a matter of this kind.

Mr. HATCH. The Chair will remember the order of the House, which was made on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON], to refer the bill known as the Scott bill to the Committee on Agriculture. Afterward, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee came into the House, or some member of the committee with his approbation, and reported back certain bills on this subject from the Committee on Ways and Means, and asked that they be referred to the Committee on Agriculture. Therefore the whole subject-matter, by the action of the Committee on Ways and Means itself and the action of this House, was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, with all the rights and privileges pertaining to that subject-matter.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire further to state that this bill, which is a House bill, comes back to the House with Senate amendments and a request for a conference.

Mr. DUNN. That is not privileged.

Mr. DINGLEY. That has been sent to the Committee on Agriculture, and the committee make a report recommending non-concurrence, and that the House agree to a conference; and under the practice established in this House when a bill amended by the Senate returns with a request for a conference that has been always held to be privileged.

Mr. DUNN. But the gentleman must remember the bill is not yet reported. This is a point of order against the privilege of reporting it now.

Mr. HISCOCK. I imagine the same question is presented here as was presented on the original reporting of this bill. It seems to me, this being a revenue bill has the right of way, and that whatever committee is charged with the bill, the bill itself fixes its privileges in the House. Certain privileges attach to it, and those privileges attach to it no matter to what committee it may have been referred.

Then take the point that has been made by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]. The Senate asks a conference in reference to this matter, and has named its conferees. That request was referred to the committee. It comes back here as a privileged question, a question of courtesy toward the Senate; and it has been so ruled in reference to questions of that kind in the past. It seems to me on both these grounds the gentleman from Missouri is entitled to make his report this morning.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a paragraph in the Digest upon page 319.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a question of order. I demand that there shall be order on the floor.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will please take their seats and stop conversation.

Mr. HATCH. On page 319 of the Digest there occurs this paragraph:

The practice is now well established of one House passing a bill of the other with amendments, and at the same time asking for a conference with the other House thereon. There is no instance on record of a refusal on the part of either House to grant a conference requested by the other; and as, under the long-established practice of both Houses, all questions relating to existing or proposed conferences are held to be highly privileged, it is probable that conferences will keep pace with the steady growth of Congressional representation and legislation. For this reason, and also the further reason that there are no joint rules regulating conferences, additional precedents touching this subject are added to those of former editions.

It is on the occasion of amendments between the Houses that conferences are usually asked; but they may be asked in all cases of difference of opinion between the two Houses on matters depending between them.

Now, the bill upon its face shows that it comes back to the House with Senate amendments, and that the Senate have asked for a conference and named their conferees; and the Senate amendments having been referred to the committee that had the bill in charge, it has reported them back with the recommendation that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked for on the part of the Senate. It is a privileged report, and can be made at any time, and this privilege has never been denied in the House.

Mr. HERBERT. The point of the decision read by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] relates to the question whether or not the House will refuse a conference when it is asked, and does not go to the point whether or not this is a privileged report.

Mr. DUNN. I desire to call attention to the point to which I tried to get the attention of the gentleman from Missouri. I am perfectly satisfied that the privilege conferred by the rules of the House, which govern in this case, is not a privilege conferred upon a revenue bill wherever it may be found, but it is a privilege conferred upon a particular committee in dealing with a revenue bill. There must be a conjunction of the conditions required by the rule; the bill described in the rule must be offered for report by the committee described in the rule. Those two conditions must come together. It must be the Ways and Means Committee; it must be a bill raising revenue.

Now the Committee on American Ship-building and Ship-owning Interests may as well claim the privilege of the Ways and Means Committee as the Agricultural Committee can claim those privileges. Therefore I made the point to the gentleman from Missouri that unless the order of the House made at the time the bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture conferred specially upon that committee the privileges of the Ways and Means Committee to report such bill to the House at any time, then no privilege went, and the fact that the House has permitted it to be reported and considered heretofore did not create such a privilege, for that could only have been by reason of the fact that no one made the point of order, if it came in before as a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there was no oversight about the matter, because the rule which gives priority of consideration to revenue bills in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union relates to the character of the bill alone without regard to the committee that reported it.

Mr. DUNN. That is true; but the privilege of reporting for consideration——

The SPEAKER. That is another question altogether.

Mr. DUNN. The privilege of reporting for consideration is to be considered under the head of the rule conferring privileges on committees. Now, I ask that the order of the House referring this bill be read by the Clerk. It can not be claimed that the bill itself by the fact of a simple reference would or could carry with it the privilege to be reported back at any time by another committee than that on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

IMITATION BUTTER AND OTHER DAIRY PRODUCTS.

Mr. SCOTT introduced a bill (H. R. 6569) to prevent the illegal sale of all imitations of dairy products, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask the reference of this bill to the Committee on Manufactures.

The SPEAKER. Does this impose a tax?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House it belongs to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] moves the reference of this bill to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I move to amend by inserting "Agriculture" in place of "Manufactures."

The question was taken; and there were on a division—ayes 67, noes 40.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNN. It will be seen that this is a simple order of reference, and does not change the standing rule.

Mr. HATCH. Now, Mr. Speaker, subsequent to that was the action of the House which I have referred to, when the Committee on Ways and Means brought in their bills that had been referred to them, and, by request of the committee, this whole subject-matter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. DUNN. But without privilege. That is the point I make.

Mr. HATCH. That is the question. The position I take is that the reference carried with it all the privilege.

Mr. McCREARY. Mr. Speaker, under clause 49 of Rule XI certain committees are given the power to report at any time. It is true that in that enumeration the Committee on Agriculture is not mentioned, and that committee did not come here and make its report originally because of any power granted under clause 49. I hold, sir, that clause 49 is not applicable to the situation as it now exists.

The Committee on Agriculture made their report under an order of this House; the bill was passed and it went to the Senate; it was passed there with an amendment, and it came back here for concurrence, and clause 49 does not apply to that situation. The question is simply, what shall we do with a House bill that comes back from the Senate with an amendment? The usage in this House shows that there has been a well-established practice of one House passing the bill of the other with amendments and at the same time asking for a conference with the other House thereon. There is no instance on record of a refusal on the part of either House to grant a conference requested by the other. This bill, having passed the House, comes back from the Senate with an amendment, and according to usage and the practice of the House it is now in order to have a conference, and it is in order to make this report as a privileged report in order to get a conference.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. McCREARY. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Suppose a privileged matter was reported by some member not belonging to a committee having charge of privileged matters, would that individual get the privilege on this floor?

Mr. McCREARY. That case is not applicable to the question here.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will ask the gentleman another question. Can any committee have jurisdiction of a subject unless that jurisdiction which is given by the rules?

Mr. McCREARY. The Committee on Agriculture had charge of this bill, which passed the House and went to the Senate and comes back here with amendments, and I hold that, under the practice of the House, the Committee on Agriculture now have the right to call up the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, there are only certain channels through which privileged questions can be presented to the House, and those channels must be such as are recognized by the rules of the House. If the friends of a privileged measure choose to refer it to a committee having no jurisdiction and no privilege, that committee does not, by that action of the House contrary to the rules, acquire any privilege, and when the gentleman took a revenue bill away from the committee having jurisdiction of revenue bills and referred it to his committee, having no such jurisdiction and no privilege except upon agricultural matters, the bill lost the privilege to which it otherwise would have been entitled.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that we have not reached the point of attempting to refuse to accede to the request of the Senate for a conference. The point of this matter now is simply this——

Mr. OATES. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? Only the day before yesterday——

Mr. DUNHAM. I am coming to that.

Mr. OATES. In the case of a bill for the appointment of an additional judge for the State of Alabama the Judiciary Committee reported in favor of non-concurrence in the Senate amendments, and proposed that the House accede to the request of the Senate for a conference. Upon an objection made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DIBBLE] it was ruled that the bill must go to the Calendar.

Mr. DUNHAM. That is the fact, and the same is true of the river and harbor bill, which, on the point made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], went at once to the Calendar of the Committee of the Whole.

The proposition in the present case is simply to follow the rule. It will not do to say that because the bill was referred to the Committee on Agriculture the rule is set aside. This rule is positive; it contains no conditions whatever. It says:

The following named committees—

If the House had intended the Committee on Agriculture to have this privilege it would have been named in the rule—shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely, the Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue.

Not the Committee on Agriculture upon a bill which slipped into their hands by a majority vote of the House without giving them any special privileges whatever.

I claim, Mr. Speaker, that the rule is positive; that there is no reversal of this rule by any action of the House in voting months ago to send the bill to the Committee on Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. It will be remembered by the House that when this bill, or a bill upon this subject, was first introduced, the Chair decided that it belonged under the rules to the Committee on Ways and Means; but the House by a vote referred it to the Committee on Agriculture—in other words, made a special order of reference without changing in any way whatever any of the rules of the House. Clause 49 of Rule XI, which has already been referred to, provides:

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely: The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising evenue, &c.

Under another rule of the House it is provided that at any time after the expiration of the morning hour it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue or general appropriation bills.

The difference as to the privileges of this class of bills under these two rules is simply this: The privilege to report a revenue bill at any time applies only to the Ways and Means Committee, while the privilege to consider revenue bills in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in preference to other bills applies to all revenue bills, whether reported from the Committee on Ways and Means or not. Therefore when the question was raised as to the right of the Committee on Agriculture to call up in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the bill imposing a tax upon oleomargarine it made no difference from what committee it was reported, it had that privilege of consideration under the rules.

But the point now made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] is that this privilege to report at any time bills raising revenue belongs to only one committee, the Committee on Ways and Means; and the Chair does not see how, under the order which was made, a simple order referring the bill to the Committee on Agriculture, without giving to that committee any privilege which it did not already possess, carries with it necessarily this right to report at any time.

In regard to the other point—made, the Chair thinks, by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY]—in regard to the privilege of a measure coming from the Senate accompanied with a request for a conference before there has been any disagreeing vote, the Chair will state that the passage read from the Digest by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] undoubtedly states the parliamentary rule on this subject correctly. Either House has a right to ask a conference at any stage of its proceeding. For instance, the House of Representatives, when it passes a bill and sends it to the Senate, may accompany its message with a request for a conference on that bill, and the Senate, when it finally disposes of the bill by rejecting it or by passing it with amendments, may accede to the request. But the House to which a bill accompanied with such a request is sent must, when it takes up the matter for consideration, reach the final determination whether it will agree or disagree to the proposition sent to it by the other House according to the mode of proceeding prescribed by its own rules.

The fact that the House, when it passes a bill, requests at the same time a conference with the Senate could not prevent the Senate from proceeding to the consideration of that bill in the regular way under its own rules; and when that final determination is reached, it might be that, instead of granting a conference, it would agree to the measure as sent by the House, and thus render a conference unnecessary. There are cases in the parliamentary history of England, and perhaps in this country, where there have been conferences between the two branches of legislative assemblies, not upon disagreeing votes on amendments, but where one House had passed a bill and the other had absolutely rejected it. But in coming to that conclusion or stage of the proceeding which must be reached before a conference can be agreed to—because there can be no conference except upon disagreeing votes of the two Houses—each House must be governed by its own rules. If a conference is asked in advance upon a bill, the bill must nevertheless take its usual course, and the request can not be acceded to until the measure is rejected; and likewise if a conference be asked in advance upon amendments, they must take the usual course and be disagreed to before the request is granted. The only rule the House has upon this subject is one which makes the conference report privileged. It reads:

The presentation of reports of committees of conference—

The language is "reports"—

shall always be in order except when the Journal is being read, while the roll is being called, or the House is dividing on any proposition.

It is claimed now by the other branch of the legislative department that there are no joint rules existing which regulate the proceedings on any subject between the two Houses. Formerly there was a joint rule regulating this matter of interchanging messages between the two Houses and granting conferences on disagreeing votes; but we seem now to have no such joint rules—at least none which can be enforced on the part of the House of Representatives. Therefore, upon the points which have been raised, the Chair holds first that this could only be a privileged report when coming from the Committee on Ways and Means; secondly, that its consideration is not privileged simply because the Senate chooses in advance of a disagreement to ask for a conference.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire now to make an inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand it, to-day is set apart for the consideration of a bill for the construction of war ships.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HISCOCK. If that measure is antagonized and the House shall vote it down, or if we refuse to go into Committee of the Whole to consider that bill, then the regular order will be, as I understand it, the morning hour for reports from committees.

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HATCH. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. It has been already demanded.

Mr. DUNHAM. This report is not to be received, then, under the ruling of the Chair?

The SPEAKER. Not as a privileged report.

The regular order is demanded, and unless the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] calls up the special order, the regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HERBERT. I call up the special order.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Alabama will save time for his measure by letting us have the hour this morning for the call of committees. If he will allow that, he will find that our committee will not be in his way.

Mr. HISCOCK. The morning hour is all we want.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I withdraw for that purpose.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will call the committees for reports.

The Committee on Elections was called.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. Does the right to call up the special order set apart for to-day exist only in the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

The SPEAKER. The special order relates to a bill in charge of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. If he does not call it up the Chair thinks that under the custom of the House no other gentleman should be recognized to do so.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then no other gentleman has the right to call up the special order?

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask whether or not I may yield for the morning hour with the understanding that nothing else is to be done except receiving reports from committees?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman from Alabama to yield anything, except that for the present he does not call up the special order. He may call it up hereafter.

Mr. HERBERT. By waiving the demand for the special order at present I do not lose the right to call it up hereafter?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may call it up at any time, as this day is set apart for its consideration. If he does so it will take precedence, unless the House chooses to take up some other measure.

The Committee on Ways and Means was called.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is being pursued.

Mr. REAGAN. I wish to reach the consideration of the interstate-commerce bill under the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. That order fixes no time for its consideration, but it may be called up at any time during the day whether before or after the morning hour.

Mr. HERBERT. I think I had better call up the special order set for to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is now too late, having already proceeded to call the committees.

Mr. REAGAN. And I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. Against what?

Mr. REAGAN. I understood the gentleman from Alabama to demand the special order.

The SPEAKER. But the Chair has proceeded to call the committees of the House, and nothing can be done until the call is completed.

MARIA SYPHAX.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2517) declaratory of the meaning of an act entitled "An act for the relief of Maria Syphax;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL COURTS, COLORADO.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back the bill (H. R. 3014) to provide for terms of court in Colorado, with Senate amendments thereto recommending concurrence in the Senate amendments; which was referred to the House Calendar.

S. BARRON.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9854) to remove the disabilities of S. Barron, of Virginia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back favorably the resolution of June 14 in reference to the interests of the United States in the Pacific railroads; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES E. CREECY.

Mr. COLLINS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported a bill (H. R. 9930) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims and the Supreme Court of the United States to finally determine the case of Charles E. Creecy, asignee, in Congressional case No. 71, reported to the House of Representative by said Court of Claims under the provisions of the act of Congress of March 3, 1883; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NATIONAL BANK OF MARSHALLTOWN, IOWA.

Mr. CANDLER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 9855) authorizing the Commercial National Bank of Marshalltown, Iowa, to change its location and name; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SOUTHERN EXPOSITION AT LOUISVILLE, KY.

Mr. IRION, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5633) relative to the Southern Exposition to be held in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, in the year 1886.

The SPEAKER. Does this bill require an appropriation?

Mr. IRION. It does not.

The SPEAKER. It remits customs taxes, and goes to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. HATCH. I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture to make the report which I send to the desk.

Mr. DUNHAM. On that bill I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. The bill must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HATCH. That is exactly where I want it to go.

Mr. DUNHAM. All right; if you are satisfied, I am.

The bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, with amendments by the Senate, was reported from the Committee on Agriculture, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

DISEASES AMONG CATTLE.

Mr. SWINBURNE, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported back with an amendment the resolution (Mis. Doc. 374) in relation to diseases among cattle; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. SWINBURNE, from the Committee on Agriculture, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the resolution (Mis. Doc. 373) in relation to diseases among cattle; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GRANT OF SEAL ROCKS TO SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2428) to grant certain seal rocks to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in trust for the people of the United States; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MADISON, IND.

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, also reported, as a substitute for H. R. 439, a bill (H. R. 9931) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Madison, in the State of Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 439 was laid on the table.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MARINE CITY, MICH.

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R.

1188) to provide for the erection of a public building for the use of the post-office and other Government offices at Marine City, State of Michigan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LAND FOR FEDERAL BUILDING, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Mr. ROCKWELL, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 4620) for the purchase of land for the Federal building in Brooklyn, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BYRON R. M'INTYRE.

Mr. LOUTTIT, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2333) granting a pension to Byron R. McIntyre; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

VETO MESSAGE—SALLY ANN BRADLEY.

Mr. ELLSBERRY. I am instructed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to make a report on the Presidential veto of the bill (H. R. 5394) granting a pension to Sally Ann Bradley; which I ask may lie over for the present and be printed in the RECORD.

The report was ordered to be printed and laid over for the present, and was also ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

Mr. ELLSBERRY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 5394 and Executive Document 337:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the veto message of the President of the United States on the bill 5394, granting a pension to Sally Ann Bradley, submit the following report:

This bill was considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions and reported favorably March 2, 1886, as follows:

We find from an examination of the papers in this case that a similar bill was favorably reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and passed the House in the Forty-eighth Congress but failed to receive favorable action in the Senate. As the report referred to is a fair résumé of the points in the case, your committee herewith incorporate the same into their report, namely:

"The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2520) granting a pension to Sally Ann Bradley, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

"Sally Ann Bradley is the widow of Thomas J. Bradley, who served as a private in Company D, Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteers, from June 13, 1861, to October 9, 1865. He was pensioned on account of shell wound of back received at Murfreesborough, Tenn., January 2, 1863, and died October 21, 1882. His death is not entirely chargeable to his military service, and consequently his widow has no title before the Pension Office.

"A petition signed by nearly three hundred of the best citizens of the county in which she resides, some of whom have known her and her deceased husband for many years before the late war, sets forth that she is seventy years of age, is as helpless as an infant, and left without means of support or friends able to assist her.

"Having been left destitute by the death of her husband, who served faithfully for more than four years in defense of his country, and who, while in such service, contracted a disability which necessarily impaired his ability to provide for himself and wife a comfortable support in their declining years, your committee are clearly of opinion that she should not now be abandoned to the charity of the world, but be, in a measure at least, provided for in her old days, and therefore report favorably on the bill and ask that it do pass."

Your committee indorse all the statements of the foregoing report as fully borne out by the facts and record proof, and in addition find that four of her sons followed their father into the cause of the Union, two of whom died upon battlefields; the others returned home, one with the loss of an eye, the other an arm, and are cripples for life. We believe this is a case deserving of the attention of Congress, and therefore recommend that the pending bill do pass.

On the 6th of July, 1886, the bill, having passed both Houses and been presented to the President for his signature, was returned to the House with the following message:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 5394, entitled "An act granting a pension to Sally Ann Bradley."

The husband of this proposed beneficiary was discharged from the military service in 1865, after a long service, and was afterward pensioned for gunshot wound.

He died in 1882. The widow appears to have never filed a claim for pension in her own right.

No cause is given of the soldier's death, but it is not claimed that it resulted from his military service, her pension being asked for entirely because of her needs and the faithful service of her husband and her sons.

This presents the question whether a gift in such a case is a proper disposition of money appropriated for the purpose of paying pensions.

The passage of this law would in my opinion establish a precedent so far-reaching, and open the door to such a vast multitude of claims not on principle within our present pension laws, that I am constrained to disapprove the bill under consideration.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 6, 1886.

[An act granting a pension to Sally Ann Bradley.]

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Sally Ann Bradley, widow of Thomas J. Bradley, late a private in Company D, Twenty-fourth Ohio Volunteers.

JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JOHN SHERMAN,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

I certify that this act originated in the House of Representatives.
Attest:

JNO. B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

The message correctly states that the claimant has not applied to the Pension Office for a pension. As her husband's death is not directly chargeable to his military service, she could not be benefited by making such an application, as it would meet there with a prompt rejection under the provisions of the general pension laws.

Congress has taken favorable action on this woman's application, not because her husband's death is directly chargeable to his military service, but because by his death she is left in her old age dependent upon the charity of others not legally bound to aid in her support. Her husband served long and faithfully in defense of his country, and at date of his death was a sufferer from a wound received in line of battle. But it was not only the husband who responded to the call of his country. Four sons likewise entered its service. Two died while in service; the others returned home, disabled for life, and in consequence thereof unable to assist claimant.

It is for these sacrifices that Congress deemed it proper to go outside of the general pension laws and relieve this old and helpless woman by placing her upon the pension-rolls during the few remaining days of her life.

Believing that the action of the House in favorably considering the bill was eminently just and proper, your committee recommend its passage, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

EDWARD T. PERKINS.

Mr. ELY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back, with the recommendation that it lie on the table, the bill (H. R. 9560) for the relief of Edward T. Perkins.

The bill was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

MARY E. CASEY.

Mr. DORSEY, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported back the bill (H. R. 5003) for the relief of Mary E. Casey, with Senate amendments, with the recommendation that the House non-concur, and that a conference be appointed in compliance with the request of the Senate.

Mr. DORSEY. I desire to call up the bill for the purpose of moving non-concurrence.

The SPEAKER. It must go to the Calendar. The gentleman can call it up at another time.

The bill with the Senate amendments was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

W. C. HUTCHESON.

Mr. SMALLS, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5733) for the relief of W. C. Hutcheson; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN C. WEAVER.

Mr. SMALLS, from the Committee on War Claims, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5949) for the relief of John C. Weaver; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ATLANTIC WORKS.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 5648, a bill (H. R. 9932) for the relief of the Atlantic Works; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 5648 was laid on the table.

GEORGE W. LAWRENCE.

Mr. GEDDES, from the Committee on War Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 6073, a bill (H. R. 9933) for the relief of George W. Lawrence; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 6073) was laid on the table.

INSURANCE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ROWELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported with an amendment the bill (S. 1213) to regulate insurance in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

STATUE OF EX-PRESIDENT TAYLOR.

Mr. STAHLNECKER, from the Committee on the Library, reported with amendments the bill (H. R. 9112) for the erection of an equestrian statue of ex-President Zachary Taylor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I call up House bill No. 6664, to increase the naval establishment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to complete the call of committees. [After a pause.] If there be no objection, the Chair will recognize to make reports gentlemen who were not in their seats when their committees were called.

AWARDS UNDER CONVENTION WITH MEXICO.

Mr. SINGLETON, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported with amendments a bill (H. R. 8121) to amend and enlarge the act approved June 18, 1878, entitled "An act to provide for the distribution of the awards made under the convention between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico, concluded on the 4th day of July, 1868;" which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CREDITS TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEMPHILL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has already called up the bill for the consideration of which this day was set apart, and which has precedence over all others, and must be antagonized successfully in order to be displaced.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. Has not the motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a bill raising revenue precedence?

The SPEAKER. It has precedence except when the House by special order has determined otherwise. In this case, the House by a special order has set apart this day for the consideration of the bill which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] calls up. The Chair held yesterday that the consideration of that bill could be resisted in two ways: first, by raising the question of consideration, and, second, by refusing to go into Committee of the Whole, where the bill is, to consider it; but until that question is disposed of no other motion can be entertained.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of consideration against that bill for the purpose of calling up the interstate commerce bill.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. My point is that it is now the duty of the House to go at once to the consideration of bills reported from committees, as provided by the rules.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter of argument. The question of consideration is raised, and the House when it takes the vote will determine what is its duty.

Mr. DUNHAM. But I raise the point of order that it is the duty of the House at once to go to the consideration of that business.

The SPEAKER. That may be the duty of the House, but the House will determine that. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] raises the question of consideration against the special order, which makes it necessary for the House to determine its duty in the matter.

Mr. DUNHAM. But I raise the further point of order that the House can not, by a majority vote, set aside the rule of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already decided that. The Chair has decided that it is always in the power of the House to determine whether it will or will not consider a measure. In other words, there is no way to force the House to consider a measure which it does not wish to consider.

Mr. DUNHAM. But is it the decision of the Chair that the special order has the preference?

The SPEAKER. It has the preference, but the House may determine that it will not consider it at all.

Mr. HERBERT. I raise a point of order against the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. That is what the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] has just done.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to make a brief statement on my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. HERBERT. I would not contest this question or make this point of order were it not for the fact that this interstate-commerce bill (which I favor) is a continuing order, and can be called up at any time. This day and Saturday were set apart for the consideration of House bill 6664.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall object to that line of remark unless I have a chance to reply to it. I call the gentleman to order. He should confine himself to his point of order.

Mr. HERBERT. I am simply stating my proposition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman is not discussing his point of order.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. HERBERT. My point of order is that this day and Saturday have been set apart by order of the House for the consideration of House bill 6664. Now, the Speaker ruled yesterday, not directly but by a sort of obiter dictum, that the question of consideration could be raised against this bill to-day. The question, however, was not really up at that time.

I desire now to call the attention of the Chair to the rule which has heretofore been laid down on the subject, and which will be found in the House Journal of the Forty-seventh Congress. The question of consideration was raised against a special order which set aside a particular day for the business from a particular committee. The Speaker held that, "this day being set aside for the consideration of such business as might be presented from the Committee on the District of Columbia, the question of consideration could not be raised against such special order, but could only be raised against a particular bill or measure called up at that time."

In other words, the effect of the ruling is that a special order which has been made by the House can not be nullified. It was ruled in that case—and I think the present Speaker has followed the ruling repeatedly—that it was not competent for the House to undo the special order and destroy the effect of what had been done.

Now the special order in this case sets apart particular days, not for business from a committee, but for a particular bill. The effect of allowing the question of consideration to be raised against that particular order is to nullify the order itself, for that order relates to one bill only. Here are two days set apart by order of the House for the consideration of a particular bill, and no other. It is not a continuing order. Now, what would be the effect if that order should be set aside by taking up some other measure in place of it? It would be absolutely to destroy all chance under that order of getting at this bill; whereas other orders are continuing orders, and the bills to which they relate may be brought up at any time. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that a vote at this time in favor of any other bill as against this bill is a direct vote against considering at this session any bill relating to the increase of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule upon the question. In the opinion of the Chair, the decision referred to by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] was correct; and the Chair adheres to it. The ruling in that case was that the House could not, except by unanimous consent or upon a motion introduced by unanimous consent and passed by a majority, set aside the order which had been made, but that the question of consideration could be raised against each bill as it was called up.

The gentleman from Alabama says that in this case there is but one bill to which the order applies, and if the House refuses to consider that bill it virtually nullifies the order. But the case would be the same if there were twenty bills embraced in the order, and the House should refuse to consider each one as called up. There is no difference between the two cases whatever. A special order applying to one bill does not differ, so far as the present question is concerned, from a special order covering a dozen bills, because if the House should refuse successively to consider each one of the dozen bills the order would be practically nullified, just as it would be by a refusal to consider a single bill embraced in a special order.

In addition to that, the bill which the gentleman from Alabama now desires to call up is in Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union; and it can not be reached except by a vote of the House agreeing to go into Committee of the Whole for its consideration. The Chair can not, by virtue of the order fixing to-day for the consideration of the bill and without a vote, appoint a chairman and declare the House in Committee of the Whole upon the bill. So that in any event the consideration of the bill can be defeated by the action of the majority; and there is no way to prevent it. The question of consideration is now raised against this bill.

LIEUTS. GILES B. HARBER AND WILLIAM H. SCHUETZE.

Mr. MCKINLEY. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] has consented to yield to me that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration of House resolution No. 54, which will take but a single moment.

Mr. HERBERT. Does it require any discussion?

Mr. MCKINLEY. No discussion; if it does, I shall withdraw it. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of joint resolution (H. Res. 54), and that the same be now considered in the House. This is a joint resolution to credit Lieuts. Giles B. Harber and William H. Schuetze with sea-duty and sea-pay while engaged in the search for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also for the time employed in bringing home the remains of Lieutenant-Commander De Long and party. Under a technical interpretation of the statute, the Secretary of the Navy can only pay these officers shore-pay, when they are in fact entitled to sea-pay; and he recommends the passage of this joint resolution.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Lieuts. Giles B. Harber and William H. Schuetze with sea-duty and sea-pay during their absence from the United States while employed in the search on the Lena Delta for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also while engaged in transporting to the United States the remains of Lieut. Commander George W. De Long and his associates; all payments to be made from the current appropriation for pay miscellaneous.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department was read, as follows:

In line 5 strike out "sea-duty and sea-pay" and insert "the highest rate of pay attached to their respective grades."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to inquire whether these officers were assigned to this duty under an order of the Department, or at their own request.

Mr. MCKINLEY. They were assigned to this duty under an order of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. DUNN. Has the joint resolution been reported by a committee?

Mr. MCKINLEY. It has been favorably reported at this session by the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department. There was also a favorable report in this House in a former Congress, and the measure has received the approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate at the present Congress.

Mr. MCADOO. I reported it myself in the last Congress.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I take the liberty of publishing as a part of my remarks the report made at this session by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN]:

Mr. SOWDEN, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 54) to credit Lieuts. Giles B. Harber and William H. Schuetze with sea-duty and sea-pay while engaged in the search for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also for the time employed in bringing home the remains of Lieutenant-Commander De Long and party, beg leave to report as follows:

The existing law provides for sea-duty and sea-pay only when an officer is attached to a sea-going ship in commission, and is the highest of the three rates of pay allowed by law. Lieutenants Harber and Schuetze were not attached to any sea-going ship, hence can only recover the difference between sea-pay and the amount actually received by them while engaged in the search for Lieutenant Chipp and party on the Lena Delta, and in transporting to the United States the remains of Lieut. Commander George W. De Long and his associates in the manner provided by the accompanying resolution as by a special act of Congress. Work in the "Arctic zones" is recognized as the severest and most dangerous that a naval officer can be called upon to perform in times of peace and taking him into foreign waters and on dangerous coasts, and all officers engaged in this service should receive the highest rate of compensation attached to their respective grades. All other officers of the United States Navy who have been ordered to perform duties in the Artic regions have been attached to sea-going ships, and consequently have received sea-pay and sea-duty, though in many cases performing similar work to that performed by Lieutenants Harber and Schuetze, and in some cases forming one of the same party.

The officers of the Jeannette were technically attached to that vessel long after she had gone to the bottom, and received sea-duty and sea-pay until after their return to the United States. Chief Engineer Melville remained for many months in Siberia to search for Lieutenants De Long and Chipp, and during that time he was considered on sea-duty and credited with sea-pay for doing the same kind of work in the same regions as that performed later by Lieutenants Harber and Schuetze. The officers of the Rodgers lived on shore many months after the vessel was burned and abandoned, during which time they received sea-pay and sea-duty. Later, one of these officers, Ensign H. J. Hart, joined Lieutenant Harber's expedition, and while actually working and living with them received the higher grade of pay, while his associates only received the pay they would have received had they been on duty in New York, Washington, or any other shore station. Lieutenants Harber and Schuetze were absent on this arduous and trying duty from February 4, 1882, to February 20, 1884, both days inclusive. The difference between the pay they actually received and the highest rate of pay attached to their respective grades, including the rations provided for in section 1578 of the Revised Statutes, amounts to $1,880.75. (See letter of Hon. W. C. Whitney, Secretary of the Navy, which is attached and hereby made a part of this report.) In the Forty-eighth Congress the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom a similar joint resolution had been referred, reported it back to the House with a favorable recommendation. (See House Resolution 205, Forty-eighth Congress, and Report No. 2188.)

Your committee report back the joint resolution, with the recommendation that the words "sea-duty and sea-pay," in the fifth line, be stricken out and amended by inserting in lieu thereof the words "the highest rate of pay attached to their respective grades," and as thus amended recommend its adoption.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington July 2, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 12th ultimo, inclosing copy of joint resolution (H. Res. 54) relating to the proposed remuneration of Lieuts. Giles B. Harber and William H. Schuetze for services of a special nature, rendered by them in their official character as officers of the Navy, such remuneration to be effected by crediting them with sea-duty and sea-pay during their absence from the United States while employed in the search on the Lena Delta for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also while engaged in transporting to the United States the remains of Lieut. Commander George W. De Long and his associates.

In reply to the inquiries presented in your letter I have to state as follows:

(1) "As to the difference between sea duty and pay, and pay not actually on sea-duty."

Officers on the active-list, when not on wating orders, are employed either on shore-duty or on sea-duty. Shore-duty embraces all service on land, whether it be the discharge of duties at naval stations of a permanent character or special duty of a temporary nature, either at such stations or at the Department or elsewhere, and the distinction is not affected by the fact that, in the discharge of the duties, the officer may be required to travel abroad.

Sea duty, properly speaking, is only that performed by an officer on board a sea-going vessel.

There are three rates of pay to officers on the active-list in the naval service, the highest being sea-pay, the next for shore duty, and the lowest that allowed while an officer is on leave or waiting orders. The pay attached to the respective grades and the differences in the respective rates are shown in the "pay table" prefixed to the Navy Register, a copy of which is herewith inclosed for reference.

(2) "As to the time said officers were engaged in said search and duty and the amount of money required for payment of the same."

It appears upon examination that the officers referred to were actually absent from the United States on the special duty mentioned in the resolution, from February 4, 1882, to February 20, 1884, both dates included, and that the difference between shore-pay and sea-pay amounts, for both officers, and for the period named, to $1,432.59.

Section 1578 Revised Statutes provides that all officers shall be entitled to one ration, or to commutation therefor, "while at sea or attached to a sea-going vessel," and section 1585 Revised Statutes fixes the commutation price of the Navy ration at 30 cents; if, in addition to sea-pay, the commutation in lieu of rations be allowed to the officers in question, the amount above stated would be increased by $448.20, making the total sum required for the purpose indicated $1,880.79, which would be apportioned to the officers, respectively, according to their grade during the period referred to, Lieutenant Schuetze being then a lieutenant of the junior grade.

(3) In reply to the request of the committee for an expression of my "views as to the propriety and policy of the adoption of the resolution, and also any suggestion concerning the same and the effect upon the service," I beg leave to say that, in my judgment, the adoption of the resolution in question would be in harmony with the policy, heretofore pursued by Congress, of rewarding meritorious services rendered under exceptional circumstances. In the present case the duties specially assigned to these officers were of an unusually arduous and trying character, while the physical hardships to which they were necessarily subjected in the faithful performance of their duties were much greater than those ordinarily attending the discharge of duty on a sea-going vessel. I am further of opinion that the effect of the action contemplated by the resolution will not be otherwise than beneficial to the service at large. I would, however, suggest a modification in the phraseology of the resolution by substituting, in lieu of the words "sea-duty and sea-pay," the words "the highest rate of pay attached to their respective grades."

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. JOHN M. TAYLOR,
Chairman Committee on Expenditures in the Navy Department, House of Representatives.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the joint resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was according read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MCKINLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER. The question is now, Will the House proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6664) to increase the naval establishment? which was made a special order for to-day.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 79, noes 99.

Mr. MCADOO. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. REAGAN. I rose for the purpose of raising the question of consideration in favor of the interstate-commerce bill.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration is already raised. The House is voting upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 106, nays 136, not voting 80; as follows:

During the roll-call,

Mr. HERBERT asked by unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. DUNHAM objected.

Mr. HISCOCK some time afterward asked that the further reading of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The following pairs were announced until further notice:

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. WADSWORTH.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. DOWDNEY with Mr. O'HARA.

Mr. DANIEL with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. OWEN.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. BAKER, for the balance of this week.

Mr. OUTHWAITE with Mr. BRUMM, for this day.

Mr. MARTIN with Mr. KELLEY, for this vote.

Mr. REESE with Mr. BUCHANAN, for this day.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. REAGAN and Mr. HATCH rose at the same time to submit privileged motions.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen can make their privileged motions and then the Chair will decide. It makes no difference as to the result which motion is first submitted.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up the interstate-commerce bill.

Mr. HATCH. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering bills raising revenue.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up the special order, which is the interstate-commerce bill. The question will be first put on that motion.

Mr. REAGAN. And on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. HATCH. On that motion of the gentleman from Texas I raise the question of consideration.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Also that the Senate agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 901) to grant the Astoria and Winnemucca Railroad Company the right to construct bridges over navigable water courses.

Also, that the Senate further insisted on its amendments numbered 2, 17, 88, 179, and 180 to the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and asked a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on said amendments, and had appointed Mr. ALLISON, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL as managers at said conference on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 4670) granting to the county of Clatsop, in the State of Oregon, the right to construct a bridge across Young's Bay, a navigable stream in said county and State.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will not proceed to call the roll until order is restored upon the floor.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to know if it is not the duty of the Sergeant-at-Arms to assist the Chair in maintaining order upon the floor?

The SPEAKER. It is; but it is also the duty of members on the floor to preserve order. [Applause.] The Chair thinks it is certainly a mere matter of thoughtlessness on the part of members; but it interferes very much with the tranaction of the public business, which would be greatly facilitated if gentlemen would not engage in conversation on the floor.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to know whether in the event the interstate-commerce bill is not considered now, and the oleomargarine bill is considered, will it then be in order to call up the interstate-commerce bill after that is disposed of?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; but there are two privileged motions now pending before the House—one the gentleman from Texas makes, and the other on the question submitted by the gentleman from Missouri. If the House now refuses to consider the interstate-commerce bill, the question then comes up on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider revenue bills. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. HISCOCK. But if the vote should be taken directly on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that would save one roll-call.

The SPEAKER. Still, under the rules of the House, the other must be taken first, as it is a privileged order.

Mr. HISCOCK. I want to favor the motion of the gentleman from Texas, and the sooner we get through with the oleomargarine bill the sooner we will be able to get to that. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 102, nays 151, not voting 69; as follows:

So the House refused to consider the bill.

On motion of Mr. JAMES, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be allowed to record my vote on this motion.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman in the Hall at the time his name was called?

Mr. TAULBEE. I was in the Hall during a portion of the roll-call. If I were entitled to vote I should vote "ay" on this motion.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills raising revenue.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 127, noes 40.

Mr. DUNHAM and Mr. DIBBLE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, 28 members only voting in favor of the demand—being less than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. DUNHAM. Then I demand tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

So the motion of Mr. HATCH was agreed to.

MODIFICATION OF REVENUE LAWS.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering revenue bills. The Clerk will report the first revenue bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7652) to reduce tariff taxes and to modify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask that the consideration of that bill be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to passing over this bill?

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration revenue bills, had reached the bill (H. R. 7652) to reduce tariff taxes and to modify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, and that unanimous consent having been asked to pass this bill over, objection was made.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to know of the Chair if a House bill with Senate amendments has not precedence over a House bill not yet considered by the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no such rule.

Mr. HATCH. There is a bill raising revenue which has been considered and passed by the House. It comes back from the Senate with amendments. I ask if that bill has not precedence over those not yet considered?

The SPEAKER. There is no rule to that effect. On the contrary, the rule provides that business of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union shall be taken up in its order on the Calendar. That is the language of the rule.

The question being taken on passing over the bill (H. R. 7652) the Speaker stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 125, noes 13.

Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. DUNHAM. That is the quickest way.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 54 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 166, nays 64, not voting 92; as follows:

YEAS—166.

So the bill was ordered to be laid aside for the present.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent the reading of names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:
Mr. DUNN with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York, on this vote.
The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

HAWAIIAN TREATY.

The Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next revenue measure on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 74) to give notice to terminate the convention of June 3, 1875, with His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. HATCH. I ask that the resolution be passed over.

Mr. DUNHAM. Reserving the right to object, I ask for the reading of the resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. I object to the reading of the resolution.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that the resolution can not be read until the question of consideration is determined.

Mr. DUNHAM. On the point of order I desire to say we do not know what the resolution is, and until we do, by hearing it read, we can not tell whether we wish to consider it or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the joint resolution must be read, if the reading is demanded, before the question can be determined whether it shall be passed over.

The Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object to passing over this resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to inquire if that is a revenue bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. It affects the revenue. If carried out it would increase the revenues very largely.

Mr. HISCOCK. It does not appear on the face of it that it affects the revenues, that it either increases or decreases them. There is nothing before the committee to show that it does so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that this is a revenue bill. There is a treaty between the United States and the Kingdom of Hawaii affecting our revenue, and this affects the treaty, which is the law of the land.

Mr. McMILLIN. Unquestionably so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] objects to passing over the joint resolution.

The committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration revenue bills on the Calendar had reached the joint resolution (H. Res. 74) to give notice to terminate the convention of June 3, 1875, with His Majesty the King of the Hawaiian Islands, and that unanimous consent having been asked to pass the joint resolution over, objection was made, and under the rule the committee rose, and he reported the objection to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall this joint resolution be laid aside?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 108, noes 10.

Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 157, nays 59, not voting 106; as follows:

So the House determined that the committee pass over the joint resolution.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that Mr. BLISS, Mr. BLANCHARD, and Mr. CANNON are absent on a committee of conference.

Mr. TAULBEE. I ask unanimous consent that the recapitulation of the names be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. BLANCHARD with Mr. BAYNE, on all votes preceding the vote on the oleomargarine bill.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. WAIT, on this vote.

Mr. TRIGG with Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR, on this vote.

Mr. DUNN with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next revenue bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8327) to reduce the number of internal-revenue officers, provide a better and more economical administration of the internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that that bill be laid aside for the present.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I object.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand the reading of the bill.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to laying this bill aside for the present?

Mr. CABELL. I object. I hope we shall have consideration of that bill now.

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration revenue bills on the Calendar had reached the bill (H. R. 8327) to reduce the number of internal-revenue officers, provide a better and more economical administration of the internal-revenue laws, and for other purposes, and that unanimous consent having been asked to pass the bill over, objection was made, and, under the rule, the committee rose and he reported the objection to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall this bill be passed over?

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore declared that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I ask for a division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 32.
Mr. REID, of North Carolina. No quorum has voted.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I call for the yeas and nays.
The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and there were—yeas 159, nays 75, not voting 88; as follows:

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. KELLEY, for the rest of the day.
The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

BONDED WAREHOUSES.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is again in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of revenue bills. The Clerk will report the title of the next revenue bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7140) to amend the laws relating to the entry of distilled spirits in distillery and special bonded warehouses, and the withdrawal of the same therefrom, and for payment of tax thereon.

Mr. DUNHAM. In order that we may have a proper idea whether we wish this bill laid aside or not, I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Before the reading was concluded,

Mr. BAYNE said: I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of this bill be dispensed with.

Mr. LAWLER. I object.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I move that this bill be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object. I think this is too important a matter of legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the committee will rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLOUNT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration revenue bills had reached bill (H. R. 7140) to amend the laws relating to the entry of distilled spirits in distillery and special bonded warehouses, and the withdrawal of the same therefrom, and for payment of tax thereon; and that unanimous consent having been asked to pass this bill over objection was made, and under the rule the committee rose and he reported the objection to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill (H. R. 7140) be passed over?

Mr. HATCH. Pending that question, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the decisive votes which have been taken to-day, that this bill and the other bills on the Calendar relating to revenue may be laid aside and the bill indicated by the expression of so large a majority of the House may be taken up for consideration.

Mr. DUNHAM and others objected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill be passed over?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it competent to make a motion to lay aside all bills preceding the one which the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has just indicated?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 145, nays 54, not voting 123; as follows:

YEAS—145.

So the House decided that the bill be passed over.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. HALE with Mr. HUTTON, on laying aside revenue bills.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

TREATY WITH MEXICO.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House the bill is passed over, and the Clerk will read the title of the next bill for raising revenue.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1513) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico signed on the 20th day of January, 1883.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let us ascertain what that is by reading it.

The bill was read through.

Mr. HATCH. I ask by unanimous consent that this bill be passed over.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee will rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLOUNT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had under consideration revenue bills, and having reached the bill (H. R. 1513) to carry into effect a convention between the United States of America and the United States of Mexico signed on the 20th day of January, 1883, objection was made to passing it over, and under the rule the committee rose and he reported the objection to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule the question is, Shall the bill be passed over?

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 162, nays 51, not voting 109; as follows:

FORTIFICATION OF WINE FOR EXPORTATION.

Under the rule the committee resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House the bill was ordered to be passed over, and the Clerk will read the title of the next bill for raising revenue.

The Clerk read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9114) to provide for the fortification, for exportation, of wine free from internal-revenue tax, and to prevent frauds in connection therewith.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. ROWELL. Is that a demand by the gentleman which we are obliged to consider when objection is made to passing the bill over for the present? If the gentleman demands the reading of the bill, must it be read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has so decided, in accordance with the uniform practice of the House.

The bill was read.

Mr. HATCH. I ask the bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee will rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLOUNT having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration bills for raising revenue, and having reached the bill (H. So the House ordered the bill to be passed over.

On motion of Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa, by unanimous consent the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, for the rest of this day.

Mr. COWLES with Mr. STRUBLE, on this vote.

Mr. WORTHINGTON with Mr. VAN EATON, on the question of consideration, for this day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendments bills of the House of the following titles, namely:

A bill (H. R. 4335) making appropriations for continuing the construction of the public building at Clarksburg, W. Va., and changing the limit of cost thereof;

A bill (H. R. 1391) for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 3379) granting a pension to George G. Early;

A bill (H. R. 3750) for the relief of Frances H. Plummer;

A bill (S. 2660) granting a pension to Annie E. Gardiner;

A bill (S. 2699) granting a pension to Sarah E. Norton; and

A bill (S. 2720) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands in Kansas.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

VINEGAR MADE FROM GRAIN.

The next revenue business on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9733) to regulate the manufacture of vinegar made from grain.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I demand the reading of that bill.

The bill was read at length.

[Mr. DUNHAM (during the reading of the bill). I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Clerk has omitted a part of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that he has read the copy which is at the desk.

Mr. DUNHAM. I have observed the reading carefully, and in the twelfth line of one of the sections the Clerk has omitted the words "and penalties." [Laughter.] I wish the whole bill to be read.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.]

Mr. HATCH. I am heartily in favor of the passage of this bill, and desire to address myself to it, and send to the Clerk's desk as a part of my remarks the report of the committee to be read in my time.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, rose.

Mr. HATCH. I do no not yield the floor. I am entitled to it, and decline to yield now to interruption.

The report (by Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Ways and Means, to whom was referred House bill 3973, having carefully considered the same, respectfully report a substitute for said bill, and recommend House bill 3973 do lie on the table, and the bill herewith reported do pass.

Under the law as it now is, the manufacturing of vinegar by the process of vaporization can be used successfully as a fraud on the revenue. It was proved before the committee that by this process four gallons of proof spirits can be manufactured from a bushel of corn; that more than 21 per cent. of spirits, in addition to that needed in the vinegar, can be successfully hid in a barrel of vinegar, and by redistillation can be separated therefrom; that fraud has been perpetrated on the revenue by factories claiming to be vinegar factories.

The tax on spirits is from 300 to 400 per cent. greater than the cost of production. A gallon of vinegar can be manufactured by this process at perhaps from 4 to 6 cents, and spirits at 14.14 cents a gallon. The tax on this gallon, manufactured without any supervision by the Government and without any guards thrown around its manufacture, is 90 cents, and temptation to fraud is too great to be always successfully resisted.

The object of the bill reported is to remove that temptation, and yet to give those engaged in this industry a drawback of the entire tax paid by them on all spirits used by them in the manufacture of vinegar. It is believed that the bill will prevent fraud and will not seriously burden those who have invested in vinegar factories.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, if what the committee has been trying to reach is to be or is offered as an amendment, I make the point of order that it is not germane to this vinegar bill.

Mr. HATCH. I have not offered an amendment. What has been read is simply the report of the committee, which I have submitted as a part of my remarks.

Mr. MORRISON. I got the impression from the reading that the bogus butter bill had been offered as an amendment.

Mr. HATCH. No; I have simply had read this report of the committee made by the gentleman from Kentucky, a very interesting and able report, as a part of my remarks.

Mr. MORRISON. I thought the gentleman had offered an amendment, which seemed, from what I gathered of the reading, to be out of order.

Mr. HATCH. No, sir; I am supporting the passage of this bill, and regret to see that the gentleman from Kentucky is not in his seat, as I would be glad to yield to him a part of my time; but in his absence I will yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I believe rarely has a more important measure than this bill which is now pending been brought before the committee. I only regret that its consideration has been postponed until this late day in the session, when it may be impossible to give it full consideration and properly perfect it so that it can be passed. [Applause.] But, Mr. Chairman, I also recognize the fact that there is other legislation in front of us so nearly completed that perhaps it would be unsafe for the interests of the people to claim for the consideration of this bill the necessary time to perfect it, when the result might be to defeat other important measures, and measures in which the agricultural interests of the country are interested as largely as in this. [Applause.]

This bill, Mr. Chairman, has been asked for by the fruit-growers and apple-growers of the country, and it has been asked for by the Internal Revenue Department, in the interest of the honest administration of our present internal-revenue laws. I believe that the report which has been read here to-day clearly sets forth the sentiment of the Treasury Department in respect to this bill.

Mr. ROWELL. I wish to know whether the gentleman thinks this bill is in the interest of cheap vinegar or not?

Mr. HISCOCK. My friend from Illinois asks me whether I think this bill is in the interest of cheap vinegar. I am so willing to-day that this bill should be discussed on both sides that when I have exhausted five minutes of my time I desire the chairman shall rap me down, that I may yield five minutes to some gentleman who is opposed to the bill. For, as I said, I suppose all we can hope to do to-day with regard to this measure is to get it before the committee and before the country.

Mr. STRUBLE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. STRUBLE. Would the gentleman be willing to yield time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM]?

Mr. HISCOCK. I am inclined to think the gentleman from Illinois will object to receiving time on this bill and that he will not prove to be in favor of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me for a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman please explain what this bill is?

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman from Michigan asks me to explain this bill. Why, sir, he must be aware that it has been read from the Clerk's desk, and he must be aware of the fact that a very able report, prepared and I think unanimously concurred in by the Committee on Ways and Means in favor of this bill, has also been read from the Clerk's desk.

As was stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM], the reading of this bill was listened to with great care; and now, when it is so near the time of adjournment, it is proper the bill should be considered.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Are you not filibustering now? [Laughter.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not filibustering, I will say to the gentleman from Indiana, and I have not the slightest doubt in the world that the future will satisfy him that what I am doing to-day is against filibustering, and in the direction of legislation that is, I have no doubt, for the interest of the country.

Mr. CANNON. This is the best speech I have heard the gentleman from New York make this session.

Mr. PAYNE. I would like the gentleman to explain whether this bill lightens the burden of taxation on the people?

Mr. HISCOCK. This bill simply provides, as I believe, against frauds on the revenues of the country. It does not discriminate in favor of one interest or against another. It is not subject to any objections, constitutional or otherwise, that have been urged against some other legislation here which we hope to obtain before Congress adjourns.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this bill. Its propositions are surprising at this stage of legislation for revenue to run the Government. I am forced to say that the debate thus far had upon this bill develops the fact that it is not understood by those participating in the debate or by those so eagerly listening to it. I see before me hundreds of hungry and thirsty individuals (hungry and thirsty after knowledge, I mean; I make that explanation so as not to mislead the country) touching the scope and meaning of this wonderful bill, and I come to you like a friend, finding you starving in the desert, to supply the needed nourishment.

Up to 1879 the law which it is now sought to repeal by this bill was not upon the statute-books, and pure, wholesome, and cheap vinegar, as I am assured, was unknown to the tables of the country. In 1879—June 14, I think—the bill now sought to be repealed was enacted into law. What is that law? It simply provides that those engaged in the manufacture of vinegar may take the grain, the product of the virtuous soil of America, and by a continuous, honest, gentle process convert it into vinegar without adding any spirits from the outside. It will be understood that grain enters the vinegar factory's mouth and comes out vinegar. All this is done without violation of law and without patronizing the great whisky centers, Peoria, Cincinnati, or Kentucky. By a simple process permitted by this law spirits are developed a little from the grain, injected into a pure mash, and then in a little time we have the most healthful vinegar that ever was put upon the table of the daintiest epicure on earth. And its healthful, pure qualities only exceed its cheapness to the consumers.

The bill now under consideration proposes to abolish this simple process for producing a staple and common article of food, and instead of making by a continuous process vinegar from our grain the vinegar-maker "must bend the supple hinges of the knee" to the distillers of the country. It is proposed by this bill that they shall quit making vinegar by the continuous process, this moral process, and that they shall first buy the high wines or spirits from the distillers, make the vinegar with that, and then fall back on the United States, through the internal-revenue office, for a refunding of the taxes paid the distillers for their high wines.

Mr. CANNON. Which side of this fight is the gentleman from Iowa really on? Are you for or against this vinegar bill?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. At this time I am not very particular, though I have given you all some wholesome truths. Later on, if this bill comes up, I will be against it, but for the present I am more profoundly impressed with the necessity of reaching the bogus-butter bill.

Mr. HATCH. I supposed the gentleman from Iowa was in favor of the bill or I would not have yielded him five minutes of the time, because I am in favor of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It is the first time this session that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has made a mistake in managing a bill, and this mistake will be all right when we resume our march against bogus butter in the morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken; and the Chair said that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 117, noes 20.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not yet heard the report of the chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9733) to regulate the manufacture of vinegar made from grain, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now, Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I ask the gentleman to withdraw that motion long enough to allow me to introduce two bills and have them referred.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will withdraw it for that purpose.

MARY CLARK.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana (by request), introduced a bill (H. R. 9934) for the relief of Mary Clark, widow of Capt. Charles F. Clark, Company F, Sixth Regiment Kansas Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CELESLIA R. MUDD.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana (by request), also introduced a bill (H. R. 9935) for the relief of Celeslia R. Mudd, widow of Col. John J. Mudd, Second Regiment Illinois Cavalry Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 236) to authorize the Bellingham Bay Railway and Navigation Company to build certain bridges in the Territory of Washington;

A bill (S. 1839) for the relief of Richard C. Ridgway and others;

Joint resolution (S. 1937) authorizing the city of Salem to construct a bridge across the Willamette River, in the State of Oregon;

A bill (S. 2115) granting to the Oregonian Railway Bridge Company of Oregon the right to construct a bridge over the Willamette River in the vicinity of Ray's Landing, Oregon;

A bill (S. 2800) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland rivers by the Ohio Valley Railway Company; and

A bill (S. 63) to authorize the construction of a highway bridge across that part of the waters of Lake Champlain lying between the towns of North Hero and Alburg, in the State of Vermont.

Mr. BRUMM, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence until Tuesday next.

The question was taken on the motion to adjourn; and there were—ayes 79, noes 56.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DOUGHERTY: Resolution of the Jacksonville (Fla.) Board of Trade, for the issuance of small paper currency—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Petition of Rebecca Strait, for a widow's pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPOONER: Protest of Josiah W. Seabury and 127 others, citizens of Providence County, Rhode Island, against attaching to pension bills provision for special taxation for payment thereof—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. J. B. WEAVER: Petition of Z. T. Vance and 80 others, of Wilcox Post, No. 138, Grand Army of the Republic, of Eddyville, Iowa, praying for the passage of bill for relief of dependent soldiers, known as Senate bill No. 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIS: Petition of Maria Hulse, mother of Silas Hulse, late private Company D, Third Regiment United States Infantry, for relief—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The following petitions, asking for the passage of House bill 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts; of House bill 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants; of bill forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with; of House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma; of Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement; of bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States; of bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery; and of bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired, were severally referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WILLIS: Two petitions of citizens of Louisville, Ky.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 23, 1886.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

GILES B. HARBER AND WILLIAM H. SCHUETZE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 54) to credit Lieutenants Giles B. Harber and William H. Schuetze with sea-duty and sea-pay while engaged in the search for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also for the time employed in bringing home the remains of Lieutenant-Commander De Long and party, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the joint resolution may be taken up and passed, as the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs has reported a joint resolution of the same kind which is on the Calendar, and we can then take that off.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution at this time. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit Lieutenants Giles B. Harber and William H. Schuetze with the highest rate of pay attached to their respective grades during their absence from the United States while employed in the search on the Lena Delta for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also while engaged in transporting to the United States the remains of Lieut. Commander George W. De Long and his associates; all payments to be made from the current appropriation for pay miscellaneous.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. VEST. Does that come from a committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Naval Affairs of the Senate has reported a similar joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. The Senate committee has reported the same measure and it is on the Calendar, and this will save taking up time when we reach that. It has been fully considered and reported.

Mr. CALL. What is the proposition?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be again read.

Mr. HARRISON. The Senator from Maine can explain it to the Senator from Florida in a moment.

Mr. CALL. I wish to understand it.

Mr. HOAR. What is the order of business on the Calendar of the Senate joint resolution?

Mr. HALE. Order of Business 1663.

Mr. CONGER. Is that the first case on the Calendar?

Mr. HALE. No; this is a joint resolution that has come from the House, and it is the same as the joint resolution on the Calendar, Order of Business 1663. It simply provides for giving sea-pay to these officers who were engaged in that arctic service who can not technically get sea-pay. They were in a harder service than anywhere else in the Navy in time of peace; and I do not believe that any Senator will object to the joint resolution passing. Then we can postpone the one on the Calendar reported by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. CALL. I do not object. I made the inquiry simply for information.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALE. I move to indefinitly postpone the joint resolution (S. R. 24) to credit Lieutenants Giles B. Harber and William H. Schuetze with sea-duty and sea-pay while engaged in the search for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also for the time employed in bringing home the remains of Lieutenant-Commander De Long and party.

The motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 236) to authorize the Bellingham Bay Railway and Navigation Company to build certain bridges in the Territory of Washington;

A bill (S. 1839) for the relief of Richard C. Ridgway and others;

A bill (S. 2115) granting to the Oregonian Railway Bridge Company of Oregon the right to construct a bridge over the Willamette River, in the vicinity of Ray's Landing, Oregon;

A bill (S. 2800) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers by the Ohio Valley Railway Company;

A bill (S. 63) to authorize the construction of a highway bridge across that part of the waters of Lake Champlain lying between the towns of North Hero and Alburg, in the State of Vermont; and

A bill (S. 1937) authorizing the city of Salem to construct a bridge across the Willamette River, in the State of Oregon.

KNIGHTS OF LABOR PETITIONS.

Mr. VEST. I desire to present petitions similar to those offered by other Senators relating to the eight measures of legislation which have been referred to.

I wish to say in this connection that I was not present in the Senate day before yesterday when the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] delivered quite a dissertation upon this subject in the way of defense, I take it, of these petitioners upon whom no attack had been made. I distinctly stated in what I said the other day that in regard to these petitions that I knew nothing about the persons whose names purported to be signed; that the rule of the Senate required that petitions should be signed by the parties themselves; and that it was very manifest in those petitions as it is in these which I hold in my hand that they are simply copies. I felt it to be my duty as a Senator to call attention to that fact.

I do not dispute the pleasure of any Senator who sees proper to pose here as the defender of the laboring people of the country or of the farmers. I represent a State which has I suppose as many of both these classes in it as the Senator from Nebraska, and a great many more; but, sir, I should have a very poor opinion of myself if I felt called upon here or anywhere else to disclaim any hostility to the laboring men or the farmers of the United States.

I have simply to remark now as to anything the Senator from Nebraska said and the letters he produced here, that I have again examined these new petitions sent to me and they seem to be copies written by the same person. I am not acquainted with the signers. My associations in Missouri have neither been aristocratic nor exclusive; yet I do not see the name of a single farmer upon this list.

The right of petition is sacred, and it is a mere platitude to say that the poorest and humblest citizen of the United States, white or black, has the right to present any petition here that he sees proper. At the same time I disclaim most emphatically that I am here either to attack or defend any particular class or section or interest in this country. I represent the people of my State and of the United States. I submit these petitions for the action of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petitions will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri states that the petitions which he has just presented are copies. I think, therefore, the Chair under the rule of the Senate should submit the question for unanimous consent that they may be received, which of course will be given, so that the rule of the Senate may not be departed from.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That ought to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is perfectly willing to submit the question, but the Senator from Missouri does not state positively except that he believes they are copies. If they are he ought not to present them. It is a question for him to determine.

Mr. VEST. I understood the Senator from Nebraska—I did not hear his remarks, but I read them—to say in behalf of this gentleman, Mr. Beaumont, that they were copies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska so stated, and the Senator from Missouri so states, but the Chair does not feel at liberty to reproach either of the Senators for presenting petitions. It is against the rule; they have violated the rule; but the Chair does not feel at liberty to interpose.

Mr. HOAR. I think my proposition was not understood. The Senator from Missouri has stated that the petition he now holds in his hand and presents seems to him to be a copy, as I understand. I think therefore that the Chair should ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for its reception, otherwise the rule will be violated. That is my proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks that it is not incumbent upon him to ask unanimous consent. When a Senator presents a paper and says it is a copy he violates the rules of the Senate in presenting it; but under the circumstances it is not the business of the Chair to call attention. Usually such papers are received as a matter of course.

Mr. VEST. I do not propose to violate any rule of the Senate; but after the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska, which has been uncontradicted, that these were simply duplicates—and these petitions are coming here by the score—I do not propose to be put in the attitude of opposing the right of petition from anybody, I do not care from what class or interest they may come. I submit these petitions with the statement that in my opinion, without any personal knowledge in regard to the matter, they are copies. The Senate can do as it pleases with them.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not consider it necessary to repeat the explanation I made in regard to this matter the other day, which has been spread in full upon the RECORD. I explained it, because if unexplained it would seem as if there was certainly a reflection upon somebody in sending petitions to either branch of Congress which apparently seemed to be written in one hand. Therefore it became necessary to explain how it was, in order to present petitions to each branch of Congress, the originals were sent to one body and duplicates were then presented in the other. It is not necessary to repeat what I said upon that point, but the explanation was certainly necessary in view of the fact that it had not been explained.

Mr. BLAIR rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The petitions have been referred to the Committee on Finance.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I rise to a matter of personal privilege. I desire extracts from two papers which I send to the desk to be read. The first is an extract from the New York World of July 16, the present month.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Capital news notes—Threatened scandal in the Senate—One member said to have acted as a pension agent.

WASHINGTON July 15.

If a member of the Senate carries out the threat made by him to-day, there will be a livelier scene in that Chamber before adjournment than has been known there for many years. This Senator asserts positively that he has documentary evidence that a member of the Senate has taken from a widow, whom he assisted in procuring a pension, the sum of $200. This is a very grave charge. Senators and Members are expressly forbidden by statute to receive from any person a fee or gratuity for any service before the Departments. The penalty for violation of this statute is not more than two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary or not more than $10,000 fine, or both fine and imprisonment. They also render themselves liable to expulsion from Congress. If the matter is brought up in the Senate an investigation will undoubtedly follow.

Mr. BLAIR. The next is an extract from the Evening Star of this city of the same date.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A promised sensation—An intimation that one Senator may make grave charges against another.

In connection with the debate on the vetoed pension bills, when they shall be taken up, it is understood that several Republican Senators will make violent assaults upon the President. It is also understood that one Senator is making elaborate preparations for his speech, with the intention of raking the President fore and aft. If he carries out this intention that Republican Senator will be attacked from the Democratic side, and it is said a case will be presented in which he charged a widow $200 for procuring her pension since he came to Congress. This is a very grave charge. Senators and Representatives are expressly forbidden by statute to receive from any person a fee or gratuity for any service before the Departments. The penalty for violation of this statute is not more than two years' imprisonment in the penitentiary or not more than $10,000 fine, or both fine and imprisonment. They also render themselves liable to expulsion from Congress.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, the only reason I have for supposing that this newspaper matter may have reference to myself rather than any other member of the Senate arises from the fact that on the day prior to the publications the honorable Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] who is a member of the Pension Committee came to me at my seat in the Senate and had with me a conversation with reference to the report upon the President's veto in the case of Mary J. Nottage, which had been previously made to the Senate by direction of the committee, under the circumstances that were earlier detailed in discussion here, but which had been on his motion, or the motion of his colleague [Mr. KENNA], and with my assent thereto, recommitted to the committee for further examination or consideration, it being claimed by the political minority that the report was made without their knowledge as to its contents at least; and so far as the contents were concerned, that undoubtedly was true.

This was on Thursday. For the next day at 10 o'clock a meeting of the committee had been called, at which it was agreed all around that the matter should be disposed of. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] came to me, as I stated, at my seat in the Senate, and urged me to assent to a modification of that report, which I declined to make. Our conversation was of some duration, and in the course of it he rather urged me to do it upon the ground that it would be better for myself so to do, and alluded to reports in circulation, as he stated, touching my personal integrity, to the effect that I had as a member of Congress charged a widow woman, an applicant for a pension, $200, taking that amount from her for services in obtaining the allowance of her pension by the Department.

I had heard no such rumor and no intimation of a charge of that description before from any source, and was of course surprised at it. I expressed my surprise, and stated further that however that might be, in a matter relating to public duty no consequences to myself on account of any personal conduct that I had been guilty of, if I had been guilty of any, could affect my action; and that I could not now under any circumstance assent to a modification of the report.

I thereupon questioned him a little further in regard to it, and he went on to say that rumors and reports of this kind and, as I understood him, papers supporting the statement were in circulation, and perhaps in the possession of members of the Senate. I then detailed to him the only circumstance which occurred to me upon which any such rumor could possibly be founded, and I will state now to the Senate the facts as I then stated them to him.

Before I was in public life at all, while in practice in Plymouth, N. H., and in the valley where I was born and where the people know me, there had been a person engaged in the prosecution of pension claims for a considerable time, but circumstances led to his severance from that class of business and his abandonment of it entirely, and there was left a large number of claims of soldiers, soldiers' widows, and others, dependent relatives, in that vicinity who were without assistance, there being no authorized claim agent, no one accustomed to transact the business, within many miles of that locality.

I was then engaged in a large and active practice. I sought no such business. I had none, or at least none of any consequence. Whatever I did was transacted only incidentally. These parties and their friends being thus interrupted in service, or the means of obtaining assistance in prosecuting their claims, came to me, large numbers of them, and urged me to assist them. I was not so situated that I could do so without great pecuniary sacrifice; but such was their situation that I assented to it on condition that the business be done with some authorized agent, and I recommended a gentleman who resided in Concord, the capital of the State. I do not know that I said this to the Senator from West Virginia, but it was the fact that that gentleman was, as I considered, the most reliable and certainly the oldest claim agent in the State. He had been engaged in that business for a great many years, and was a gentleman of the very highest character and standing for probity, rectitude, and capacity in that regard.

Accordingly subsequent to that time I assisted those whom I felt obliged to assist, more as a matter of charity than hope of reward to myself. Among others who came to me was an old lady, a Mrs. Hannah Ladd, the mother of a son, an only child, who died in the service; a dependent mother. They were very poor. Her husband was demented; a man apparently in sound health but with broken mind; I think softening of the brain, of which he subsequently died. Her friends brought her some 10 or 12 miles to my office. This was in 1871. From time to time thereafter I assisted her with service that was valuable; certainly that was extensive, for it was one of the most difficult cases to establish, though a good case, of any that I ever knew anything about.

This passed on, and the last item of charge was made July 13, 1874. Subsequently the pension was obtained, and in all some $1,500 or $1,600 was collected and paid to her.

I was elected to Congress on the second Tuesday of March, 1875. Ordinarily the election to Congress takes place, in most of the States, in the autumn previous, but in our State at that time the elections were held in the spring, and really occurred a few days after the commencement of the Congressional year, the second Tuesday of March rather than the 4th day of that month. As I said before, the last charge was of the July previous.

In rendering these services I paid out my own money. I find among the items some $16 or more, and all the items which are made in a general way where there was cash involved in the services themselves; so that I doubt not at least $25 or $30 of the entire bill was for money paid out. The entire amount of service rendered was some $80, or in that vicinity, of which I made a memorandum on my books at the time.

My election was in doubt for a short time, it being very close. My Democratic opponent was Hon. Henry O. Kent, now naval officer at Boston, a Democrat and a gentleman. The canvass being very close, he and I had several conferences. It was quite a number of weeks after the election before we were satisfied how the matter was, and finally the secretary of state, himself a Democrat, gave me the certificate of election.

Our next term of court came in May, 1875. Immediately after my election I entered into a partnership with a young man, now one of the leading lawyers of the State of New Hampshire and one of the best men in it or out of it, Mr. Alvin Burleigh, by which we were in partnership in reference to ordinary law business; but as was well understood I could have and did have nothing whatever to do with this pension matter or the claim-agent business which existed there in the valley.

From the time of my election until the present time I never had any connection whatever with any claim, prosecuting the same with the idea or expectation of any reward. I have rendered, as my friends know, from that time until now every year services, and have paid out money to assist this class of our people, by which it would have been easy for me to have earned far more than the salary I receive here. There has been no year in which, as attorneys charge for their services, I could not have received a very large sum of money, but, as I said before, since my election I have had no connection whatever, no interest whatever, of a pecuniary character in any claim against the United States.

I left my matters in the control of my partner and performed but very little law service in the period following. After three or four years we dissolved our partnership. He continued the business at first alone, and afterward took into connection with himself another young gentleman, a Mr. Adams, who was a student with us while we were engaged in practice together.

This matter passed on. The pension claim was collected. Mr. Burleigh, who was in charge of my affairs in my absence, proceeded to complete the services whatever they were, and the money was paid I suppose directly to her; and as he informed me he called upon her to come and settle the bill, which she failed to do, or to pay any attention to it. He called on her repeatedly; so he has informed me. The matter, however, passed on until the spring of 1880. The last item of the charge would have been outlawed in the July following. Our regular term of court is in the month of May; and while I was here in Washington in the month of March, without my knowledge, Mr. Burleigh called on this woman, went to her house, and endeavored to obtain a compromise of the claim; at all events to get back the money which had been paid out.

She had never, as I stated before, paid the slightest attention to any call that had been made upon her, and when Mr. Burleigh called upon her, as he informs me, she claimed not to know him, not to be aware that either he or myself had ever rendered any assistance whatever in this pension matter. He felt very indignant, but finally she did remember him. However, she refused to adjust the matter or to pay the money or to do anything about it; she said the Government paid it, and all that.

Mr. Burleigh returned and directed his partner, Mr. Adams, to institute a suit returnable to the May court following. It was entered. There was no appearance; that is, there was a default, and he took judgment upon a specification which I shall place in the possession of the Senate. He had found her living comfortably with the means that she had obtained through our services and cash paid out. When the suit was brought, according to our law and our custom he had laid an attachment by the sheriff, which is effected by leaving a copy of the writ with the clerk of the town where the defendant resides or where the real estate is situated; and thus it was secured.

Judgment having been obtained and the question of levy arising, he informed me what he had done, whereupon I at once notified him to drop the suit; that no matter what the old lady had done, I did not want any of her money if I was obliged to collect it; that if she was not willing to pay it to let it go and give it to her. The thing was dropped, and she never paid a cent to any human being for the services and for the cash paid out which made her comfortable.

Those are the facts which I stated to the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], except that I said to him I had had the impression that a part of the services which were involved in this suit, the suit being brought in my name, were rendered after my election. I supposed that might have been so, for I did not recollect distinctly in regard to the dates, but on receiving the papers I find that all the services which were involved in that suit were rendered nearly a year, nine months or so, prior to my election to Congress at all. I send to the Secretary's desk a copy of the record, which I desire to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read, if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, Grafton, ss:

At the trial term of the supreme court, holden at Plymouth, within and for the eastern judicial district of said county, on the first Tuesday of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty.

Present: The honorable Isaac W. Smith, presiding justice.

Attest:

CHAS. B. GRISWOLD, Clerk.

Henry W. Blair, of Plymouth, in said county, esquire, plaintiff, against Hannah Ladd, of Holderness, in said county, housekeeper, defendant.

In a plea of the case set forth at large in the writ on file.

The plaintiff appears. The defendant, though three times called, appears not but makes default.

It is therefore considered by the court that the said plaintiff recover against the said defendant $100.31 damages, and costs of suit, taxed at $7.57. [234.]

Attest:

THE STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, Grafton, ss:

To the sheriff of any county in the State or his deputy:

We command you to attach the goods or estate of Hannah Ladd, of Holderness, in said county, housekeeper, to the value of $200, and summon her [L. S.] (if to be found in your precinct) to appear before the supreme court, to be holden at Plymouth, in the eastern judicial district of said county of Grafton, on the first Tuesday of May next, to answer to Henry W. Blair, of Plymouth, in said county, esquire.

In a plea of the case for that the said defendant, at said Plymouth, on the day of the date of this writ, being indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $200 for goods, wares, and merchandise, bargained and sold by the plaintiff to the said defendant; and in a further sum of the same amount for goods, wares, and merchandise, sold and delivered by the plaintiff to the said defendant; and in a further sum of the same amount for work done, travel, and services as an attorney at law, and materials for the same provided by the plaintiff for the said defendant, at the said defendant's request; and in a further sum of the same amount for money by the plaintiff lent to the said defendant, at the said defendant's request; and in a further sum of the same amount for money by the plaintiff paid for the use of the said defendant, at the said defendant's request; and in a further sum of the same amount for money had and received by the said defendant to the plaintiff's use; and in a further sum of the same amount for interest for the plaintiff's forbearance, at the said defendant's request, of moneys due and owing from the said defendant to the said plaintiff; and in a further sum of the same amount for money found to be due from the said defendant to the said plaintiff, on account stated between them, in consideration thereof promised to pay the said several sums to the said plaintiff on demand, yet no part of said sums has ever been paid.

To the damage of said plaintiff, as he says, the sum of $200.

And make return of this writ with your doings therein.

Witness Charles Doe, esq., the 2d day of March, A. D. 1880.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, Grafton, ss:

I, Charles B. Griswold, clerk of the supreme court of the State of New Hampshire for said county, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of the record in said action and of all papers on file in said cause.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of said supreme court, this 20th day of July, A. D. 1886.

[SEAL.] CHAS. B. GRISWOLD, Clerk.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the reading of the affidavit of Mr. Burleigh

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The affidavit will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I, Alvin Burleigh, of Plymouth, in the County of Grafton and State of New Hampshire, depose and say that I am an attorney-at-law, practicing in the supreme court of New Hampshire, and senior member of the law firm of Burleigh & Adams.

I entered my name as a law student in the office of Hon. H. W. BLAIR at Plymouth aforesaid prior to 1872, and from August 12 of that year until the autumn of 1874, when I was admitted to the bar, remained his student and was in almost daily attendance at his office. In June, 1875, we formed a law copartnership under the name of Blair & Burleigh, which continued till the summer of 1879, when Mr. BLAIR retired and Mr. George H. Adams, our former student, came in as my law partner and our business has since been conducted under the firm name of Burleigh & Adams.

When I entered Mr. BLAIR'S office he was doing business for Hannah Ladd, of Holderness, N. H., a dependent mother and claimant for pension. Her regular pension attorney of record was Hon. L. D. Stevens, of Concord, N. H., who lived about 60 miles from claimant, and, I think, never saw her. He merely informed Mr. BLAIR when evidence was wanted and what kind; and the latter conducted the correspondence and held interviews with claimant and her witnesses, drew affidavits and with my aid did the necessary work and procured the evidence which resulted in securing her pension.

She came several times to the office urging Mr. BLAIR to expedite her claim. She was quite poor and had an imbecile, broken-down husband, totally unable to perform mental or physical work. In 1874, after years of effort in her behalf, the claim was brought to a stand-still from want of evidence that could not be elicited through correspondence.

Mr. BLAIR directed me to hire a team, go to her home, ascertain the residences of witnesses, see them, and obtain their own sworn statements. I visited her home, saw her imbecile husband, and heard her sad story. She implored me with tears in her eyes, when leaving, to have the claim prosecuted and everything done that was necessary to secure the pension, promising reimbursement of funds advanced and compensation for services rendered if the claim should be allowed.

I spent three days with a team, saw witnesses, took their statements, and paid for team and cash expenses of the trip $6.90, which Mr. BLAIR refunded to me. The pension was granted soon after and claimant drew over $1,000 at first, I think, and several hundred dollars afterward. The records of the Pension Office will show exactly. The amount of cash paid out by Mr. BLAIR in prosecuting this claim was over $12.

Mrs. Ladd never called at our office afterward, nor did she write a word to Mr. BLAIR or myself to my knowledge, although I addressed several letters to her.

When Mr. BLAIR entered Congress in 1875 his interest in all pension claims then pending was conveyed to me. I am not aware of his receiving any compensation on pension account since that date. In his absence he intrusted the management of a portion of his private property and business to me and a portion to Burleigh & Adams, but nothing was said in regard to the Ladd account. Before the May, 1880, term of court, Mr. Adams and I looked over claims under our management, including those in which Mr. BLAIR was interested.

We noticed that the collection of any part of the Hannah Ladd account would be barred by the statute of limitations before the next November term of court.

Wishing to give her every opportunity to be honorable without the expense of a lawsuit, I drove over to her home. At first she pretended not to know me and claimed that neither Mr. BLAIR nor myself had done pension business for her; though she finally admitted that we had some connection with it, but claimed that the Government had paid all that anybody was entitled to receive and refused to pay any part of the account, even the cash advanced for her. I regarded her treatment as ungrateful and impudent in the extreme. Neither the Government nor she has ever paid a cent to this day for the services and money expended by Mr. BLAIR and myself in her behalf. Upon consultation with my partner, we decided to bring suit against her, and accordingly caused a writ to be issued and her real estate to be attached, which in this State is done by leaving a copy of the writ with the town clerk where the land is situated. The case was entered at the May term of court 1880; the defendant was defaulted and execution taken out in June following.

Up to this time Mr. BLAIR had given no directions to have this particular account sued or collected in any manner; nor did he have any knowledge of what we had done. Having general authority to make collections and bring suits for him in other branches of business, and from our friendly relations with him, being watchful for his interest, we brought the suit in good faith to save him from loss, expecting his subsequent approval of what we had done.

After the issuance of the execution I wrote him fully about the suit and the reasons for our action in the matter without first obtaining his assent, asking for instructions as to levying the execution on the land attached.

He at once replied, ordering all proceedings in the case to stop just where they were, saying that rather than bother this old woman with an execution he would give her the whole thing, notwithstanding the treatment which I had complained of and which he considered reprehensible in her.

His orders have been carried out in letter and spirit, and whatever complications may arise from the bringing of this suit, Mr. BLAIR is entitled to complete exoneration from any connection with it whatever.

ALVIN BURLEIGH.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, GRAFTON, ss., July 21, 1886.

Subscribed and sworn to before me.

GEO. H. BOWLES,
Justice of the Peace.

Mr. BLAIR. I send the affidavit of Mr. Adams to the desk, who is the partner of Mr. Burleigh, and who was formerly a student with Mr. Burleigh and myself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The affidavit will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

I, George H. Adams, of Plymouth, in the county of Grafton and State of New Hampshire, depose and say that I am the junior member of the law firm of Burleigh & Adams; that in the month of March, 1874, I entered the office of Hon. H. W. BLAIR at said Plymouth as a law student and remained until my admission to the bar in September, 1876.

In the spring of 1874 Mr. BLAIR was assisting Mrs. Hannah Ladd, of Holderness, N. H., in the prosecution of her claim for a pension, although he was not her agent or attorney of record. The case had been pending for a long time owing to difficulty in procuring certain evidence called for by the Department. In May, 1874, Mr. Alvin Burleigh, then a law student in Mr. BLAIR's office, at his request, hired a team and spent several days in procuring testimony in her behalf from persons residing at a distance, which when laid before the Pension Department appeared to be sufficient, as the claim was soon allowed.

In July, 1879, Mr. BLAIR retired from the firm of Blair & Burleigh, and Mr. Burleigh and myself formed a copartnership.

At that time Mr. BLAIR requested our firm to collect certain unsettled accounts due him for professional services, and left several books of account in our hands, in one of which appeared charges for services and disbursements in the matter of Mrs. Ladd's claim for pension amounting to $80.90.

As she paid no attention to our letters addressed to her upon the subject, Mr. Burleigh called on her at her residence in the early spring of 1880 and endeavored to effect a settlement, but without success. She had then received over $1,600 as the results of the services for which she was charged, and as we were informed was abundantly able to pay the bill without inconvenience to herself. It was about to become barred by the statute of limitations, and we thought proper to commence suit upon it without waiting to ask for special instructions from Mr. BLAIR, acting under our general authority to make collections for him, he being in Washington at that time.

An action for the collection of the debt was accordingly begun and entered at the May, 1880, term of the supreme court, when judgment was rendered for the plaintiff by default for the full amount of the charges with interest. Before proceeding to levy execution upon the defendant's real estate, which had been attached on mesne process, we for the first time informed Mr. BLAIR of the steps we had taken in his behalf, and were immediately directed by him to abandon all proceedings in the matter. No attempt was afterward made to collect any part of the debt, and the whole remains unpaid at the present time.

GEO. H. ADAMS.

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE, GRAFTON, ss., July 21, 1886.

E. B. HODGE,
Justice of the Peace.

Mr. BLAIR. Immediately after my conversation with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] I addressed a letter to my former partner, Mr. Burleigh, stating that there was some remark in regard to this matter, and asking him to forward me a statement of the circumstances and also calling for the matter which has now been read. He immediately answered my letter giving the preliminary circumstances, which, as it contains some matter not already in proof, I wish to read and will then pass the letter to the Senate:

PLYMOUTH, N. H., July 19, 1886.

BROTHER BLAIR: I hasten to reply to your two last letters, giving you notes at hand to aid till a formal affidavit is sent, which will be in a day or two. The copy of specification inclosed will correct a wrong impression about the dates of service rendered in the claim. You will see they were all prior to our partnership, which was entered into June, 1875.

The writ was dated March 2, 1880; real estate attached March 3; April 17, service completed, and case returned May term; defaulted, and judgment rendered May 27; execution issued June 1, 1880. The last items of specification would have been barred by the statute of limitation before November term. She never darkened our office door after her pension was allowed, nor did she ever respond to any of the several letters written by me asking her for a settlement. She never paid a cent to you nor me. Shortly prior to date of writ I drove over to her house in Holderness and she claimed at first not to remember that either you or I had ever helped her; pretended not to know me; said the Government had paid for getting the pension. I never saw a cooler or more impudent piece of ingratitude. I was indignant and ordered my partner, Mr. Adams, to make a writ at once. I meant that she should feel the weight of my displeasure as soon as possible. You knew nothing of the suit until after judgment had been obtained. From my relationship with you in reference to lands, houses, and unfinished law business I took the liberty to bring this suit, knowing that it could be stopped at any stage if you did not ratify it. I considered the merits of the case resting with you. The woman was poor and utterly discouraged when, as your law student, I began to work on the case. I made a three days' trip through several towns, at her request, to get affidavits from persons who would not give them except at their own houses. She had an aged imbecile and husband to support in addition to her other burdens.

Before leaving her house on this three days' trip she called my attention to her wretched situation, and, with tearful eyes, begged me to stick by the case and her until the claim was allowed, saying that she would pay in some way for this special trip whether she got the pension or not. I replied that I would do anything that was lawful and honorable to get the pension. If unsuccessful she would not have to pay anything, and if the claim should be allowed reasonable compensation would be expected. The claim was a just one, but would never have been completed without extraordinary personal effort on the part of counsel. Her attorney of record was L. D. Stevens, of Concord, 60 miles from her residence. All the testimony was procured by you and me and sent to him. He did nothing, as I remember it, but file the declaration and call upon you for evidence. I suppose he got his $10 attorney fee. After the execution issued I notified you for the first time just what I had done and why I had done it, asking if I should have the officer set off land which had been attached or satisfy the execution in any other manner. I think I urged the levy of the execution as a just and reasonable thing. You at once replied in a peremptory letter ordering all proceedings against her to be stopped at once, saying that you preferred to give the whole thing to her rather than to be bothering an old woman even though she were ungrateful and impudent, or words to that effect. Nothing further was done. I thought you were more generous than just to the woman, yourself, and me, but your injunction was observed to the letter. It is really too bad that my hasty action should have furnished anybody with the shadow of a pretext for imputing improper conduct or questionable motives to you in this Ladd claim. I trust that this stale charge which was brought up at the eleventh hour at Concord to defeat your election to the Senate, and which was there refuted, will not be again exhumed for the unjust and cowardly purpose of smirching you as Senator-elect.

Yours, truly,

ALVIN BURLEIGH.

I perhaps ought not to have called the attention of the Senate to this matter, but I realized how the entire Senate, no names being used, was liable to suspicion, and I therefore considered it my duty to state this matter to some extent; and if it were touched at all I ought to state it fully. The Senate is now in possession of the facts as far as I know anything about them.

I suppose the papers ought to be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I will ask that reference and leave the matter with the Senate. I ask that the papers be referred with my statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the papers be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. CAMDEN. Mr. President, what has been said by the Senator from New Hampshire in relation to the conversation between him and myself is correct, substantially, though I do not remember the exact language.

I simply wish to add, by way of explanation, that the Senator and myself are colleagues upon the same committee, and that the kindest relations have always existed between him and myself. The conversation occurred for the reason that there had been a question about a report made by the Committee on Pensions in which there was a report aggregating twenty-three cases in one report, with general remarks applicable to the general principle of pensions. There had been an order by the Committee on Pensions referring each of the veto messages to the particular subcommittee that had reported the case originally.

The object of that conversation was the suggestion to my friend the Senator from New Hampshire that there was some feeling existing as to the nature of that consolidated report, that there was a feeling that it was intended to aggregate the cases together for the purpose of making campaign capital. The report had been referred again to the committee, and my suggestion to the Senator was that each case be taken up separately and that the strictures that the committee felt authorized or necessitated to make upon each veto should be confined to the particular case under consideration.

In that conversation I stated to the Senator, as he has said to-day, that I deprecated any personalities, any feeling of unkindness which could be got up in respect to these matters, and I stated to the Senator then the rumor which was current, as I am sure the Senator would have stated to me if the positions had been reversed.

Now, Mr. President, I simply want to say that I have had nothing to do with any of these publications; I have had nothing to do with any one concerned in these publications; and in justice to myself and to the Senator from New Hampshire I disavow any connection with any of these newspaper reports.

Mr. KENNA. I think my association with this subject makes it proper that I should say a word.

As a member of the committee of the Senate on Expenditures of Public Money, engaged with other Senators in an investigation of the Pension Department, I have been necessarily looking in that direction with reference to the facts which can be found there. Not long ago, and about the time of the making of the report by the Senator from New Hampshire in reference to the Presidential vetoes, the report which was made to the Senate, the papers touching the legal proceedings in New Hampshire, to which the Senator has alluded, came into my possession. I want to say here——

Mr. BLAIR. They came from the Pension Office into your possession?

Mr. KENNA. Came to me from members of the Pension Committee of this body.

Mr. BLAIR. Were they Pension Office papers?

Mr. KENNA. They are. Now, I want to say, and I want to say with emphasis, with reference to the action of the Senator from New Hampshire, that so far as I know no one has supposed that anything like criminality was asserted as against the Senator's action either by the papers, by the proceedings, or by any action of any person connected with the whole affair.

To be entirely frank, however, I want to state that it struck me—and I think that is the source of interest about the whole affair—as a matter of the very highest interest in connection with the apparently extraordinary devotion of the Senator to pension interests, as shown by his wholesale and indiscriminate assault on this administration in his report, that the fact should be found that a widow sixty-seven years old who had lost her only child in the Army and whose husband, as the Senator states, was demented should be the subject under any circumstances of a suit by that Senator in court by attachment of her only earthly possession, a little $500 farm, to recover $200 for his services in that line. This was regarded as a matter of some interest.

In so far as anybody may have intimated or any newspaper may have intimated any purpose on the part of those, so far as my knowledge goes, who have had connection with these papers or with this case to effect upon the legality of the Senator's action, I distinctly disavow it.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator speaks of $200. The items are in the specification, and they amount, including cash, to something like $80. There is then an item of interest, which brings the total to about $100; but the $200 which is alluded to, every lawyer understands, is what is called the ad damnum of the writ, and had no real reference to the amount actually claimed. As I stated before, there never was any time that this woman could not have settled it by paying 5 cents. She did settle it by paying nothing; and multitudes of other cases have been settled in the same way with me in that valley.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to ask was there a motion to send this matter to the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There was.

Mr. TELLER. I think it had better be printed and let us look at it. I do not know whether it is suitable to go to the committee. It has gone into the RECORD, I suppose, and we can look at it to-morrow. I think it had better not go to the committee without further examination.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will insist on his motion. The question is not now so much what has been the conduct of the Senator from New Hampshire as how the proprieties of the Senate are affected by what took place when the committee shall know precisely what took place between the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from New Hampshire. I hope, therefore, that the whole subject, the statements of these Senators and the papers, will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. PUGH. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections——

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for action on my motion that the papers be referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama object to the question being put on the pending motion?

Mr. BLAIR. Only the reference of these papers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the pending motion.

Mr. KENNA. Let us understand. Is it a motion to refer the papers?

Mr. BLAIR. The whole subject, all there is to it.

Mr. KENNA. Without any direction to the committee. I do not care where it goes. I think the Senator from New Hampshire and the whole Senate understand my connection with the matter.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly I have no personal feeling about this. I do not want to be smirched unless I deserve to be; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to refer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That includes the statements of the Senators?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole case.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to understand distinctly before the matter passes what it is that is referred to the committee. Will the Chair state?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole record and the statements made by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from West Virginia. The whole subject-matter is referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. KENNA. I have the papers to which I alluded as coming from the Pension Office, and I ask that they go with the others.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will be received and referred.

Mr. KENNA. I ask that the Senate be allowed to inspect them.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask Senators to produce all papers from the Pension Office to go to the committee.

Mr. KENNA. I think they are all there. I ask the committee to look at the papers.

Mr. BLAIR. All the papers in the prosecution of the case, everything that is on file.

Mr. KENNA. Let it be understood, then, that the whole case goes to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers are all referred.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PUGH. I move to proceed to the consideration of the report in the Payne case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The morning business is not through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that after one hour the motion is in order, whether the Senate has concluded the morning business or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I give it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Alabama is in order.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays on that. There is some morning business that needs attention. I do not object to the Payne case going on and going on rapidly. I have an amendment which I desire to send to the Committee on Appropriations, and it will be too late to do so to-morrow.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kentucky will allow me to make a suggestion. I do not question that the Senator who is entitled to the floor upon the measure before the Senate will yield long enough for any Senator to dispatch any legitimate routine morning business.

Mr. BECK. I only asked that the motion be withheld until I could present an amendment to the sundry civil bill.

Mr. PUGH. I withdraw the motion for that purpose.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BECK submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the fortification appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. ALLISON. I present the petition of E. Stoner and 192 other citizens of the seventh Congressional district of Iowa, the petition of Charles F. Wolfe and 112 other citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Iowa, the petition of John Smyth and 84 other citizens of the seventh Congressional district of Iowa, the petition of W. G. White and 71 other citizens of the tenth Congressional district of Iowa, and numerous other petitions of citizens of Iowa, relating to various subjects pending before Congress.

Petitions of this character, I believe, have usually been referred to the Committee on Finance, and I move the reference of these petitions to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I present seven petitions from different Congressional districts of Michigan relating to the several bills mentioned on the backs of the petitions. I move their reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I present the petition of Mrs. Mary M. Williams and 64 other women, citizens of Florida, of the first Congressional district, praying for the passage of the bill repealing the timber-culture, preemption, and other desert-land acts, the bill for adjustment of railroad and other land grants, the bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma, and other bills. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I also present a petition of the Board of Trade of Fernandina, Fla., respectfully urging that provision be made at the present session of Congress for the protection and prosecution of the important public works which have been undertaken by the Government for the improvement of rivers and harbors, and representing that the commercial interests of the country will suffer if there be a failure to make suitable appropriations for the more important of these works. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of Thomas Fenton and 17 others, of Brattleborough, Vt., on the eight different bills and subjects referred to. This petition is sent to me by a person in this town, but it purports to come from Brattleborough, Vt. The names appear to be genuine, but I have not the pleasure of knowing any of the signers, and I have no doubt of the genuineness of the paper. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petition of Henry A. Hawley, of Delma Junction, Iowa, late a hospital steward in one of the Vermont regiments, praying to be allowed a pension. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported three amendments intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2475) to amend an act approved May 25, 1882, entitled "An act for the construction of a public building at Galveston, Tex.," reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 453) for the erection of a public building at Jacksonville, Fla., reported it with the recommendation that the House amendment thereto be concurred in.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 926) granting a pension to James Stone, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3551) granting a pension to George W. Cutler, late a private in Company B, Ninth New Hampshire Volunteers;

A bill (H. R. 260) for the relief of Margaret S. Fain;

A bill (H. R. 4032) granting a pension to John McGowan;

A bill (H. R. 6824) granting a pension to James Savercool:

A bill (H. R. 8352) for the relief of Levi A. Cronkhite;

A bill (H. R. 8635) granting a pension to Irene Googins; and

A bill (H. R. 7712) granting a pension to Virginia Taylor Randall.

Mr. EDMUNDS. From the Committee on the Judiciary I am instructed to report back the bill (H. R. 8329) to relieve Lewis F. Casey, of Illinois, of disabilities under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States adversely. We have examined the case, and find that this gentleman does not labor under any disabilities at all. The act of the 22d of May, 1872 (volume 17, page 142 of the statutes), relieved all cases of the kind he describes his in his petition to be. We therefore recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The bill was postponed indefinitely.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CALL introduced a bill (S. 2872) to amend section 3220 Revised Statutes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RIGHTS OF AMERICAN VESSELS IN BRITISH WATERS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer a resolution, but as it may possibly be discussed a little, I object to it myself so it will go over until to-morrow.

The resolution was read, and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it hereby is, instructed to inquire into the rights of American fishing vessels and merchant vessels within the North American possessions of the Queen of Great Britain, and whether any rights of such vessels have been violated, and, if so, to what extent; that said committee report upon the subject and report whether any and what steps are necessary to be taken by Congress to insure the protection and vindication of the rights of citizens of the United States in the premises; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer, and to sit during the recess of the Senate, either as a full committee or by any subcommittee thereof, and that any such subcommittee shall for the purposes of such investigation be a committee of the Senate to all intents and purposes.

Resolved, That the necessary expenses of said committee in said investigation be paid out of the appropriation for the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman thereof.

The resolutions were ordered to be printed.

ART AND INDUSTRY.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed —— additional copies of Senate Executive Document No. 209 on art and industry; of which —— copies shall be for the use of the Senate, —— copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and —— copies for the use of the Bureau of Education.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 4335) making an appropriation to continue the construction of the public building at Clarksburg, W. Va., and changing the limit of cost thereof;

A bill (H. R. 1391) to provide for the erection of a public building in Springfield, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 3379) granting a pension to George G. Early;

A bill (H. R. 3750) for the relief of Frances H. Plummer;

A bill (H. R. 5051) to place the name of Jacob Madison Pruitt on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 7513) granting a pension to Katharina Nickert;

A bill (H. R. 8336) granting an increase of pension to Duncan Forbes;

A bill (H. R. 9106) granting a pension to Rachel Barnes; and

A bill (H. R. 5179) to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States, to limit Territorial indebtedness, and for other purposes.

OHIO SENATORIAL ELECTION.

Mr. PUGH. Now I call up the report in the Payne case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). The Senate now proceeds to the consideration of the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in the Payne case.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to make any extended remarks on the question before the Senate, but I do not desire to cast a silent vote upon so important a subject and, therefore, I wish in a very few words to give the views which I think are correct.

The question presented to the Senate is whether or not there is ground to institute an investigation either in regard to the validity of the election or the connection of the Senator from Ohio with certain alleged improper practices in that election. This subject divides itself into two separate and equally important and distinct questions; the one regarding the validity of the election, the other connected with the personal conduct of the Senator elected in relation to it. The one is a subject of expulsion, and comes within the rules of the Senate in that respect, and can not be otherwise regarded. The other is a question coming within the constitutional duty imposed upon the Senate in regard to the election of its members. I do not think that any analysis of this question can present it in any different light from this.

We are called upon then as Senators, under the obligations of our oaths, to consider what is our constitutional duty and our constitutional power in this matter.

We approach this question, if we approach it properly, under the influence of reason and argument, and not of prejudice or passion, not under the influence of reports or slanders or harsh judgments or popular influence, but under the plain and simple question, what is the duty of the Senate under the Constitution in relation to the validity of an election to a seat in this body. To ascertain that we must first consider what are the provisions of the Constitution, which is the law to us upon this subject. These provisions are to be found in a few very simple words:

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof.

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members.

The only other provision of the Constitution which relates to this subject is as follows:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

That is, the time and manner of the election may be prescribed by Congress. What, then, have we to decide in this matter? Whether or not a Senator has been chosen by the Legislature of a State at the place prescribed by the Legislature, and in the time and manner prescribed by the act of Congress. That is the whole chart of power given to this body to decide whether a Senator has been chosen by the Legislature of a State at the place prescribed by the Legislature and in the time and manner prescribed by the act of Congress.

What shall constitute a choosing by a Legislature, and by what law shall that choosing be determined? The Constitution has said the Legislature shall prescribe the place. The time and manner may be prescribed by the act of Congress. These are the only imperative conditions which are to govern the act of choosing by the Legislature of the State, but it is manifest that other provisions may be prescribed by the Legislature as to the act of choosing the Senator as to the persons who shall constitute the Legislature, as to the respective and relative power which the two branches of the Legislature may have, or whether it shall be by one branch.

But if you are sworn to observe this instrument, if it be true that this is the chart of power that is obligatory upon you, and that you can not get it otherwise, where is the authority in this body to do more than ascertain whether the Legislature of a State created in accordance with the laws of that State, all that is comprehended in the term "Legislature of a State," whether a Senator has been chosen by that Legislature at the place and in the time and manner prescribed by the State and by the act of Congress? I undertake to say that no reason, that no argument, that no plausible pretense of an argument can be asserted to declare that there is an authority in this body to determine anything more than that, and that you are sworn by your oaths, and we all are, simply to inquire whether or not the Legislature of a State has chosen a Senator at the place and in the time and manner prescribed by the State and the act of Congress, and that the qualifications other than the time and manner, the conditions of the choosing, the manner in which the choice shall be made, can not be prescribed by this body, but must be the subject of State law, and you can not go outside of that.

Let us here examine carefully what is meant by the term "chosen by the Legislature." It is admitted by all persons that the Senators here are on their oaths bound to protect every Senator in his seat and every State in her right to the vote of the Senator who is "chosen by the Legislature" at the place and in the manner and at the the time prescribed by the Legislature and by Congress. It is also admitted that the Senate may look into the certificate or returns from the State to verify the fact whether or not the Senator has been so chosen. But it is said that to be "chosen by the Legislature" he must be chosen without fraud or corrupt motives in the legislators who have chosen him, that fraud vitiates everything, and fraud in the election of a Senator must vitiate the election and that the Senate have power and it is their duty so to decide. This is one of the preliminary questions necessary to decide in this case.

By what processes of reasoning shall we determine whether this is true or untrue. We must try this proposition by the Constitution, by a consideration of the powers secured and reserved to the State. We must try it by the powers conferred on the Senate, which is the sole judge of what is an election of a Senator, but which is sworn to judge of such election and decide it by the law of the Constitution, which is that the Senator shall be chosen by the Legislature of a State in the place, time, and manner prescribed. Now, if the proposition that the term "chosen" requires that a Senator shall be fairly chosen, that there shall be no fraud or corrupt motives in the legislator who makes the choice of Senator, that fraud vitiates everything, is true, it is either because the words "chosen by the Legislature" include in their definition and proper meaning that the motives of the legislators must be correct and pure and uninfluenced by any motive of personal advantage, or because some law from some power having the right to make law has so prescribed.

Unless we can find this meaning is the proper and usual meaning of the word "chosen" or we can find some law of some power having authority over the subject, it can not be true. No one will contend that the word "chosen" means an act of choice or selection by a person made from good and right motives. No one will contend that when the Constitution declares that a Senator shall be chosen and selected by the Legislature of the State, in the place prescribed by the State, and at the time and in the manner prescribed by act of Congress, it also declares that the Senate may require and impose any other conditions for his election or without violating their oaths declare that this would not be a compliance with all the conditions permitted by the Constitution. The power of the Constitution and of the Senate has exhausted itself in these terms and provisions, and the Senate can have no power but that which the Constitution gives it.

Law, therefore, must be derived from authority. The Constitution is the only authority or law that can exist on this subject for the Senate, unless it be found in the laws of the State of Ohio providing that the act of the legislator who has been influenced from corrupt motives shall be void.

There is no such act; there can not be such an act by any State. A discretion in any body to declare legislative acts void because of corrupt or improper motives in the legislator is to destroy the Legislature and make it subordinate to the authority having such a power. Apply this principle to executive power and declare that every appointment of the President shall be void if he has acted from motives which some other person shall have a discretion to declare are improper or fraudulent motives, and the independence and authority of the President will have disappeared entirely. There is no such principle. There is no reason for such an idea. It would subvert all free government, and vest in the department or person having such a discretion the supreme control of all the others.

Now, Mr. President, must we ascertain what the State law is? Has there been any reference had here as to whether the law of the State of Ohio has said that if in a caucus of a political party the motives which have influenced the choice of the members of that political caucus as to one or another shall be influenced by fear, through affection, or money that the choice shall be void when it is expressed through the Legislature? Is there any law of the State of Ohio or any other State which has prescribed that the vote of a member of the Legislature shall be rendered void and invalid and the law and the public function which he has performed invalidated because that legislator has been corrupted? Where is the decision of any court that has asserted that the laws and the public function performed by a Legislature shall be invalid and declared null and void because corrupt motives have influenced the legislators in the performance of that function? And that is the proposition which the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Ohio have advocated here, that we may decide in this body that the legislative functions performed by the members of a Legislature of a State are void because in our judgment and opinion the men who exercised those functions were bought and paid to do it; that we shall so decide and declare, although the law of Ohio has not so declared, but on the contrary declare that the Legislature so exercised shall be and remain valid until repealed and reversed.

I undertake to say that no court can decide or has ever decided that the sovereign legislative power of a State and its functions are invalidated upon proof that the members of that body have been governed by corrupt considerations. Such a proposition would destroy the supreme sovereign legislative power vested in any assembly. Are we to say that law shall be void and of no force because another and distinct tribunal sees fit to decide that the members of that body have corruptly exercised their functions? To undertake to apply that principle to the Senate I say is utterly indefensible and unreasonable. Shall it be said that the sovereign action of the people's Government is void on a charge, pretended or true, that the members of this body have been influenced by corrupt considerations either in the confirmation of men or in the performance of legislative functions? Such a proposition is utterly unreasonable, and there can be no foundation for it.

In the very nature of this Government the responsibility of the members of this body is to the States and to the people and not to other independent and co-ordinate tribunals of the Government; and the responsibility of the members of the Legislatures of the several States is to the people of their States; and their responsibility for their criminal and corrupt conduct is, as the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] clearly pointed out the other day, to the judicial tribunals of their States; and it has never been heard before nor asserted anywhere that the public functions performed by a legislator were to be impeached and rendered null and void because he had been influenced by corrupt considerations. It is frequently stated that fraud vitiates everything, but this is not true of the exercise of the powers of government. The argument is plain and clear. If it is true that fraud vitiates the act of the legislator it must be by force of positive law, and this law must be found either in the constitution or in the laws of Ohio. It is not to be found in either.

I say, therefore, that the Constitution is entirely plain, it could not be plainer, and whatever may be the impulse of prejudice and passion and the indignation which we may have when we hear that a member of a Legislature has accepted a corrupt consideration in a caucus of one party or the other and has carried that into effect in the Legislature, when we come to look at our Constitution, it is that the Senator shall be chosen by the Legislature of a State. As to what shall be the choosing, what it means, the Constitution says the choosing by the Legislature shall be at the place and in the time and the manner prescribed by the State and by Congress. That is all. Where will you go farther for this body to exercise power? Are you not sworn to say that I am remitted and confined to ascertaining whether the Legislature has chosen—in the sense of the Constitution at the place and in the time and manner chosen in accordance with the laws of the State; and if there be no law of the State imposing other conditions, can you impose other conditions here? Can you make a law for the State other than that required by the Constitution as to the place, time, and manner? It seems to me too plain even for argument.

But what is the effect of the proposition made here? That because the members of the Legislature of the State of Ohio have been governed by corrupt considerations the man elected and certified by the State to be chosen, admitted to be chosen at the place prescribed and in the time and manner prescribed, that because somebody without his knowledge or consent used corrupt considerations, therefore he shall not perform the functions to which he has been assigned in the very words and letter of the Constitution.

What does that mean? If the Constitution says that the qualifications of a Senator shall be certain qualities and the person elected has them, who will deny that he is eligible, and contend that the Senate can add others? Where is the provision of the Constitution which prescribes that there shall be any other qualification for an election to Congress than those contained in these words:

> No person shall be a Senator who shall not have attained to the age of thirty years, and been nine years a citizen of the United States, and who shall not, when elected, be an inhabitant of that State for which he shall be chosen.

It does not say he shall not be a Senator if he has been charged with or guilty of any impropriety whatever. You can not enter into that subject, you can not add that qualification if he has been a murderer or committed some act of crime he shall not be a Senator. The Constitution says you may expel him if you have jurisdiction over him after he becomes a Senator. You can purge your body, but you can not add that as a qualification which is an inhibition upon the power of the States as to his election. This instrument which you have sworn to observe declares that if he be an inhabitant of the State at the time of his election, if he be thirty years of age, if he has been for nine years a citizen of the United States, he is qualified.

It seems to be too clear for argument, too clear for reasoning, that you can not add any other qualifications, however meritorious they may be, and you can not add any other disqualifications, however heinous may be those disqualifications. That is the Constitution, and there is no reason or argument and no man will pretend when you put it in words to say that this body can require anything else of a man sent here by a State.

But what does this proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts do but say it shall be a qualification of this man here and we will discharge him and declare that his election was void if he shall have been found to have been guilty of any improper practices in obtaining his election—not that you will expel him. These two things must not be confounded together. The Constitution has provided a mode of proceeding when you wish to purge this body of a man of corrupt character who has obtained a seat here by improper means.

Mr. President, this question is not here now for the first time. I will not speak of what my desire would be if there was any improper case presented here for investigation, whether on one side or the other. I should be glad to promote that investigation. But what Senators desire, what they wish, has nothing to do with their duty and our power. They are sworn here to do a certain act in a certain way, and to decide simply and alone whether a man has been chosen—chosen according to the laws of the State and the requirements of the Constitution by the Legislature of the State at the time, place, and manner prescribed, and whether he has the qualifications of having been nine years a citizen, an inhabitant of the State when he was elected, and thirty years of age.

The case of the election of Hon. Simon Cameron, which occurred in the State of Pennsylvania in 1857, was a stronger case than that which has been presented here. That was a case where the Republican party, then for the first time becoming a power in the country, was in a minority in the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, and the Democrats were in a majority. That Legislature elected a Republican Senator by Democratic votes, by men elected as Democrats. Here there is simply a charge that Democratic votes had been influenced to vote for a different Democrat from him whom the people had expected, and that they were influenced by corrupt motives. There the charge was on the plausible ground to start with that three Democrats, chosen as Democrats, pledged as Democrats, were found to vote for a Republican candidate for the Senate; and upon the foundation of that far more probable influence than anything alleged here twenty-five Democratic members of the Legislature of Pennsylvania certified to this body the charge and their belief that this Republican candidate had been elected by the corrupt use of money. There, as here, the distinguished gentleman elected was known to command greater sums of money than almost any other person, and to be connected with greater interests than any other; and this charge came before the Senate of the United States under these strong and apparently plausible circumstances; and what was the action of the Senate? The Committee on the Judiciary, through Mr. Benjamin, as was read yesterday by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], reported adversely, upon the ground that there was nothing in these facts, without more distinct and positive evidence which should be produced by the Legislature of Pennsylvania, or from the courts of Pennsylvania, to move that Senate, a Democratic Senate, sitting in trial upon a Republican Senator from a Democratic State in the days of the highest party excitement, to affirm that conclusion. The case was stronger than this upon which the Senator from Maine assailed the Senator from Ohio yesterday, demanding that he should submit to his ideas of propriety and his ideas of public right as to what course a Senator under such circumstances should pursue. Yet the Senator from Pennsylvania retained his seat with the respect and confidence of his political associates and his brother Senators and made a distinguished record of honorable service in the Senate.

In that case a Democratic Senate almost without a dissenting voice affirmed that they could not find in these facts enough ground to institute an investigation of further inquiry on the subject. A distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Mr. BUTLER, so well known as a man of clear, concise, and animated thought and cultivated mind, and a lawyer of high distinction, a profound reasoner, and a man of wide information, spoke as follows in regard to the power of the Senate as well as the duty of the Senate:

> The idea of devolving upon the Senate of the United States a jurisdiction to try cases of corruption in the State Legislatures I utterly protest against. Let the members who have been charged with corruption be tried by their peers. It would be a very unsafe tribunal for them to come here and bring witnesses, or for us to send out a roving commission. If there is any real charge on this subject they can try the individuals, and if they implicate Mr. Cameron I will, for one, move for his expulsion right off. I will not have any impure man in this body that has obtained his seat here by any means of corruption. But let them purge themselves before they come here and ask us to give them the medicine. I have not the least idea of assuming a jurisdiction of this kind. It would be unsafe and unstatesman-like.

That is all I desire to say on this subject. In my judgment I am sworn to do a specific thing, and if that is not so I desire to be shown where the power comes to me to make a law for the State of Ohio as to the conditions other than those prescribed in the Constitution in which her choice of a Senator shall be made; and I wish to say that it would be the entire destruction of this Government and its dual character to vest in this body, as is sought to be done here, the power to attack other qualifications and other conditions than those prescribed in the Constitution to the Legislature of a State in choosing her Senators.

But before I sit down I desire to say upon the merits of this case, so to speak, upon the probability that there would be any cause developed by a roving commission, I find the following stated in the report made by the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which is submitted to this body, and if it were added after every paragraph of the plausible speeches of the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Massachusetts as a conclusion it would demonstrate the utter impropriety and untenableness of all the proposition and operations or matters of argument in their several speeches. Says this report made by the Senator from Massachusetts upon a full examination of all the papers in this case:

> There is no evidence connecting Mr. PAYNE, the sitting member, with these transactions—> tending to show the result was changed or affected by such means.

And there is no evidence—

If the sitting member is not affected, if there is nothing even tending to show that the result was changed by corruption—this is the report of the chairman of the committee after investigation of all the papers—if it is true that there was nothing before the committee to connect the sitting member with improper practices or even tending to show that the result was changed by any improper practices, what justification can there be in asking the Senate now to institute a new inquiry upon the suggestions of the same evidence upon which this report was made?

It does not seem as if there was even a shadow of a reason why this body, charged with the highest constitutional duties that can be imposed upon men, duties of the greatest dignity, requiring strict adherence to principle and truth and constitutional duty in the performance of a duty upon which the very Government rests—in this report made by the political opponents of Mr. PAYNE upon the whole evidence that is now before the Senate there is not a shadow of excuse in my mind for the Senate undertaking to investigate the subject further, even if we had the power to take any action invalidating his election in the event of discovering and proving the alleged corrupt motives of the Legislature, so long as the Senator himself remains entirely clear of offense, as he is admitted to be both by the Legislature of Ohio and by the unanimous report of the committee of the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I propose to vote for the proposition to investigate, but the view of the case which governs my individual vote has not yet been presented, and, chiefly for my own satisfaction, I desire to place it upon the record.

It can not be said that this movement is promoted by a faction only of the people of Ohio. It can not be said that it comes from one political party only in that State. If we look around and beyond the legislative action we perceive that unquestionably a great majority of the citizens of that State believe that the seat occupied by the junior Senator from Ohio was obtained by means that will not bear the light of investigation. I waive the unanimous declarations of the Republican press and Republican organization. There is a vast representation of public sentiment from Democratic newspapers and from Democratic leaders, denouncing the conduct of that Legislature in language of the hottest indignation and evidently stimulated by a profound conviction that the question ought to be investigated. The behavior of the Legislature that elected the Senator whose seat is questioned was discreditable to the party and to the State and to the country; it is impossible to deny that. Nor has that public sentiment changed seriously, nor have even the manifestations of a hot indignation moderated.

After all that and concurrent with all that are the opinions of the governor, of the lieutenant-governor, of the other Senator from Ohio, and the declarations of both branches of the succeeding Legislature.

The Senator from Florida says there is no specific charge that the Senator whose seat is in question was himself personally guilty of fraud. I admit that. That is not enough. But he says further that it is not declared that there was fraud enough to vitiate the election. The house of representatives of the State of Ohio resolved—

> That in the investigation made under house resolution No. 28 ample testimony was adduced to warrant the belief that the charges heretofore made by the Democratic press of Ohio are true, to wit, that the seat of HENRY B. PAYNE in the United States Senate was purchased by the corrupt use of money; and
> Further resolved, That the honor of Ohio demands, and this house of representatives requests, that the said title of HENRY B. PAYNE to a seat in the United States Senate be rigidly investigated by said Senate.

That declaration covers the question. The senate of the Ohio General Assembly resolved similarly as follows:

> That in the opinion of the General Assembly, and it so charges—

Not that HENRY B. PAYNE was himself guilty of a crime in this matter; it does not charge that at all—

> That in the opinion of the General Assembly, and it so charges, the election of HENRY B. PAYNE as Senator from Ohio in January, 1884, was procured and brought about by the corrupt use of money paid to or for the benefit of divers and sundry members of the Sixty-sixth General Assembly of Ohio, and by other corrupt means and practices, a more particular statement of which can not now be given.
> Resolved, That the Senate of the United States be, and the same is hereby, requested to make a full investigation into the facts of such election, so far as pertains to corrupt means used in that behalf.

For myself I decline to enter into the details of the testimony presented in support of that declaration. The breadth and strength of the resolutions are sufficient for me. As a question of fact, I deem it beyond controversy that it represents the sentiment of the State of Ohio, presented here not with an absolute and perfect formality, but by the solemn declarations of both houses of the General Assembly backed by the governor, the lieutenant-governor, and the senior Senator of that State.

Now this whole proceeding is not to be governed by the technical details and small rules of practice to be pursued in a police court. This is a grander tribunal and a grander question. It is not a matter of the rumors of newspapers, of petty scandal at all, but a great outcry from an outraged people, if there be any truth whatever in these declaration from the existing Legislature and the press of Ohio, Republican and Democratic.

I decline to be bound by small technicalities in this matter. I hold that for the honor of the Senate, for the honor of the State of Ohio, for the general good of the country at large, there should be a dignified and thorough examination. If it should clear the sitting Senator from personal charges, it would be nothing more than most of the Senators expect. If it should show that the frauds committed there were not sufficient to be decisive of the election, it would be a satisfaction to know that. If it should show that the frauds were so complete and extensive that they were decisive and that there was not a lawful election, the Senate and the country ought to know that. I certainly can not see how in justice and on broad considerations we can escape voting for the proposition to inquire.

That is all, sir.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, that the Senate is master of the question presented here and that it is under no law or restraint except that which is imposed by the Constitution, is not doubted. But by the same reason the scope and boundary of its mastery and its duty are limited and fixed by the same firm instructions of the Constitution. Whatever rights, whatever duties there may be touching the inspection or the vindication or the punishment of those concerned in frauds in States in the matter of Senatorial elections, this Senate in the plenitude of its authority on the heads that are committed to it for its duty and its performance are not to escape those bounds that the Constitution has fixed upon these duties and these powers. It has no power and no right to investigate the politics of one political party at the request of another. It has no power to investigate the internal discords of a party at the request or invitation of a faction of that party. It has no power to measure or estimate the conclusions, right or wrong, that are to touch the very matter presented for our consideration and decision that do not touch the very extent and authority and scope and result that are measured out or assigned to us for our duty by the Constitution.

Outside of these topics, when we come to dissect and determine them in the result in our rules, we may have and should have great deference for a State, and I know it is emphasized here a great State with three millions of people. No constitutional distinction can be drawn between a great State with three millions and a great State under the Constitution and in the embrace of its equality to all, though it have no more population than Delaware or Rhode Island. The greatness of the State in this light and for this duty is not measured by the census, nor is it exalted by the swelling and just pride of its citizens.

Are we to be told in this presence that these exaggerating influences are to touch the definition and the scope of our duty? Neither then the excitements, just or unjust, that are aroused in condemnation of this or that degree of turpitude or corruption in the general mass or in the common scheme of politics within any State are matters for us to regard. They are by us to be regarded, measured, limited, and weighed only in their applicability and influence on the subjects that we are to determine upon and that our vote is to decide.

So, too, public opinion, the life of republics, is to be regarded here with the same reverence and with the same homage that are to be paid outside of the Senate and outside even of official life in any form. The American people—however the Senator from Massachusetts has appealed as if some special representation of them might be claimed in the Senate—the American people themselves are greater than all others. They are the framers of the Constitution, the framers of the establishment, judicial, legislative, and executive, which we have; but when they have established them the way to find out what the American people mean and what they know and intend shall be their representation is in the Constitution and their delegated powers. I know that I meet the American people, as well as the Senator from Massachusetts does when I go to the Supreme Court or the other courts of justice under the Federal system. I meet there the American people in the ermine unspotted and the scepter uncorroded of judicial power. At the hustings I meet the people themselves. I then am on the scene and they are on the scene. They are the American people that I meet, and their power is under the Constitution and under the law. If I am not restrained by civic duty or by truth or by justice or within the bounds of decency and rational force with the people they will understand it as well as ever. And now when between these two representations of the American people I stand in the Senate I meet the American people here. I meet them by their distinct delegation and I meet them in their dignity and sovereignty as States. I do not know who can speak for the American people except those who look and discern how the American people have expressed their mind in regard to subjects of legislation in either House of Congress; and in all the deliberative and decisive action of this Senate in the very matter of this Senatorial election in Ohio it is the American people by their seventy-six Senators chosen and delegated to settle this question.

Now, what are the functions of the Senate, not merely in regard to this matter, but in regard to every Senatorial investigation that is to touch either the genuineness of the election or the worthiness of the duly-elected Senator, worthy in the sense of the clause of the Constitution that gives not to the Senate at large, not under restraint but under the free exercise of its authority the power of expelling a member with the concurrent voice of two-thirds. I have in reading carefully the report of the three Senators, with whom I agree, a distinct assertion, and that I may not misstate it or enlarge it inadvertently I refer to the part of our report that is found on page 11:

> The only constitutional rights, powers, and duties which can sustain, or properly induce, an investigation such as is presented for the consideration of the Senate by the honorable house of representatives of the State of Ohio, arise from two separate and independent clauses of the Constitution:
> By the first clause of section 5 of Article I of the Constitution each House of Congress is made "the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members."
> By the second clause of the same section each House may, "with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member."

The report proceeds:

> As these two ends alone limit the basis and object of any investigation proposed, either for invalidating the election of a Senator or expelling from the Senate a duly elected and qualified member of it, a scrutiny of the grounds, in fact, upon which such action is demanded, in any case arising, from the Senate, requires an ascertainment whether the scope of the proposition and the testimony, presented or reasonably assured, would justify the ultimate action of the Senate under one or the other of these clauses of the Constitution.

I believe those propositions of the report are invincible. I do not understand that they are doubted. I do not find in the report of the minority; I do not find in the chairman's report to the committee itself, any doubt of the proposition that our authority is within those sections, and the scope of our investigation to be taken up must be under our just estimate of whether the matter proposed to us reaches by its imputation and its charge with reasonable assurance of truth the scope and result by which either the character of the Senator is of itself to expose him to expulsion or whether the election has been vitiated when he himself may be free from imputation.

That I believe to be conceded, necessarily conceded, that we are not to enter upon an inquiry unless the inquiry is to lead to results if upon the propositions presented to us upon such assurance as we are to judge of we are carried to the expectation that at the end if these propositions are carried out we shall be in a position to execute our duty.

But this is not the first time that these matters have been considered by a Senate. We have no other means of building up parliamentary law either in the mother country or here, except by instances as they arise and treatment of them and disposition of the law and of the good reason that should govern these considerations; and it is of the first importance—let me impress it upon Senators—that there shall be an accumulation, that there shall be a symmetry, that there shall be an even tenor not swayed by the predominance of one party or the other, but by the good rule and wisdom and restraints that should be thrown around these inquiries, and that each step if it be wise and just, candid and impartial, if it be attended by no external pressures of partisan advantage nor intimidated by incursions of popular feeling and prophecy, that we should hold on with both hands to these wise instructions administered now to a Democratic majority and now to a Republican majority, that caprice, will, rage, power shall not be the rule for every case.

He then who imports into any particular inquiry matters that do not conform to this wise reason that I have suggested and these rules that I have indicated, not only does a wrong in the particular case but he reduces the strength of the forces that have been painfully built up in the spirit of what upon its face is almost unrestrainable—the power of the majority to increase its authority and to depress that of its opponents.

Now, that being so, what is the situation as it stood when this Government deliberated and acted? In the first place, let me suggest that nothing could be wiser and nothing more applicable than that there should be a permanent, standing committee that should be constituted upon general selection of character, of intelligence, and of special fitness, not for one case, but for all cases that may arise. We have so determined that instead of there being a selection of a committee upon a case as it shall arise, we have a permanent committee that on one side and the other shall be accommodated to no case but intrusted with general authority and functions. It is not for me to say whether this committee that is now in its report under your eye was a wise and prudent and discreet and upright and candid and just committee; but if it is not you have chosen us to whom this subject has been presented. And I imagine that we are not to expect from this Senate when by a division of opinion we have illustrated the value of having deliberation and examination, candor and mutual respect, that it shall tear in pieces the conclusions of the committee upon a demand and principles applied by post hoc presentation to the subject which we have considered and upon which we have reported. After that, no disappointed plans and disappointed sentiments and disappointed opinions outside of the Senate should be permitted to think that they may come in and force their views, their interests, their duties, their candor, their justice, on the Senate by storming it with denunciation of members of the committee. Indeed, if this appeal to you meets any response in your hearts or in your consciences, I will not say that this committee is involved in any ruin that they do not share with the whole body of the Senate and with the whole exercise of this function of ours.

As I have said to you in the processes by which your authority is strengthened and built up, justice is confirmed, truth is illustrated; but by stepping down from that let me say to you that you destroy the process by which power and strength and justice are built up; and if indeed this be an instance in which these disturbances are to intervene in this Senate and this committee is to be judged askant with suspicion and unsearching criticism of the results by which they reach their several conclusions, it is scarcely worth the while of us Senators to keep up a pretension that we are entitled to regard and respect from our countrymen at large.

Under this first topic of matter touching the Senator under the second clause of the fifth section, that is, his expulsion, I have said, and in this report which I have signed it will be found, that there has not been brought to our notice from the State of Ohio in any form of presentation of its authority or its evidence an imputation that touches the personal character of the Senator. I do not mean merely outside in his general character and conduct before the world for his fifty years and more of manhood; but I mean of the very matter here, that while the air of Ohio was supposed to be full, while the mouths of men were full until they were emptied, there has not been presented to our committee in our whole constitution of nine in number any such imputation. I do not find in the report of the minority or in the instructions to us from the chairman as to the whole of the record which he had inspected the slightest suspicion of him. Let me be sure of that; let me see whether we are challenged at all in this statement:

> We do not understand that the house of representatives of Ohio presents any case upon the testimony taken or imagined to be accessible to any investigation by the Senate, or upon any allegation of the existence of facts suspected, though not probable, as would affect Mr. PAYNE with such personal delinquency or turpitude as would invite or tolerate his expulsion from the Senate for his participation in the transaction which resulted in his election. The examination of the testimony suggests no support for such an imputation, and the course of the select committee in not giving Mr. PAYNE an opportunity to be heard before them precludes any intimation that such a notion was entertained for a moment by that committee or the Ohio house of representatives.
> We do not understand that any member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections has harbored or expressed the idea that the testimony taken, or suggested as accessible or possible, touches the subject of this personal inculpation of Mr PAYNE. We shall, therefore, confine our further discussion of the matter, as presented for the investigation or action of the Senate, to the question arising upon the validity of Mr. PAYNE's election and the declaration of his seat in the Senate vacant for such cause.

Let us terminate this matter so far as Ohio is concerned.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator's inquiry whether that statement be challenged be intended to be answered now, it gives me great pleasure to avail myself of the privilege which his question puts to repeat what I have already said, that I do not understand that statement to have been challenged anywhere so far as I know.

Mr. EVARTS. I thought I had not overstated it, nor did I expect any other response than that which has been made to me by the chairman.

Now, about Ohio. Before looking at in detail the evidence presented, I want not merely that the absence of imputation in that record on the point which I am now discussing shall be admitted, as it is on all sides, but I want to have it understood that Mr. PAYNE presented in the most distinct manner to this committee of Ohio upon its entering on the investigation what he had to say about himself; and I want the answer that that committee made to him; and then, upon that issue thus presented, I want to present the silence of that committee in every nerve and sentiment of its heart and its action as an acquiescence.

Mr. PAYNE, on the 22d of January, wrote to the committee so constituted, addressing the chairman, as follows:

As one branch of the General Assembly has appointed a special committee, of which you are the chairman, to investigate the conduct of the Democratic caucus which in January, 1884, nominated a candidate for United States Senator, and as the matter is thus raised to the plane of respectability, and placed in charge of intelligent and honorable gentlemen, I propose to give it appropriate attention. For myself, I invite and challenge the most thorough and rigid scrutiny—

That is to the whole matter of the allegation—

My private correspondence and books of account will be cheerfully submitted to your inspection if you desire it—

A spontaneous offer—

I only insist, in case any testimony is given which in the slightest degree inculpates me, I may be afforded an opportunity of appearing before the committee.

Will any one ask from any Senator either more or less, a more prompt, a more universal proposition of his examination in regard to this whole matter—not as to his personal complicity, but his whole knowledge and connection with the matters of the election itself. And now let us see whether Mr. PAYNE was mistaken in thinking that he was addressing intelligent and honorable gentlemen. We shall find that he was not.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 25, 1886.

SIR: I acknowledge the receipt of your favor of the 22d instant, wherein you note the fact that a special committee of the Ohio house of representatives has been appointed to investigate the conduct of the Democratic caucus which in January, 1884, nominated a candidate for United States Senator, and you also declare that you propose to give the investigation appropriate attention.

In reply, I have to say that the resolution to which you refer recites the fact that allegations of bribery, published on authority of S. K. Donavin, are of so grave and positive character as to call for immediate action in order to vindicate the reputation of members of the present General Assembly. It directs the special committee to "inquire into all the facts of the alleged bribery, and report their conclusions thereon to the house."

If in the prosecution of this inquiry any testimony tending to inculpate you in any degree with any questionable transaction be received, I assure you that your request to appear before the committee in such event will be most cordially and fully acceded to.

Very respectfully,

THOMAS A. COWGILL,
Chairman.

Hon. H. B. PAYNE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Now for Ohio, she is clear in her opinion about her Senator. That is settled, that in Ohio, from one end of it to the other, in all the investigation, in all the allegations, in all the vituperation that has been marked with any degree of extravagance anywhere, no imputation has touched him. I am right, then, in saying, as the report that myself and my colleagues signed says, we may discard this part of the matter from our consideration and from yours.

But I ask more than that. I ask that when you have in your body a member that has sat in the other House and now nearly two years with us, when in all the rage of these elements whose wrath we can measure as we feel it poured upon us Senators, he stands una exceptione major. If Ohio has many citizens that emerging from such a stream can meet this encomium and illustration as I pronounce it to you, and which all consent to, Ohio is fortunate not only in the Senators it has chosen but in those who might take their places when the course of nature should require a change.

Mr. President, this is either a sincere and hearty and unreserved opinion and expression, or it is not. From the Senator from Massachusetts it is sincere, and from the body of our committee entirely so. All of them are of that opinion. Ohio is of that opinion. And now why should it be thought necessary in our body that we should think that when our minds were wholly unclouded and unruffled on this subject there should be the least occasion for this Senate to ask us to make up our opinions about him on any new investigation? All that has been suggested that is pertinent and personal to the Senator is under this head of examination, and when we have with one voice, with one heart, with one mind come to this conclusion let us understand that if there is any occasion for further inquiry by this body it relates to the other branch of the subject. In that Mr. PAYNE has no more interest than the Senate at large; that is whether the election was pure.

Now, Mr. President, before taking up more distinctly and accurately the situation by which our votes are to be determined, let me call your attention to some of the preliminary and surrounding incidents of this inquiry.

Each House is in the same language endowed with the control and determination of the qualifications of its members. But let me point out to you under the Constitution and under the relations of the members of these two Houses a distinction that is not unimportant. When the House of Representatives pass upon a contested election of one who has or one who claims a seat in it, the result by which it vacates the seat carries the subject back to the same body, that is the people at large by whom the first election took place and whose defeat or disappointment restores them in their own authority under the Constitution to fill the place.

But under the arrangement by which Senators are elected, unless the same body that by political delegation has represented the majority and the feeling of the State presently pass on the accusation when immediately presented and the determination, as it should be, is promptly made here, what may happen? If delay takes place the intervention of two years has dispersed the assembly that has sent the Senator here, and the suffrage may have changed the power in the Legislature from one party to another, and you have not before you by any possibility the resolution of the question before you so that you return it to the constituency as the same duty and as the same authority under which and by whom it was at first determined. And now I present as one of the first duties of this Senate that there should be a presentation under facts, under opinions, under charges, under doubts, under fears about the purity of an election, that it should be presented to the Senate from the remonstrant constituency, that is the State and the Legislature and the people, if you please, behind it, so that we shall have the question pure and simple, did the election in this competition between candidates in the zeal and the eager taste and thirst for promotion, go beyond the bounds of the purity of an election. When it is thus presented to you, you decide that simple question and return to the same Legislature and to the same political majority the present exercise of their power that you have thus adjudged was, and it is supposed rightly, disturbed.

Mr. President, there may be occasions when later unknown discoveries may present themselves that make it inexorable in the demand of the Senate that it should be judged on its merits, the difficulty in getting evidence having caused the delay. But that case which I have supposed is not this case. This fulmination, this wrath of disappointed candidates and their friends inside the Democratic party was not delayed. The Senator from Maine has thought it suitable to read, as instructive to us, the views of these calm disputants and editors in the very heat of the discord. I have looked at them to fix the dates all through and I propound to you that all this open and all this direct attack and all this undying opposition growing out of supposed wrongs is made evident and promulgated in the dates that run from the 9th to the 26th of January following that election.

All Ohio was ablaze with its honor and the redress of it. All the defeated candidates and their friends were full of wrath at the elevation of one to the neglect of others. Thus this mass, glowing and inflamed, was ready to be hurled at this Senate. It was then ready to be put forward. Then it was that the Republican party, permeated through and through with the love of country, and the love of duty, and the love of purity, without any reference to the question of its relations to politics, saw the Senator-elect, in March, six weeks afterward, come here and take his seat as calmly on a summer's morning as a king would come to his throne. The Senator whose seat he succeeds in presented his credentials, and the Senator from Ohio in the political party of which he is so great an honor and of which I am a humble member held up the hand of the sworn Senator when he took his seat.

You may talk until you are hoarse about the power and the force and the value of this crowded and collected testimony in the press when it is two years old and when it is gathered up by the opposite party and presented at a different situation. I say by the other party. I do not know who collected it. I never saw it in the committee-room. I never dreamed that such matters were to be presented. I know of no means by which imponderable evidence can be made weighty by the aggregation of improbable evidence. We are dealing now with our Democratic brethren entirely, and they were in this frame and they were in this chagrin.

These editors, instead, as sometimes happens in political distractions, instead of meeting together for a Democratic feast on crow, decided that they would hold a crow carnival. If anybody has ever observed the proceedings of that most extraordinary concert among these birds will find that their parliamentary system is extremely simple. They all speak at the same time, and they all say the same thing. They have great power of voice but a very limited vocabulary. They have great energy of assertion, but great poverty of argument. They have great emphasis in their elocution, but they lack a little the rising and falling inflections that are so recommended by rhetoricians from Quintilian down to all scholars of that charming art. I never expected to see journalists collected in such a parliamentary search. I am casting no ridicule upon these editors. They did this as a part of their then present feeling and opinion and according to the custom of the country, as I understand it; and by that I do not mean Ohio, I mean the country at large.

But how do you account for it when within six weeks these credentials were sent here, that they were presented by Mr. Pendleton and received here, and there was no agitation whatever that I heard of on the part of the Democratic or the Republican active associates or their friends? I use this to show you how there is something in this idea, that at the bottom the great competition in our politics is, and is meant to be, not between men but between principles. Here we are to meet in debate the representation of the chosen men of these Republican opinions and of these Democratic views and purposes, and that is the agitation that the country at large is mainly interested in.

Now, in the convention of the two houses of Ohio, those of our party were so reduced to hopelessness as to carrying the election that we cast all our votes blank, a most extraordinary condition of things, not useful at the moment but doubtless looking to some proposition in the future. Usually when a party can not give a Senatorship it likes to pay a compliment and build up a future expectation. But our party seems to have been deaf to any of this sentiment of courtesy or to this interest of policy. What have we now to look at outside of the arrangements that have called our attention to the action of the press, or some portion of the press of Ohio?

It broke out the moment it was understood that a majority of the Republicans on this Committee of Elections had formed an opinion upon the evidence and the arguments before them that there was not such a presentation from that State as under the precedents of the Senate and the powers and duties of the Constitution they should proceed. I was alarmed, as every one should be, at such a terror as was let loose on us then. I did not know how it was then. I did not learn until the Senator from Ohio yesterday disposed of that question. He says he does not sympathize with any such attacks. He says that they are not the sentiments of the Republicans of the State nor of the editors of the State, but they are the opinions of the editor of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, who attacks everybody, Lincoln, and Grant, himself, the eminent President of the Senate, and whoever he pleases; that it is the manner, that it is the playfulness of the character and the conduct, and that nobody should be frightened by it.

I should not venture to speak of the editor of the Commercial Gazette quite in that tone. I think he might at least have been regarded by all as the man who scattered firebrands and death; but it seems it is on the plan that it is not the roaring of a lion at all. This position of the Senator reminded me of what we learn from Shakspeare on so many other occasions. When the young players were intending an entertainment with the comedy of Pyramus and Thisbé, they were frightened somewhat at the perils of the terrors that the drama would require, and after discussing the danger of killing Pyramus and Thisbé in the presence of the ladies the question then of the lion came up. Snout, who seems to have been a wise and prudent man, says:

Will not the ladies be afeard of the lion?

Starveling was also of a deliberative turn:

I fear it, I promise you.

These were statesmen, but they had not the versatility of politicians, and it was reserved for Bottom to find out the mode of not suppressing the lion in the play, and yet so demeaning him that he should not frighten the ladies:

Masters, you ought to consider with yourselves—

Says Bottom. He was a politician—to bring in, God shield us! a lion among ladies, is a most dreadful thing: for there is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your lion, living; and we ought to look to it.

Snout again:

Therefore, another prologue must tell, he is not a lion.
Nay—

Says Bottom—

you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion's neck; and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same defect,—Ladies, or, fair ladies, I would wish you, or, I would request you, or, I would entreat you, not to fear, not to tremble: my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life: No, I am no such thing; I am a man as other men are:—and there, indeed, let him name his name; and tell them plainly, he is Snug the joiner.

I am indebted to the Senator from Ohio who addressed us yesterday so forcibly for the ready mode of disposing of this aggravation which seemed to threaten not only the peace of Ohio but the future prospects of some of the most eminent men in the Republican party.

I come now, having dispersed these surrounding circumstances, to bring the Senate to the direct inquiry. I hope it will not be doubted that by a change of politics it was thought that an investigation in the house of Ohio might be more usefully made than before; and about that I make no opinion and no criticism. Politics is rectified and redressed by change of authorities from a majority to a minority and back, and back and forth. We do not expect in these occasions the same severity, the same zeal, and the same hope of success when it is promoted from a mere sense of patriotism and justice as we do when there is tinged with it a sharp and poignant purpose of political advantage. I do not complain of it.

But I want to call your attention to the very beginning of this inquiry. On a certain day there appeared in the Commercial Gazette a charge under the name of Mr. Donavin, a person about whom I know no more than appears here, and about whom I have no occasion to speak, charging four men and demanding an investigation. Let me not misrepresent this situation.

Whereas the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, of date of January 12, 1886, contains a printed statement, on the authority of S. K. Donavin, alleging grave charges against the official integrity and character of certain members of this house—namely, Hon. D. Baker, Hon. P. Hunt, Hon. W. A. Schultz, and Hon. G. Zeigler—so definite—so definite and precise in statement as to call for immediate action in order to vindicate the reputation of members of this House: Therefore,

Ordered that the committee be raised. The result of the examination I have heard stated to you and will not attempt to point out, so far as the persons are concerned. What was the reason why these four men were named? Because they had been before charged in the Commercial Gazette? Is it not a little cruel to initiate a charge under a power of stain upon what is to build up the future, by what appears to have been an absolutely gratuitous and unfounded accusation? I do not like such things.

All that has appeared about these four men was that they were members in the former house and they were members of the new house, and yet the accusations are said to have been in the columns of this newspaper "so precise and definite" as that investigation should be made. The result of the two months and a half investigation is that there is not a smell of fire on the garment of any one of these members who have passed through this furnace. I do not look with that entire confidence between the accusation and the result as evidenced here which has been pointed out to you in regard to these four men.

It is said that the actual matter of investigation was only about these four men; and by some strange misconception of the views of the report which I have signed, the Senator from Massachusetts seems to think that because of the claim which is made, and which we all concede, that this body here is the sole judge of the qualifications, and the membership, and the worthiness of Senators, therefore the house had no power of investigation beyond these four names or beyond the punishment of individual guilty complicity. That is the power of their punishment, but the range of their inquiry as informers of just cause for all looking into the matter in future is limited by no such constraint, nor was it so treated by this committee.

If I could find that in this report the investigating committee had limited themselves to these four men and had limited themselves to legal evidences against them, I should have regarded it as that house would have regarded it, that there was no occasion for presenting anything to us at all.

What are we to make of the motion now introduced, that the scope of their investigation was the pursuit and punishment of these four men? If they had confined themselves to that and had decided that no fault was found with them, why should the Senate be informed of the release and justification of these accused men? No, the investigation was intended, was calculated, was rightly contrived, was rightly exerted, providing it was carried on within legal evidence and just reason, to the scope of bearing upon the question of what then was to bring discredit and defect on the election. Let us understand a little what these people mean and what they gave in their own statement of their authority.

Mr. HOAR. I will ask the Senator whether he will read, if he pleases, the authority itself, to wit, the resolution of the Legislature which appointed them. That would seem to settle the question of authority.

Mr. EVARTS. That I believe has been recited in the resolution of the house which I read, not at this moment but when I was talking about the Commercial Gazette.

Mr. HOAR. The resolution is a limitation of their power in the whole matter.

Mr. EVARTS. I read it in terms. All the report does not go on the principle of selecting or arguing in details. It sets before you what this committee on the one side and the other, majority and minority, of the house committee, chose to present to that house and to this Senate. Let us see if they were restrained. Now what did they do?

Whenever our attention—

Within the scope of their investigation—was called to anything—

That is a pretty broad word which indicated—

That is pretty liberal—

the probable—

That is wide too—

employment of improper means to gain support—

That is liberal, "support"—

we followed the clews presented, on the theory that we were not only authorized, but in duty bound, to pursue any matter that promised, even remotely, to show the use of such means in connection with the election, because the discovery of one important fact, although having no immediate bearing upon the charge against the person named in the resolution, might lead to the discovery of facts having such bearing.

The house committee not only did not conceive themselves bound with restraint, but they caught at every clew and followed it, not on the question of these four men, but on anything that by implication might be wrapped up in the subject at all.

And furthermore—

Let me show you the largeness of their investigation, quite as large I think as our investigation would entitle us to use:

And furthermore, and upon the same theory, our inquiries were not confined to the technical rules of legal proof, but the committee availed itself of any source of information—admitted hearsay statements, and even the opinions of witnesses.

Whether we should go as wide as that, I will not dispute. My proposition is that there was not any basis for the proposition that the house confined its investigation to the four men, nor that it confined itself under any restraint whatever in the range and variety of evidence that was to be weighed. But the committee understood that that kind of evidence and that expression was to be taken as in their judgment in its parts and its detail as a quarry to be worked for truth. See the line they drew upon this subject:

But we consider in making this report no facts should be stated which are not sustained by testimony—

Would my friend from Massachusetts think these facts in the reports, sifted and presented by the two committees of the Ohio house, were limited to what was enough to convict? No.

But we consider in making this report no facts should be stated which are not sustained by testimony upon which a legislative body might base further action.

They do not limit it to what would convict. They had put forth everything in their report that they can extract from this mass that should furnish a fact upon which the very body to whom they were reporting should take further action.

In this report we have taken this true and I must think just method of presentation. Instead of picking out here and there and tinging this or that with color, justly if you please, judiciously if you please, we have given you appended to our report the whole body of the report of the majority and the minority, which the majority has described as containing all the facts upon which a legislative body might base further action. This being the preliminary process, what did the committee do? Did they say to the house of representatives, "our arm is shortened and our power to save is inadequate for the situation?" No, they did not say that. When they had pursued every clew and heard hearsay and heard opinions and everything else, how could they present themselves before the Ohio representatives with a pretension that there had not been an investigation, that it had been shortened, and that it could not be treated as the final point?

Why did they not ask for more power? Why did they not have it debated in the Ohio house of representatives? Why did they not say, "We have means by which we can follow this up, and we can punish the guilty at the law. We can bring evidence that touches the integrity of the election; give us the power and we will give you from this enlarged reaping a larger sheaf of evidence?" There was not a word of it.

Now I propose to show that in the action which was taken, in their own proposition, they did not believe that they had laid the basis for further investigation with profitable result—profitable, I mean, in producing truth; but they said, "Let us do this." And what is it that they proposed? This is their conclusion:

Although, as stated in the outset, the testimony developed nothing of an inculpating character concerning the members of this house named in the resolution of inquiry, we believe—

Now, what did they believe? They had given the evidence; they had given the facts, sifted and well brought out and presented. They had given the judgment that it did not inculpate these people. Now, what is it?

that circumstances surrounding the election of HENRY B. PAYNE, as one of the Senators to represent the State of Ohio in the Congress of the United States, as presented by the testimony, are such as to warrant—are such as to warrant us in recommending that an authenticated copy of the testimony and report be transmitted to the President of the United States Senate for the information of the body of which Senator PAYNE is a member, and for such action as it may deem advisable.

What?

Is it not respectful to the Senate that they should send us in volume and force, in precision and in estimate, what they deem sufficient to show that there is to be a result reached upon what they communicate? It would settle the question here for them to say that matters surrounding the election warranted them in recommending that this testimony should be sent to the Senate for them to do what they think right. It came here. It was received with deference and with all the attention which belongs to such a communication from a State. It was sent to this committee of the Senate, and the committee took it up. They did exactly what the Ohio house of representatives desired us to do. Look at this and see what on that we ought to do. The reason why they thought it was worth while to send it to us for us to look at, though they could not find anything in it of value or strength, was because of something outside; that is, the circumstances surrounding the election. When we took it up and read it through and looked at it, what was the result? How did the examination that we made in the first and tentative inquiry as confided to the chairman result? What did we find out then? "The charges against the four members"—I will shorten this as much as may be; it is from the chairman's report to us—"were not sustained, and the committee so report."

Then we agree about that. Now the Senator from Massachusetts, the chairman, proceeds:

But the inquiry took a wider range. There was evidence tending to show—
That Mr. PAYNE's name was not publicly suggested as a candidate for Senator until after the State election;
That it was not very prominently suggested until shortly before his election in January;
That many persons who had been supposed to favor Pendleton voted for PAYNE.

There I stop for the moment. Those were circumstances surrounding the election that presented it to the mind of the select committee of the Ohio house and they sent it to us. The whole value of this of imputation or suggestion of inquiry would be that Mr. PAYNE was an unknown person, unknown to his party, unknown to the public, unknown as within the range of popular favor and strength. It is not that anybody in Ohio thought so, not that anybody said so; but of what importance is it when a man eminent for those virtues which have been characterized here, when an honored man representing that State, when his fame and his credit of patriotism during the war, his identification with great domestic interests of the time, the relations to all the benefits of life—when that was the name which came in, of what earthly purpose is it to say that his name was not brought in and that money must be the reason why he was named? If money bought it, very well; but that money brought his name in that community is a perversion of all fair dealing with the situation.

In the nomination for the Presidency of the United States in the convention of the party to which I belong, the name of President Garfield as a candidate before that convention was not suggested till just before the ballot was to be taken. He was there as the champion of another candidate, another favorite son of Ohio. Did anybody say that when a new name was sprung upon that convention? I do not say that it had anything to do with fraud, because the subject does not admit of anybody's imputing that; but it was a wonder, and as well might it be said that it could not be accounted for except by treachery that he was nominated. No; he was nearly the most famous man in the hearts and minds of the Republicans of Ohio, among those in the hearts and minds of the whole people in this country of his political opinion, and when named it was the solution between the party competition.

As I have said, the subject of its having any connection with improper use of money or means does not approach the occasion, but the novelty, the recentness, and the addition of all the men inside that convention to one other candidate are circumstances which are covered by the proposition here:

That there was a widespread belief that corrupt means were used to procure the result.

I need not comment upon that. This is a recital of what is found in the testimony:

That one member was offered a large sum of money for his vote by another member;
That there were hearsay statements charging corruption as to several others;
That two members of the Legislature received large sums of money about the time of the election, of which they, being called as witnesses, gave no satisfactory account.

If that goes beyond stating that those elements of opinion about these four men were found in the testimony, I must regard that the honorable chairman perhaps overstated what would be regarded as an investigation on those points, not intentionally, but it is giving in the just way perhaps all that could be found.

That the principal managers of Mr. PAYNE's canvass, namely, Paige, McLean, Huntington, and Oliver H. Payne, did not testify before the committee—

That is a fact; it is in evidence. It is not pointed any more than that. The testimony before the Ohio house committee does not dare to say that any of these evaded or avoided an examination, or that they were not accessible to process some time or other within the time when the investigation went on. I am right about that, am I not? However that may be, the fact surrounding the allegation is that five men were not examined, when this committee examined anybody and everybody that they wanted—but there is no evidence tending to show the bribery of any member unless as above stated.

There is no evidence to connect Mr. PAYNE, the sitting member, with these transactions.

That is the result of the Ohio house committee as reported to us, and correctly, by the chairman of our own committee, no evidence to connect Mr. PAYNE:

And none tending to show that the result was changed or affected by such means.

It is not a cover, a suspicious allegation; it is a real one and an honest one, and to which the Senator from Massachusetts adheres here. What did he add to that? Anything about this testimony? Anything about what we were to investigate? Anything we were to consider? No; it is mere notification to us.

Informed that—

It is a short phrase; it means "I am informed as the chairman"—

Mr. LITTLE wishes to be heard.

That was all put before us.

That these persons—

The five men, apparently—kept out of State and reach of process.

Then we went on and examined. We heard Mr. LITTLE, in which it is no compliment to him to say, because his repute is already established, his examination and indorsement of the facts and the reasons were according to his ability as a lawyer and his honor as a man and a member of Congress. Did we fail in our duty, in our deference, in our respect? I am sure that gentleman will never open his mouth to say that there was disfavor of any kind or inattention during the whole of it. We heard the argument and were instructed by it, and instructed as to what was the most important, and what was the weightiest, and what was the fairest, and what the tendency, and what the effect, and under that instruction we found it was not enough. Now, are we to be told that we have shut against the examination? We have given you our opinions upon the matter that we did examine, and in this report we close our view, after showing what the power and authority of the State might be, by saying this:

That State has conducted and concluded its investigations into the election of Mr. PAYNE, and has placed the result before the Senate of the United States. It has attempted no further investigations either by the plenary power of its Legislature or through the functions of the courts of law. If, upon further examinations made by the State, through its Legislature or its courts, a case should be presented for renewed consideration by the Senate, within the rules and principles we have stated as governing the action of the Senate, the further action of the Senate will be governed by what may then appear.

And this, I submit, entirely considerate and judicious observation is spoken of by my learned friend from Massachusetts as a contemptuous proposition. Well, that is another thing. That is an epithet. I have read you what we said. I have read you what preceded our examination; I have read you the statement, and I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to agree that in our statement of the reach and scope of the evidence as being adequate to unseat the member if the number contained in the evidence that we considered was sufficient.

Now, we may go on a little further. Either this Ohio investigation was pressed to the extent or it was not. If it did not penetrate to the core and substance of the investigation it was a paltering on their part with the case and the honor of Ohio. It did probe the matter. It went just as far as it thought it could find evidence valuable and useful. If the latter, so necessary to the law, so necessary to their intelligence, is the true view of it, then the Senate can repose on that result; but if it be letting "I dare not" wait upon "I would" that followed that investigation, if these steps were like a sick man, three paces and then faltering, stopping, doubting, fearing, do not throw in the face of this Senate or this committee or these three Republicans who have come to this conclusion timidity or doubt.

The Ohio Legislature went to the bottom, or they did not—not that they went to the bottom of whether the decision would touch the title here. My learned friend, so good a lawyer and so experienced a statesman, has occupied a good part of the minority report and almost the whole of his argument by confuting what he calls a strange misconception, that we thought the Ohio Legislature had a larger control and dominion over the seat than we had. His reason against this barrier that he set up is overthrown, but it swings clear of any proposition that any of us have made. The point was this: We here are limited in our investigations to what will bear upon unseating or expelling a member; but the State has a larger range and a larger duty, and is not stopped in its investigation either by duty or responsibility, whether it finds twelve men, or six men, or four men, whether it finds that one bribe was administered and one received. That is their range, and we have none such. We have the range of the first, and the second, and the third, provided the count proposed to us is large enough in the evidence that they have presented to us on proper considerations that shows when the count is completed there will be enough to unseat. So all that argument of our proposition being very strange and being easily refuted is eliminated from our discussion.

But more strangely still my learned friend the Senator from Massachusetts quoted in evidence and read a passage from an eminent court and an eminent judge, the late Attorney-General Hoar, Mr. Hoar then on that bench. What did he read? He read a clause that the house of representatives, its powers and privileges, is not the final judge but that the warranty of its actions may be examined and determined by the court. That is plain. The question was whether within the range and the reach they had committed to them, or could embrace within what was committed to them, if the Legislature chose to do it, they had transcended it. They held, as might be expected, with the supreme court of New York, but now let me read the clause from this eminent lawyer that does touch this question and does touch our proposition:

The house of representatives has many duties to perform, which necessarily require it to receive evidence and examine witnesses. It is the grand inquest for the Commonwealth, and as such has power to inquire into the official conduct of all officers of the Commonwealth in order to impeachment. It may inquire into the doings of corporations, which are subject to the control of the Legislature, with a view to modify or repeal their charters. It is the judge of the election and qualification of its members. It has power to decide upon the expulsion of its members. It has often occasion to acquire a certain knowledge of facts, in order to the proper performance of legislative duties.

I do not need to travel beyond the confines of that one well-considered case to show what we say when we propound this:

At the outset of our observations we stated the limits which properly should control the action of the Senate, under the applicable clauses of the Constitution, and by the same reason the ends which should be proposed in its investigations and to which they should be confined. It is obvious that the province and duty of a State, in its investigations of fraud, corruption, and bribery in an election of Senator, are much more extensive. A State is not confined at all to the question whether the actual election brought in question involves the Senator personally in misconduct, or whether enough votes for him were effected by fraud, corruption, or bribery that would require his seat to be vacated, although himself free from imputation.

The State should execute its laws respecting the purity of Senatorial elections by the indictment and conviction of a single person who bribes or is bribed, whether the election is affected or not. The State should investigate as well to the end of better laws and surer execution of the laws. The State, too, is charged with the maintenance of "the honor of Ohio"— and its vindication rests with its own legislation, its own judiciary, and its own people, but it can not demand this vindication at the hands of the United States Senate, except as that may flow from investigations by that body within the limits of its constitutional powers and duties.

Will any lawyer, will any judge question the language thus fitly indicating the largeness of the duties and the largeness of the powers of the Ohio Legislature in taking care of its own purity in the matter of this very election? We stop on what you show to us as in the case of Mr. PAYNE that should induce us to regard as unworthy. You have shown us nothing. You can show us what you regard as evidence, as reaching not the bribery of one, not the bribery of two, not the bribery of three, not the bribery of four, but the bribery of enough to unseat. That is the logic of the proposition.

On the subject of the caucus I do not find that the Senator from Massachusetts differs from us on our view about the caucus. Let me state what we have said on that subject.

We have in our conclusions made no distinction between the use of fraud, corruption, or bribery in a caucus vote or in the legislative vote for a Senator. Although a caucus, or what proceeds in it, has no constitutional or legal relation to the election of a Senator, yet, by the habit of political parties, the stage of determination as to who is to be elected Senator and the influences, proper or improper, that produce that determination is that which precedes and is concluded in the caucus. So far as the question of personal delinquency or turpitude is concerned, no moral distinction should be taken between corrupt proceedings in caucus and those in the Legislature. How far any such distinction would need to be insisted upon in any case on the question of unseating a Senator, where he himself was not affected with any personal misconduct or complicity with the misconduct of others, we have no occasion in the immediate case or present attitude of the subject to consider or suggest.

Therefore, the notion that has been spread abroad that we confine ourselves to a technical rule about proceedings in the Legislature as distinguished from the proceeding in caucus is thus dispelled. For the purpose of our judgment, for the purpose of our examination we have made no distinction. Now let us see how the minority treat that subject. This is what they say about caucus:

What is the effect upon an election of Senator of bribery of voters in a caucus of the legislators who are to make the choice is a question upon which we prefer not to form an opinion until the evidence is before us.

Is not that exactly what I state? Then he proceeds to say:

The members of a caucus ordinarily deem themselves bound in honor to vote in the election for the person whom it nominates, by the vote of a majority, on condition that such person belong to their party and is fit for the office in point of character and ability. Bribery, therefore, which changes the result in the caucus, would ordinarily determine the election.

Did the minority state this proposition more clearly or more forcibly than our report? Compare them. The rule we have laid down for ourselves about the caucus is stronger and fuller than that laid down by the Senator from Massachusetts, but substantially they do concur, and we do not either of us propose to anticipate the somewhat embarrassed question about what the difference is when you come to unseating a member.

On that evidence all members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections did not think that, as then standing, it proved the case as it was before us, and we thought that was all properly before us then, and of course no one could have thought that further examination should be made.

Now, what happened afterward? I do not speak of any influence or a change of opinion on any of us, but I want to show the whole that has happened since, and whether that ought to affect that judgment of the majority of the Senators who thought that no further examination should be made. What is their character? Of presentation, of invitation or desire from sources entitled to great respect that we ought to yield to? I understand that the minority are disposed to put themselves upon the duty of this Senate not to exercise their own judgments upon the evidence laid before them, and reasonable prospects of assurance besides, but they must take it upon the request. Indeed I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to go so far in his argument as to say that when the Senator from Ohio, the President of the Senate, himself, stated that an investigation ought to be made for the honor of the State and the vindication of the Senate, it ought to be done.

Now, our propositions begin to divide. We have agreed on the facts and on the evidence as sifted and presented; but the question is as to what has come in in the arguments of the able and eminent lawyers, members of the House, who addressed us, the two resolutions from the house of representatives and the senate of Ohio, and a mass of newspaper comments which are collected in the minority report.

Let me look at these things. Look now at them deliberately. When I dissect these resolutions, first of the house and next of the senate of Ohio, see whether they add anything to what the house examined, sifted, and weighed when it sent the record on. It is only by inattention and heedlessness that any importance can be given to these other resolutions of the two bodies of the Legislature of Ohio besides what is conveyed in the first communication. Let me read first that which comes from the house, the same house:

Whereas it is the precedent in the United States Senate that charges of bribery must be directly made to warrant a committee of said body in proceeding to investigate the title of any United States Senator to his seat: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of Ohio, That in the investigation made under house resolution No. 28—

That is what we have already had—ample testimony—

Does that make it any longer than the pages of the record disclosed?—

ample testimony was adduced to warrant the belief—

Not conviction—

to warrant the belief that the charges—

Now look at it. Are you going to change your views and your conscience on this resolution?—

to warrant the belief that the charges heretofore made by the Democratic press of Ohio are true, to wit, that the seat of HENRY B. PAYNE in the United States Senate was purchased by the corrupt use of money.

They have heard somehow or other that we needed some formulation of charges. We took the papers as they came up to us originally, investigated them, examined them, but they think it necessary to formulate the charge.

Resolved, That in the investigation made under house resolution No. 28—

That is our record, and we are told this is something new that is sent to us. It is the opinion of the same house about the same evidence. What do they add?—

ample testimony was adduced to warrant the belief—

By that evidence—that the charges heretofore made by the Democratic press of Ohio are true, to wit, that the seat of HENRY B. PAYNE in the United States Senate was purchased by the corrupt use of money.

Now further:

That the honor of Ohio demands, and this house of representatives requests, that the said title of HENRY B. PAYNE to a seat in the United States Senate be rigidly investigated by said Senate.

That testimony under resolution No. 28 we sifted, and what the Democratic press of Ohio charged we have in this dole of objurgation that has been read to the Senate. Therefore we do not find anything new here, nothing but a repetition, and instead of an enlargement there is an absolute limitation to what was then in the mind of the Legislature in sending this last resolution that they did not know nor care for anything beyond the testimony before the Ohio committee and the newspapers indicating Democratic opinion in that State.

And now look at the senate resolution:

Whereas by common report, suggested and corroborated by the public press of the State without respect to party, and by a recent investigation of the house of representatives, the title of HENRY B. PAYNE to a seat in the United States Senate is vitiated by corrupt practices and the corrupt use of money in procuring his election.

They go back to the investigation and the resolutions of which we have the record. Will any Senator say to me that this recital, if it had left out that record and had simply put it on "common report, suggested and corrroborated by the public press of the State without respect to party," would have presented a charge for investigation by itself? Does it add anything that we have not already got, by basing their reason for asking intervention upon the investigation already made? Now another whereas:

Whereas it is deemed expedient, in order to secure a thorough investigation of his said election as Senator by the United States Senate, that the belief of the General Assembly in this regard be formulated in a specific charge: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That in the opinion of the General Assembly, and it so charges, the election of HENRY B. PAYNE as Senator of the United States from Ohio, in January, 1884, was procured and brought about by the corrupt use of money, paid to or for the benefit of divers and sundry members of the Sixty-sixth General Assembly of Ohio, and by other corrupt means and practices, a more particular statement of which can not now be given.

What else have we here? We have not anything except resolution No. 28 and the public rumor. We had that before. We had not forborne to examine that; we had not forborne to go into that. We had not failed to give all weight to these records and these rumors and these newspaper fulminations. We have omitted in the report which we three have signed any reference to the resolutions of the Republican committee of Ohio or the Republican editors in convention assembled. Whether they were before our committee at any time I do not know. They are here. They are no new matter. Will any Senator tell me that this aggregation and new presentation in the collective form of a Republican committee, however respectable, or of an editorial convention, however respectable and important in their character, in their conduct, in their purposes, in their wishes, adds to the preliminary investigation of the house and the sifting and weighing of the evidence and the presentation of it?

In regard to the evidence contained in this record, the committee who have united in this report of the three has produced that which the majority of the house of Ohio presented of their own sifting, of their own weighing, of their own presentation of all that they thought was worthy of future action—future action there or future action here. They do not say that other investigations would not show more and else. We are not to look at it in that attitude. But if the committee do not read these papers, if the Senate do not read them, then they take at haphazard the pointed and sincere views of this or that Senator on that allegation.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] last evening brought forward a single item that attracted my attention as showing the absurdity of the pretension that value could be attached to these imputations. There were two representatives, Mooney and Roche—were they the labor representatives?

Mr. TELLER. They were the labor representatives.

Mr. EVARTS. Here are two plain men; they are chosen by their fellow-citizens for the purpose of being thus represented. Now look and see what you can find:

Vernon E. Hanna, of Columbus, testified that at the time of the Democratic Senatorial caucus in 1884 he roomed at the family residence of W. P. Brown, in said city, and that two members of the General Assembly—Messrs. Mooney and Roche—roomed in the same building; that at this time those members did not have keys to the house; that on the night of said caucus he agreed with Mr. Brown—that, as they would probably not be in until late, he would admit them to the house, as he would probably be up until they came; that he waited for their return until about 4 o'clock in the morning, when they came; that he admitted them to the house, and that after they entered there was a conversation between them in his presence in reference to money that they had, and that some feeling was manifested because one had received $50 more than the other—one seeming to feel pretty hard that he should not have had as much as the other; that they had money in their hands, in rolls, which the witness saw, but were not counting it; that he thought the respective amounts mentioned by them as having been received were $300 and $350; that he was not acquainted with them, and fixes their identity by the circumstances mentioned and others; and that in his mind he connected the fact of the possession of that money with rumors in the community that money was being used to influence votes for United States Senator.

The boarding-house keeper—

Not from any remarks made by the men, but because of existing circumstances. Would you like to send this Senate out upon an inquiry of that kind? Here was this boarding-house; here were these members; here was Ohio; here was law; here were all the magistracies and all the apparatus for investigation.

James Finley Brown, of Columbus, testified that he is a brother of W. P. Brown, mentioned by Vernon E. Hanna, the witness last quoted, and lived with him; that he is acquainted with Messrs. Mooney and Roche, representatives in the Sixty-sixth General Assembly from Cuyahoga County; that they roomed at said brother's house in the forepart of the session of 1884; that the former staid during the whole session, and the latter about two or three weeks; that in the afternoon of a certain day, which, according to his best impression, was of the date that HENRY B. PAYNE was nominated for United States Senator, they asked about keys, and wanted an arrangement so they could get in that night; that his impression is they attended the Senatorial caucus that night; and that he thinks the nomination of Mr. PAYNE that night was announced in the newspapers the next morning.

I do not think we could convict anybody on that. Now the Ohio committee goes on:

The committee has received from Mr. Mooney, by mail, his affidavit denying that he roomed or lodged at Mr. Brown's "establishment" on the night of the Democratic Senatorial caucus, and stating that he had not previously lodged or visited there, and did not go there to lodge for several days thereafter.

I wish to make no reflection upon this committee of Mr. Cowgill. I do not quite agree with the views of the Senator from Maine that there was not much merit in the action of the committee. I do not know the circumstances or Mr. Cowgill's general repute for ability, but I must say that I think he was very respectable and candid.

But in the affidavit he omits to state where he was the night of the caucus.

Meeting the question whether he was in that house, saying not only that he was not there that night, but he had not been ever before and did not go till days after. Is it not more like Dogberry than the administration of justice to mark and note that this man did not state where he was that night? I do not want to convict Mr. Cowgill of impropriety, but I only want to show what little confidence is to be given to this general observation. Now I want to show you what the minority report of the Ohio house committee was on this matter:

Touching the testimony of one V. E. Hanna—

And this is very well worth considering—

Touching the testimony of one V. E. Hanna, from pages 384 to 405, inclusive, of the stenographer's copy of testimony, where he undertakes to give positive evidence, on page 384, in answer to the sixth question, he gives four distinct and positively contradictory statements, as follows:

"Q. Were you in the city of Columbus on the night of the Senatorial caucus?"

"A. I was; I can not say whether it was the night of the caucus or not; but I was here at that time; I might have been out of town that particular night, as I have forgotten the date of the caucus."

All reverted to that day, fixed in his testimony about his sitting up for them, because they were going to the caucus and they had not keys, and he would not keep the landlord up, but he would sit up and let them in; and he did sit up and he did let them in at 4 o'clock in the morning. I do not know whether Mr. Mooney spoke the truth or not; but I know that Mr. Hanna did not speak the truth that time, and Mr. Mooney is entitled to every credit.

I will read one other passage to show you the nature of what is thrown out at large about the liberality of the display of money. Well, well, these gentlemen, if they were engaged in a business transaction jealously watched and greatly resented, did go to work in a very queer way, because they had been prosperous, were presumed to be sharp people, and I suppose they were. I never saw them; I do not know who they are; except from the relationship of one to the Senator by his name I should not know anything about him at all, and never expect to see him, except by chance, which may happen to all men. They had this place where anybody could get in that chose, and the demonstration of money was profuse; and then, strange to say, after it was all over and after the press had opened on them from the 9th of January to the 25th, they went around saying how much this senator or that representative got—that is, it was reported they said so; there is no proof that they said so—and the total amount expended was stated to be from $65,000 to $100,000. Whether Mr. Paige is a wise man or a fool I do not know. I should think the Senator and the Senator's son-in-law would know whether he was a fool and an ass or not. Here is a nice little piece of evidence that has been insisted on as showing the magnitude of the demonstration as to money; and as this narrative is complete, let me read it:

James Boyle—

I do not read from the testimony at large, but from the committee's report—

James Boyle, correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette, testified that a business man in the city of Columbus related to him the following in substance: He—had just that day come down from Akron; that a button had come off his coat; that he had gone into a small tailor-shop, kept, he thought, by a Hebrew.

That is this business man—

That is the only identification of the shop or the man, that he thought it was kept by a Hebrew. I suppose, then, it was not kept by a Christian.

While sitting behind the stove, waiting for the button to be sewed on, a young man burst into the store and, in an excited manner, ran to the proprietor of the store—and said he had had a wonderful experience in Columbus. * * * From the talk of this young man he was an employé of Mr. David R. Paige.

That is, the Hebrew—

That is the entrance; we have got to that.

He stated that Mr. Paige thought it better for him to come down and attend to the store (Mr Paige keeping a store at Akron, and Mr. Paige being then in Columbus working in the interest of Mr. PAYNE).

So if he was an employé he was an employé in that store. I do not know what it was, whether it was groceries or hardware.

The young man said he had never seen so much money together as he saw in an inner room attached to the room occupied by Mr. PAYNE as headquarters. He said that he was the one who passed the members of the Legislature in to get the money. He raised his hands [illustrating] and said the money was in stacks.

Boyle is pointed out as a correspondent of the Commercial Gazette, of Cincinnati. I do not decry his value at all. A business man of Akron told him that he went into a tailor's shop to get a button sewed on, and a young man rushed in and he thought from what he said that he was in Paige's employ, and then he went on to say what he has said, expressing his wonder at the amount of money. Now, let the boy, or the Hebrew, or the business man tell us about these facts. When one man sees stacks of money they must have been seen by some others; and one man got in, not by mistake, because every one was invited to go in, and he says he thought he saw something sticking out that looked green; he thought it was some advertisement, but he picked it up and found it was a twenty-dollar bill.

Mr. President, I have forborne, in the exhibition of this testimony, picking it out in detail. I have presented the whole in the report that we have signed after it was sifted, stated in the language used by the committee of Ohio. Judge ye whether we are in fault for not going further than that committee did. I show you the Legislature in their respective resolutions plant themselves on the record, plant themselves on the newspapers, plant themselves on rumor, and after we have formed our opinion they produce for us nothing more than requests and a representation of what it was expected might be proved.

Mr. President, the resolution we have presented is that upon what now stands before us, the investigation should not proceed. We have not declined to examine and fairly weigh everything that was presented to us; and here you have the conclusion of seven out of nine, and the minority put their ground, as it seems to me, upon principles distinguishable from the established principles of law, and upon reasons and facts not disclosed in the evidence.

I then put it to you distinctly, that by the recognized authorities found in the records of your election cases, the question is settled in regard to the degree of weight required to inculpate a Senator of personal misconduct. In the case of Humphrey Marshall, although he himself desired that the investigation should be made, the Senate concluded that that could not give it a right and duty to investigate. We have always demanded that people who have charges to make against Senators shall put them in sincere, in secure, and in definite form.

Then if you proceed to the Pennsylvania election as to the Senator from that State in 1857 it was settled that a definite statement should be required that should carry proof or proposition of proof or concurrence of proof that it covered a sufficient number of votes to change the seat of the inculpated member. So in the Bogy case and in the Kansas case. You find in the record of these examinations that there has been a special complaint in every case except a very peculiar one which I know very little about, the case of Pomeroy, which seems to have been investigated in 1872 as to a charge in regard to an election as far back as 1867. Senators may correct me if I am wrong, but I believe that is the only exception where there have not been present investigations by a resolution on the state of things as then present.

Mr. President, I have no occasion, my colleagues have no occasion, to justify or defend our action. We are here; everybody knows it. We are members of the Senate; we are members of the committee; we have made our report, and we have spread out our reasons; we have given you our views of the condition and of the duty of the Senate; we have given you our views of the evidence; we have expressed our views of the desires that have been superadded in resolutions of the eminent and best considered presentation by the two Houses, the presentation of a committee of a political party, the presentation of the convention of the newspaper editors. I disparage them not; I give them their weight; I do not detract from them; but they all fall short of the character required to give any augmentation of proof.

I implore you then to stand upon the firm ground that we are the judges of when we should be moved to proceed further or to stop in the examination. We do not need any enlargement, any definition, any assurance, any application; but as we stand here we stand together that on the evidence presented, if nothing further was shown, we should not act. We differed as to whether upon request or demand, honorable and valuable demand, a further investigation should be made. I implore you then to stand upon a basis that will comport with a just determination, that will be a good rule and a good law, that will prevail whether the Republicans shall be in the minority or in the majority. I wish to hold the Democratic party when they shall be in the majority to the sound, sensible rules adopted in previous determinations, and however liberal and however inviting may be the field of argument and of persuasion that where there is prevalence of opinion we should surrender our judgment, or adopt the rule that what is asked for must be granted because it is asked for by respectable sources, by honorable men, and by measures of argument that are entitled to respect.

If this matter, resting thus as it has for two years since the first institution of the complaints, is again to be presented upon investigation through the courts or through the Legislature, our attention will be called to it; but we are not responsible for a deficient and a doubtful estimate of the testimony that we have got coupled with the fact that it is the only testimony presented as affecting the election. We are not to depart from that and take up new demands.

And now let us say a word by the way, that we are not insensible at all in regard to the mischiefs and the evils of corruption. We can not be saved from them merely by good laws. Unexecuted good laws do not help us. They do not maintain themselves; they do not promote purity; they are not a terror to the evil doer. Executed law is the measure of the law and of the policy and of the wisdom of a nation. The way to discourage is to punish. The way is to separate it from political consideration, nor make pursuit and your vindication and your punishment wait upon the settlement of other considerations, however great and important. Punish the man that bribes; punish the man that is bribed; then you do touch the evil; then the honor of your State, then the safety of your State, then the duty of your State are all served. But a readiness to be indifferent, to be silent, to be careless, and to be uncircumspect in the maintenance of the general administration of your domestic laws, is not the way to maintain honor or to promote security. We shall fall, if we fall in our general scheme of government, not by just, firm, humane legislation; we shall fall by amplifying the pages of the statute-book and leaving unpunished the violators of those laws. Corruptissima in republica, plurimæ leges is the maxim of philosophy and history.

I commend these considerations not only to the great State of Ohio but to all the States of the Union. I commend them to the attention of the party to which I belong. I propound them to the party that opposes those views of politics which I espouse and maintain. Do not think that the details of law can ever be wisely adjusted and only an appeal for signal and prominent instances of attention to execution of rightful purposes when larger considerations are exhausted.

I follow the law and the fact and the truth here and elsewhere. On that position the Senate never can be shaken in the opinion of itself or of its country.

Mr. HARRIS. I understand the question is on the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. HARRIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Chair have the question stated so that the Senate may understand just what the vote is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts from the minority of the committee will be stated.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to investigate the charges affecting the title to the seat of Hon. HENRY B. PAYNE, and to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and employ a clerk and stenographer, and to sit during the recess of the Senate; and that the expenses of the investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not think I ought to consume what remains of another day by exercising even the privilege which I reserved to myself last night to reply to what should be new in the argument of the Senator from New York. The fall of the year is approaching, the golden-rod is in blossom in the meadows in Massachusetts, and the chirp of the autumn cricket is coming into our windows. I have been at work here hard, night and day, since the beginning of December, and for one I long to enjoy what to most of the Senate as to me is the chief reward of labor, the chief delight of living, to go home and see my folks. I do not wish, therefore, to prolong this debate, even under the temptation of replying at length to the Senator from New York.

I may perhaps be indulged in occupying two minutes in saying what seems to me to be the sum and substance of that honorable Senator's argument, stripped of its emotion, its passion, its eloquence, its wit, its moral exhortations, which he must permit me to say seem strangely out of place on the side on which they are invoked.

His argument reduces itself to these two propositions, and I desire to submit them to the lawyers of the Senate: First, knowledge should precede investigation, not follow it. That is his first postulate. The second is, that the people of the whole country are not so concerned in the question whether their lawmakers sit in the Senate by incorrupt title as that that question should ever be investigated in their behalf if the people of a State have been remiss or tardy in investigating the matter themselves. If any other proposition can be found left after the Senator's argument has been in alembic, I do not now think what it is.

Mr. President, I wish, however, to say a word in regard to one matter of detail with respect to what the Senator said as to the reading of the Ohio proceedings and the jurisdiction of the Ohio committee. He concedes that the house of representatives of Ohio did not delegate to their committee any jurisdiction upon this inquiry. They proceeded under a recorded resolution confining their inquiry to the guilt or innocence of four men. That he does not deny, although he has read one passage in which they say that they looked into the general matters of the election in order to get a general view of the situation. He does not deny either that they did not express and did not undertake to express any opinion upon the question of the election one way or the other.

So he bases that part of his argument upon the failure to draw a particular conclusion or to develop a particular fact by a tribunal to whom no jurisdiction over the question was committed, and who never proceeded to attempt to arrive at a decision upon the question themselves.

Mr. President, I sympathize with the feeling which the honorable Senator has expressed as well as his colleagues who signed the report, in regard to the bitter attacks which have been made upon their position. I value the good name and reputation with the people of the United States of the gentlemen who signed the report as they value their own. The reputation of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN] is not only dear to his countrymen, growing out of distinguished and illustrious military service, but it is one of the treasured possessions and the most valued forces which are among the resources of the party to which I belong for its future action. I need not say that I have the pride and pleasure not only of a countryman but of a kinsman in that of the honorable Senator from New York. I believe that the attacks which have been made upon those three Senators are at this moment the strength and the sole strength, even after having heard their arguments, of the cause which they advocate. Stripped of the desire on this side of the Chamber, stripped of the desire on that side of the Chamber to stand by these three gentlemen under this most atrocious fire that has been leveled at them, I do not believe their report would command the conclusions of the gentlemen who sit in these seats.

Mr. President, it is needless to say, however that may be regretted or however natural that may be, that it is not a consideration which ought to move Senators in making a precedent upon which the purity of the election of members to seats in this body is hereafter so largely to depend.

I will not say that the adoption of this majority report will be a disgraceful fact; that would not be parliamentary or courteous or proper; but I do say that looking at the truth as it is given to me to see it, it will be the most unfortunate fact in the history of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the adoption of the amendment reported by the minority of the committee the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. LOGAN. Which is the vote to be taken on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the resolution of the minority.

Mr. LOGAN. Is that offered as a substitute for the majority report?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As an amendment to the majority report.

Mr. HARRIS. In the nature of a substitute.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let that be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be read again for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections, or any subcommittee thereof, be authorized to investigate the charges affecting the title to the seat of Hon. HENRY B. PAYNE, and to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and employ a clerk and stenographer, and to sit during the recess of the Senate; and that the expenses of the investigation be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. EVARTS. This resolution is the resolution of the minority, and the motion now I understand is that it be substituted for the majority resolution. The vote remains to be taken on the majority resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is an amendment, practically a substitute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the resolution reported by the majority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority resolution will be reported.

Mr. HOAR. As I understand it, the majority accompanied their report with a motion that the committee be discharged.

Mr. PUGH. I was about to make that statement.

Mr. HOAR. That is the pending motion. To that I move as an amendment the resolution which has been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conclusion of the majority report will be read.

Mr. PUGH. I made the motion that the Committee on Privileges and Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the subject in conformity with the precedents.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear from the authentic report.

Mr. PUGH. The proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts is an amendment of that motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the report made by the committee read; what it is that they recommend.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conclusion of the report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Your committee having made a protracted and exhaustive examination of the matters referred to them, report:

First. That HENRY B. PAYNE has not been charged with having anything to do personally, or with having any personal knowledge of, connection with, or participation in any act, or anything that may have been done, or charged as having been done, that was wrong, criminal, immoral, or reprehensible in his election; that no member of your committee, and no witness, representative, or other person, has expressed the opinion or intimated any belief or suspicion that HENRY B. PAYNE is or was connected in the remotest degree, by act or knowledge, with anything that was or may have been wrong, or criminal, or immoral in his election.

Second. A majority of your committee report that on the whole case as presented to them they recommend that the Senate make no further investigation of the charge involving the right of HENRY B. PAYNE to his seat.

Your committee ask to be discharged from further consideration of the matters referred to them, and that the whole subject be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I vote "nay." I was paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], but have transferred that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR], but information has come to me that the Senator from Minnesota has stated that both gentlemen would vote the same way. So I have taken the liberty to transfer the pair of the Senator from Nevada to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]. I vote "nay." The Senator from Iowa is paired with the Senator from Nevada on all questions connected with this case.

Mr. PLUMB (when Mr. MORGAN'S name was called). The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] is paired generally with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN], both of them being absent, but on this question the Senator from Colorado is paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH].

I have been requested to state in connection with the pair of the Senator from Alabama on two other questions that he seems to think the pair in his absence has not been sufficiently stated, that he would have voted against the Hennepin Canal amendment and against the oleomargarine bill. He thinks in his absence that matter has not been stated sufficiently. In connection with his pair on this question, I will ask that that be put into the RECORD also. On this question the Senator from Alabama is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have been paired for some time with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I had a telegram from him last evening, saying to me that I might vote on this question as I saw proper, as he had no information sufficient to base any fixed opinion upon. I therefore vote "nay."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SEWELL). The present occupant of the chair will state that he was paired with his colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON], but believing he would vote "nay" on this question, the Chair votes "nay."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. I understand if he were here, he would vote "nay." If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 44; as follows:

YEAS—17.

Blair,	Hale,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Conger,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dawes,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Oreg.,
Edmunds,	Hoar,	Palmer,
Frye,	McMillan,	Platt,

NAYS—44.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—15.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Pike,
Allison,	George,	Morgan,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,	Spooner.
Dolph,	McPherson,	Payne,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the adoption of the majority report.

Mr. HOAR. I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On that question the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR].

Mr. DOLPH (when his name was called). I announce again my pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. GEORGE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. PIKE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I announce again my pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 44, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—44.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sawyer,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution reported by the majority of the committee is adopted. [Applause in the galleries.]

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have order, Mr. President, or let the galleries be cleared.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I received a telegram this morning from the lieutenant-governor of Ohio in which he desired me to have published in the RECORD his letter in full from which I read extracts the other day in my remarks. I ask permission that it be done.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to know what is going into the RECORD. Let it be read if it is to be put in the RECORD.

Mr. LOGAN. If gentlemen want it read, certainly let it be read. Mr. Kennedy has already published it in all the Ohio papers and he sent a slip to me. I have not even compared it with the letter to see whether it is correct.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. An extract from that letter has been read and commented upon. I was shown by a member of the Ohio delegation in the other House a copy of that letter, and it seemed to me, taking it altogether, a kindly and affectionate letter, which did justice to the Senator, and I think it ought to be read in the hearing of the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN. I am not objecting to its being read, but the remark of the Senator is entirely uncalled-for about the kindness of the letter. I had said nothing about that letter. I was only going to say that I had no objection to its going into the RECORD. I took the extracts from the letter that censured me and read them here. Now I am willing the whole thing shall be read. If the gentleman thinks it will do any good to hear it, he can have it read as often as he pleases; I have no objection. If it will do the lieutenant-governor of Ohio any good anywhere on earth, I hope he will have it published all over the United States if that will benefit him.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Full text of the letter of General Bob Kennedy to Senator LOGAN, only a portion of which the latter presented in his speech yesterday.

BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO, June 26.

DEAR SIR: You have not had in all Ohio a warmer or more devoted friend than myself. From my early acquaintance in the Army, renewed in 1878 during our campaigning in Ohio, and until this hour, I have been one of your admirers, and my chagrin at your failure to secure the Presidential nomination in Chicago in 1884 was not appeased by your nomination to the Vice-Presidency by that convention. The soldier element of Ohio has of late joined with me in an earnest admiration of your services and fearlessness, and I am persuaded that Ohio, without any forgetfulness of her own distinguished sons, would have given you a warm and hearty indorsement by her vote for the Chief Magistracy, if opportunity had offered. For all these personal reasons I am led to deeply regret that your judgment has led you to cast a vote upon the question of the investigation of the shameful frauds perpetrated in the election of HENRY B. PAYNE to the United States Senate which will forever prevent an inquiry into them. By what road of inquiry you were led to such conclusions I am at a loss even to guess.

The infamy and outrage of this well-known purchase, established long since to the satisfaction of every Republican of Ohio, and acknowledged and charged by one-third of the Democratic newspapers, and one-half of the Democrats of Ohio, are so flagrant and open as to cry for speedy and merited rebuke. Covered up as it has been by the most infamous perjury, yet its glaring villainies were so exposed that they asserted themselves in spite of false swearing and cowardly flight, and it has become to the people of Ohio the one great crime of their State demanding investigation, exposure, and punishment. I do not think I make the assertion too broadly when I say that your vote upon the question will be disapproved by every Republican in Ohio not a purchased and hired defender, and by at least one-half of the members of the Democratic party of this State. There have been so many charges of tampering and corruption with those whose duty it was to investigate the matter that I should say to you frankly that such charges have also been made against the committee of the Senate charged with the duty of determining this question of an investigation.

I am free to say that the matters which have come to my knowledge have led me to believe that the coal-oil gang thought that their money was sufficient to protect them under all circumstances, and that no one was too high and exalted to have his price. To such an end and to such a point had they come that the debauching of legislators in the securing of votes they regarded as among the easiest of their conquests. To say that Ohio is astonished at the report brought by telegraph from Washington that the Senate committee, by the vote of 7 to 2, had determined not to investigate, and that 7 including your vote, is to put it mildly indeed. And the telegraphic report says you desired your vote kept secret. I do not wonder much at that, and that any one who would vote to permit a man to keep his seat in the United States Senate after it had been purchased by infamy and outrage and corruption should desire his vote to be kept secret is a part of the eternal fitness of things. It is strange that the Democratic caucus, purchased by so much money and evidenced by so much corruption, should also have desired the votes of that caucus kept secret after it had venally declared in favor of HENRY B. PAYNE. I maintain this simply to be an unfortunate coincidence.

Your reasons may be good and satisfactory to yourself, but unless you can give them to the people of Ohio, not in secret, but by open and outspoken words, justified by good and sufficient reasons, they will not hesitate to condemn you and leave upon you the suspicion of undue influence. You were to a great number of the people of Ohio a political idol, and they would have hailed your elevation with delight, but I do not believe that your nomination would meet with a hearty indorsement, and I doubt if it would be possible for you, if nominated, to carry the election in this Republican State, so thoroughly do the honest people of this State condemn and despise fraud of every description that they are not in any mood to justify or excuse those who are patient with or ready to overlook or palliate it. This untold infamy has so cried out for punishment, and the people of the State have become so much inflamed by such open, notorious, and boasting frauds, that their patience has been entirely exhausted. I do not know what could be said in defense of a man who holds his seat in the face of open and formulated charges of bribery and corruption, and those charges made not only by his political opponents, but by members and newspapers of his own party, and who has neither demanded inquiry nor courted investigation, so that he might show them to be false and demonstrate his own honesty and integrity and the honesty and integrity of his seat, but who contents himself under such charges to remain silent while his hirelings are moving heaven and earth to put an end to all inquiry and investigation.

A sensitive man, and one thoroughly imbued with a knowledge of his own innocence, would have been the first to demand a speedy investigation and justification, and would have scorned to hold a seat tainted by fraud. But this man, whether by his own election or by the advice of those who know of the infamy surrounding the purchase of his seat, chooses to remain silent, and thus tacitly admit to the world his guilt. Is it wonderful that under such circumstances the people of Ohio are not enthused over your vote, and are questioning its justification and the reasons that impelled it? I challenge any man to find a single Republican in Ohio who will indorse your action, unless that man has been in some manner purchased by the frauds of the most infamous grade of political knaves this or any State ever knew, and I know that neither price nor money was permitted to be spared to accomplish these nefarious ends. Paid attorneys and purchased lobbyists are laboring for the covering up of their infamies, and now the Senate, to put over them the cloak of virtue. God help the country when it can not depend upon such as you. This infamy cries out for justice, and not for covering up of crime. And you are the one to whom the people looked with assurance of confidence, and in this sublime hour you ask that your vote may be kept secret from the people.

If HENRY B. PAYNE was rightfully elected as a Senator from Ohio, no harm could possibly come from an investigation into the frauds charged against him, but upon the contrary, he would have been offered every opportunity to have proven them false, and to have justified himself and established his integrity. His course and the course of the Senate committee are equally unjustifiable. It is simply saying to fraud and infamy, no matter how glaring, the cloak of Senatorial courtesy, if not the cloak of Senatorial purchase, can hide it from view. It is simply a prisoner whose guilt is undoubted, and whose conviction is assured, but who has availed himself of the technicalities of the law to quash the indictment, and has escaped by reason of informality, but in the judgment of the people of Ohio he stands condemned already, and his excusers and defenders find no sympathy with the honest and fair-minded people of this State. I regret that you have so shaken my faith in your judgment, and have so speedily overthrown one of my political idols. With the hope that you may have better reasons for your vote than I think it possible for you to have, with kind regards, I am

Yours, very truly,

ROBT. P. KENNEDY.

General JOHN A. LOGAN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

The message also announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors; asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIS, Mr. BLANCHARD, and Mr. T. J. HENDERSON, managers of the further conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9208) to permit the entry free of duty of foreign goods for exhibition at the fourth biennial exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. MCMILLAN submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7480) "making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
O. D. CONGER,
MATT. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. S. WILLIS,
NEWTON C. BLANCHARD,
THOMAS J. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the further conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. RANSOM were appointed.

BOTTLERS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION EXHIBITION.

The bill (H. R. 9208) to permit the entry free of duty of foreign goods for exhibition at the fourth biennial exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the bill may lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table.

CLAIMS OF VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to certify to the Senate the claims of the volunteer soldiers adjusted by the accounting officers of the Treasury since his last report of such claims and up to July 20, 1886, latest day possible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let that go over; I should like to hear it explained in the morning.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is simply to get for use on the deficiency bill the allowances made to the soldiers, their widows and orphans, in order that they may be paid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not object to it as now explained. I merely wanted to save time on the appropriation bill.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say to the Senate that at 6 o'clock I will move a recess until 8 o'clock, hoping to finish the bill to-night. I hope Senators will consent to a recess at 6 o'clock and will be here promptly at 8 o'clock, and I believe if so we can complete the bill to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will commence where it was left off.

Mr. BECK. I shall vote for a recess, but with no hope of closing the bill to-night. I do not propose to discuss any matters in it except those questions the House has sent over to us in regard to the change of our currency, our certificates, and those matters. In regard to them I propose to be heard at some length. I do not think we can discuss them to-night.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order. I was unable to hear a sentence or hardly a word of what the Senator from Kentucky said. If it is important I should like to hear it.

Mr. BECK. I remarked that while I desired to progress with the bill and was willing that we should take a recess from 6 to 8 o'clock, I did not regard it possible to finish the bill to-night. The House sent over very important propositions relative to all the questions of our coinage and currency and the use to be made of silver certificates, upon which I expect to be heard and heard at some length, and I do not intend to discuss them to-night.

Mr. ALLISON. I now move that at 6 o'clock the Senate take a recess until 8.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that at 6 o'clock to-day the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations report to strike out the clause from line 1861 to line 1869, inclusive, as follows:

Washington Monument: For completion of the Washington Monument, namely: For earth filling and grading around the monument, filling pond just north of monument, office expenses, including rent of necessary office rooms, and for each and every purpose connected with the completion of the monument, $57,000, to be expended under the direction of the joint commission created by the act of August 2, 1876.

Mr. INGALLS. I wish the chairman of the committee would explain upon what ground that proposition was stricken out. It appears to me that, the monument having been completed in its structure, provision should be made as was contained in the bill as it came from the House for necessary work at the base for its protection. There may be information before the committee that has not been communicated to the Senate, but in absence of other knowledge than I now possess I should be inclined to vote against this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The provision as it came from the House appropriated $57,000, and it will require $107,000 to make the improvement that is suggested by the engineer in charge.

Mr. INGALLS. Is that the earth-work, or is the plan that has sometimes been suggested, of an ornamental structure about the base with bronze cannon, included in the $107,000?

Mr. ALLISON. No; the $107,000 will be required to complete the earth-work as suggested by Colonel Casey. A portion of the committee thought it unwise to fill up the grounds in front of the monument.

Mr. INGALLS. Babcock Lake?

Mr. ALLISON. It is necessary to fill up that lake or a portion of it in order to carry out the general plan of Colonel Casey, and so the committee thought that for the present they would make no appropriation. That is all there is in it. If any appropriation is made it should be $107,000, so as to complete the work. The amount appropriated by the House, I will say, can not be economically expended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This grand monument having been completed as a work, it only remains to build its surroundings. At a meeting of the Washington Monument Society held last spring, when a great many Senators and members of the House were present by invitation, the engineer in charge of the work, who has been so successful in carrying it to its great height with very little of accident and with great economy, stated to all the people who were present the two views of having an ornamental stone-work around it and a grass slope, and pretty much everybody there was of opinion after his explanation that the grass slope would be the best.

Then the matter of the security of the monument in respect of its being undermined or thrown out of perpendicular was discussed, and Colonel Casey explained the effect of this pond directly north of the monument, and only a few hundred feet distant, and that was that continually going into that pond were sand and fine particles of earth coming from water that came from the direction of that monument, and that every particle of sand, and every bushel of sand, and every load of sand that came was slowly, month by month and year by year, coming from somewhere, as we can readily understand.

The base of the monument, the lower part of its foundation, is a little above this lake as it is called, and the fair presumption was, as stated by Colonel Casey, that this fine quicksand, which it is, which was continually coming down in these streams into that lake came from under there, and that it was a question whether by and by so much would not have been filtered out as to render the foundation of the monument on one side or the other insecure, and that it would begin to settle, and that therefore it was necessary to take the thing into consideration, and that it ought to be stopped.

The object is to stop this filtering of sand from the direction of that monument, this water that exists under it, and in which the very bottom of the foundation stands and above the level of this lake. It should be prevented from flowing in that direction by filling up that lake solid, so that this flow of underground water there should be stopped.

In that state of information, which was given to me as one Senator and to a great many other gentlemen who were there, it seems to me to be of the utmost importance, if we are to preserve against all possible contingencies that magnificent structure, I think, on the whole, the finest in the world, certainly of its kind, or of any kind for the purpose for which it was designed, that we ought not to hesitate to appropriate all the money that is necessary and do it now, and stop this quicksand from coming from the direction of the base of that monument; and every month and every year that we delay that we are exposing the monument, and ourselves in the end, to the peril of having the thing begin to slant over. Therefore, whatever sum is necessary to it I wish to vote now, to put a stop to that continual drain of sand that comes from the under side of the base of the monument. I hope the Senate will not agree to this amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I move to amend the part proposed to be stricken out in line 1866 by striking out the word "fifty" and inserting the words "one hundred and;" so as to read: "Connected with the completion of the monument, $107,000," which the Senator from Iowa states is the amount estimated by Colonel Casey, the engineer, as necessary to complete this work and insure its stability. I am quite clear that if the Senate understood the importance of this work, and if they had all heard the statement of Colonel Casey on the 22d of February last, to which the Senator from Vermont has referred, there would practically be no objection to this amendment.

After having expended a million dollars in the erection of this great structure, it certainly seems a very foolish and frivolous policy to permit even the possibility of its being undermined with this subterranean infiltration and ultimately destroyed. Every moment is valuable. More or less of this sand is being subtracted from the foundation by every quart of water that flows north into that lake.

I ask the Senator from Iowa not to interpose an objection to this amendment, and let us see if we can not obtain the amount necessary to accomplish this work.

Mr. DAWES. I think there was no objection on the part of any member of the committee to doing everything that is possible for the security of the monument, and I think every member of the committee appreciated the necessity of putting a stop to this filtration, however inappreciable it may be, looking to the future and the results; but there was a difference of opinion in the committee whether that entire lake should be filled up or only a portion of it, and it was that difficulty which was encountered in the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The only safety is to fill it all up.

Mr. DAWES. For my part, I would desire to see the whole lake filled up and to have the approaches to that monument made without regard to the presence of the lake, just as it would be if it were not there. The lake is so inconsiderable an item in considering the question as to how the approaches to the monument shall be fixed and ultimately provided that I think it ought not to stand in the way one moment.

I shall vote for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. HALE. If the House proposition is to be amended and then accepted, it ought to be further amended, in addition to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas, by adding to the end of it the words:

Provided, That the work of filling the pond to the north of the monument shall not commence before December 1, 1886.

That would give ample opportunity for the pond to be cleared by Professor Baird and his assistants of any fish, or whatever they may have there, and would not interfere with their work. I presume there would be no objection to this. In fact, Colonel Casey when consulted stated to the committee that such a limitation of this work would not in any way interfere with his general plan.

The committee examined Colonel Casey very carefully upon the subject of the danger if the lake should be left where it is, and Colonel Casey stated very clearly that while when the water was drawn down or sunk in the lake particles of sand were seen to be slowly oozing into the bed of the lake, he did not really believe that the danger was appreciable. The question was put to him in this form, whether at the distance which the monument is from the lake, 300 feet, and with an immense mass of masonry below the monument, running down 18 or 20 feet to a level almost with the line of the water of the lake, there would be any appreciable danger. The reply of this most skillful and competent engineer was clear and plain and frank, that he could not say that the danger was appreciable.

Still if there is any danger merely conjectural to so vast an enterprise, to so magnificent a monument, I think the feeling of the committee, even of those who opposed it, was that if that filling would not seriously interfere with the fish-work under Professor Baird it might be done, provided that the work should not be entered upon too soon.

Therefore I give notice, if my amendment is not in order, that after the adoption, should it be adopted, of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas I shall move to add further words at the end of the clause that the work upon this pond shall not be commenced before December 1 next.

Mr. INGALLS. It will be more agreeable to me, if the suggestions I have made meet with the approval of the committee, to have the committee adopt them and modify the paragraph in accordance with their own views. I will therefore withdraw my amendment and leave it to the committee to deal with the clause as they think best, they having more knowledge of the subject than I have.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. INGALLS. With the understanding that the committee are to modify the text.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee recommends striking out this paragraph. I agree with the Senator from Kansas that if the paragraph is not stricken out I shall move to insert $107,000, because I think it is not wise to appropriate $57,000 for this work. It is of such a character that a considerable appropriation will be necessary in order to conduct the work, such as laying railway tracks along the streets and into the grounds, and it will probably require the bringing of this filling from Virginia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It can be taken from Observatory Hill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of tne committee [putting the question]. The noes have it and the amendment is rejected.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I was trying to be heard all the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. The committee agreed to strike out the paragraph not with any idea I think of preventing any improvement of the monument grounds absolutely, but for the purpose of seeing whether some fair compromise between those of us who thought at least a portion of Babcock Lake might be preserved and those who just desired to fill it up whether it was needed or not, could be reached.

Colonel Casey, the superintendent, appeared before us and made a very full and clear statement. I took the pains afterward to go over the ground, and while I am not an engineer, it is plainly apparent that only about one-third, certainly not more than one-half, of that lake need to be filled up to accomplish all that Colonel Casey desires, and that he does not need to begin to fill it up and to kill all the fish that are there now and all that we have paid so much for. What Professor Baird relies so much upon for his next year's stock can be saved if the amendment suggested by Colonel Casey, and again suggested by the Senator from Maine, should be inserted not to fill it up till December. The only difficulty upon that point is that once or twice a year it is drawn off, and then when it is low, being below the level of the monument, there is some débris that Colonel Casey thinks may in some remote period endanger the base of the monument.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BECK. Certainly; I think we all desire the same thing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Kentucky, as we are in favor of the same general thing, whether the ordinary level of this pond is not 2 or 3 or 4 feet lower than the water level that was found to exist under the base of the monument when it was filled in with concrete; and if so, whether the movement of the shore of the pond 100 feet or 200 feet further north would not leave the water level just the same?

Mr. BECK. I do not know whether when the pond is full its level is below the level of the base of the monument or not. It is within a foot or two of it. It is below it when the pond is drained.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes; it is a great deal below then.

Mr. BECK. But when the pond is full I hardly think it is below the level. It is somewhere very near about the level.

Mr. HALE. There is about one foot difference.

Mr. BECK. About that somewhere, I think. I can not now recall it; but walls, cement, something can prevent any possibility of even the little seeping of sand or pebbles very likely. My idea is (it may be wrong) that if the suggestion the Senator from Maine has made is adopted, not to begin until December, and perhaps filling up so much of the point north of the monument as may be needed for the improvement of the monument grounds to be added, perhaps the filling of the whole pond might not even be desired by Colonel Casey.

I have only this to say, that I desire to do whatever Colonel Casey thinks is needed for the monument, but I desire to preserve whatever can be preserved of the lake which is not needed for the preservation of the monument. Having as much, I may say more, confidence in Colonel Casey than in any other officer I know, I am entirely willing to leave it to him to fill up so much of that pond as may be needed for the improvement he desires and to give him whatever money will do what he wants, provided he does not begin it before December, so as not to destroy what Professor Baird and the gentlemen of the Fish Commission have taken so much pains to preserve.

Any form which will accomplish that will meet my views and I believe it will meet the views of the committee. If this is passed over for the time being without taking time now, I believe the Senator from Vermont, the Senator from Kansas, and the Senator from Iowa can prepare an amendment which will be acceptable to the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say in regard to the matter of estimates that it seems to me the estimates ought to be accompanied by a detailed statement showing what is to be done, and the cost at which it is to be done, in order that there might be some way of ascertaining whether the amount estimated for is correct or not. It is necessary in the very hurried consideration which the committee necessarily gives to these bills on account of the great delay by the House in sending them here, that the estimates should be taken in many cases without any opportunity of a detailed investigation.

When the committee came to consider the question of the repair of Anacostia and Benning's Bridges, they found an estimate contained in the Book of Estimates transmitted to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury which they supposed, from their limited knowledge of the subject, was necessary; but when they came to investigate the matter, through the engineer commissioner of the District, they found that the estimate as contained in the Book of Estimates was largely overdrawn; that is to say, the amount was stated as being much larger than was necessary. That is evidenced by the letter of the engineer commissioner of the District on the subject, in which, referring to his estimates, he says:

The flooring of the Anacostia Bridge must be entirely replaced. * * * Colonel Wilson's estimate for this is $5,500, with lumber at $28 per thousand. Our contracts will enable us to procure this at $22, and correspondingly reduce the cost to $4,500.

That is a difference of $1,000 in that item of the lumber for flooring the Anacostia Bridge.

With regard to Benning's Bridge, the raising of the causeway may be regarded as a necessity. * * * Colonel Wilson's estimate is $10,000, but the filling is charged at 75 cents per cubic yard, whereas it should be practicable to get it done for 50 cents. This will save $1,000.

I only speak of this to show that in the hurry in which these bills are necessarily considered by the Senate, the committee and the Senate are under a certain constraint to take the estimates as they are sent in without a careful investigation as to their correctness. The repair of these two bridges under the auspices of the Engineer Department of the Army, according to this statement made by the engineer commissioner, would have cost $2,000 more than it ought to have cost.

So when we come to consider this question of $107,000, or whatever other number of dollars may be deemed to be necessary for the completion of this work, it seems to me that we ought to have something to show that the amount which is called for not only will complete the work according to the plan but that it is no more than is necessary for such completion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the amendment of the committee to strike out the clause as having been disagreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I move to amend it in view of what the Senator from Kentucky has said.

Mr. BECK. I was about to suggest that the Senator allow it to be passed over for a few moments for consultation with others and then call it up. By passing it over for a few moments perhaps we can agree to it without much discussion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We had just as well dispose of it now. In view of what the Senator from Kentucky stated, that he wishes to save whatever of the pond he can, I move to amend the paragraph by inserting in line 1863, after the word "filling," the words "so much of the;" so as to read:

For earth filling and grading around the monument, filling so much of the pond just north of the monument—

Then to insert—

as may be needful to secure the foundation of the monument.

And then after "dollars," in line 1867, to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. HALE. You want to increase the amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; in line 1866 to strike out "fifty-seven" and insert "one hundred and seven" before the word "thousand," which I see is the estimate. I think I remember that Colonel Casey told this meeting on the anniversary day, with his statistics, how many cubic yards of earth would be required to be brought there and put in place and packed down, &c., and that the cost of it would be what he stated in the estimate.

Mr. ALLISON. There is a very full statement in a printed document made by Colonel Casey which I can not lay my hand on at this moment. The estimate of Colonel Casey is that 385,000 cubic yards will be required to complete this according to the plan, and I think his estimate is 30 cents per cubic yard. It may be 25 cents. The committee examined the estimate and were satisfied that the sum suggested by Colonel Casey was reasonable.

He said to us also that if we appropriated $57,000 now and $50,000 next year he thought the estimate would not be large enough, because in securing the necessary plant to do this work any contractor could do it for much less by having the contract now for the 385,000 cubic yards and making his plant in accord with the extent of the contract.

Mr. HALE. The chairman will remember that the subcommittee sent for Colonel Casey and examined very thoroughly into this matter, and that he showed all the estimates in detail, of the kind the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] desires, and explained it fully to the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say in response to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] that Colonel Casey said he had not the slightest intention of interfering with this fish pond before the 1st of December, and he was entirely willing that the amendment now suggested by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] should be inserted. But whether it is inserted or not the fish pond will not be interfered with.

Mr. BECK. If Colonel Casey lives it will not be interfered with. The amendment is only needed because something might happen to Colonel Casey.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not the slightest objection to the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Let the amendment of the Senator from Vermont be adopted and then I will offer mine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1863, after the word "filling," it is proposed to insert the words "so much of the;" in line 1864, after the word "monument," to insert the words "as may be needful to secure the foundation of the monument;" in line 1866, to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred and," and in line 1867, after the word "dollars," to insert "or so much thereof as may be necessary;" so as to read——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then follows the amendment of the Senator from Maine, which I accept.

The CHIEF CLERK. And at the end of the clause add:

Provided, That the work of filling the pond north of the monument shall not be commenced before December 1, 1886.

So as to read:

Washington Monument: For completion of the Washington Monument, namely: For earth filling and grading around the monument, filling so much of the pond just north of the monument as may be needful to secure the foundation of the monument, including rent of necessary office-rooms, and for each and every purpose connected with the completion of the monument, $107,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction of the joint commission created by the act of August 2, 1876: Provided, That the work of filling the pond north of the monument shall not be commenced before December 1, 1886.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1881, to insert:

Lincoln-Grant Monumental Bridge: To enable the Secretary of War to prepare suitable plans, drawings, and specifications, and to ascertain and estimate the soundings, site, and foundation for piers, and cost of a Lincoln-Grant Monumental Bridge, with suitable approaches, from Observatory Point, in the city of Washington, across the Potomac River to Arlington gate, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "military posts," in line 1917, after the word "necessary," to strike out "one hundred and seventy-eight thousand eight hundred and fifty-six," and insert "two hundred and fifty thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For the construction of buildings at and the enlargement of such military posts as in the judgment of the Secretary of War may be necessary, $250,000; $15,000 of which sum may be used for the purchase of additional land near Atlanta, Ga., for the ten-company post being erected there.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to suggest to the chairman of the committee whether that sum should not be larger. It is less than the estimate, and it seems to me that the amount ought to be increased by somewhere from $25,000 to $50,000.

Mr. ALLISON. On looking over the papers it is thought that there should be added $25,000 to that sum. I move to increase the amount from $250,000 to $275,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 1922, to insert:

Wharf at Fort Monroe, Va.: In full for the construction and completion of a permanent wharf at Fort Monroe, Va., $80,000.

Mr. MAHONE. I move to strike out all after the word "Virginia," in line 1923, and to insert:

For the construction of a new wharf and improvements for the roadway leading thereto on the Government reservation at Fortress Monroe, Va., upon plans approved by the Secretary of War, $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose.

It appears that when the Committee on Appropriations inserted this item they were governed by the Book of Estimates. The committee it seems did not have before it a subsequent report and estimate submitted by the Secretary of War in respect to this object. In order that we may see what the Secretary of War says upon the subject I ask the Secretary to read what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows from House of Representatives Report No. 3191 of the present session:

The War Department submitted an estimate of $80,000 for a permanent wharf at Fortress Monroe, which will be found on page 177 of the Estimates for 1877. This estimate was based upon a plan which, upon more mature consideration, was abandoned for another, with the approval of the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, as will more fully appear by reference to letters herewith printed and marked respectively A and B.

The substantial changes recommended are these:

1. That the bill be amended so as to appropriate so much of $150,000 as may be necessary.
2. That authority be given to construct a new wharf instead of an iron pier.
3. That discretion be vested in the War Department to adopt such a plan for the new wharf as will best accomplish the end proposed.

It seems to be agreed on all sides that the original plan for this improvement is defective.

It is very clear that the present wharf not only does not meet the necessities of the case, but that it is in a very rickety condition, and soon will become totally useless.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, March 13, 1886.

* * * * * * *

In reply, I beg to invite your attention to the inclosed report of the 11th instant from the Chief of Engineers, embodying a report on the subject from Col. Q. A. Gillmore, of the Corps of Engineers, and recommending that the amount to be appropriated for the wharf in question be stated at $150,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, and that the words "an iron pier," wherever they occur in the bill, be stricken out and the words "a new wharf" be inserted in their place.

I concur in the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers.

The papers referred to by you are returned herewith.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Hon. JOHN V. L. FINDLAY,
Of Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., March 11, 1836.

* * * * * * *

Col. Q. A. Gillmore, Corps of Engineers, reports:

"The urgency of this case and the necessity for immediate action thereon renders it impossible to give mature consideration to all its features. I shall therefore mention only those few points upon which my convictions and my knowledge of the locality are comparatively clear.

"(1) Attention is invited to the fact that the act of the General Assembly of the State of Virginia contains no proviso or requirements that the United States shall 'erect a structure not only adapted to the wants of the Government, but the commercial interests of the adjoining section of Virginia, and to keep in repair the roadways leading to the same,' as stated in the communication from Hon. H. LIBBEY to the chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, upon which the Quartermaster-General apparently bases his recommendation for an increased appropriation.

"The proviso bearing on the subject in section 1 of said act is 'that nothing in the deed of conveyance required by the first section of this act shall authorize the discontinuance of the present road to the fort, or in any manner prevent the pilots from erecting such marks and beacons as may be deemed necessary.'

"(2) It appears to be immaterial, however, so far as the wharf is concerned, whether the United States was to maintain this road, or simply to leave it open and unobstructed. In either case its use as a public highway would necessarily imply the use by the public of such terminal facilities for transferring passengers, produce, and merchandise arriving at or leaving the place by water as might be provided by those having control of the highway. The wharfage facilities should, I think, be on a scale that will meet the wants of both the United States and the general public."

* * * * * * *

I concur generally in the views expressed by Colonel Gillmore, but as we have not yet sufficient information, owing to the varied opinions expressed, concerning the area of the wharf required, it is suggested that the amount to be appropriated be stated at $150,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, and that the words "an open pier," wherever they occur, may be stricken out, and the words "a new wharf" be inserted in their place.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers, Brig. and Bvt. Maj. Gen.

Hon. WILLIAM C. ENDICOTT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. MAHONE. I have also further to state that the Senate has already passed a bill authorizing the appropriation of $150,000 for this purpose and that furthermore it appears that the necessity for this wharf according to the new plan, the revised plan of the War Department, is justified by the large amount of business that is done at that wharf, over five thousand steamers touching at the wharf during one year, with a great many tugboats and sailing vessels, to accommodate not only the business of the port, but that of the surrounding country; and that the Government is obligated to provide for the traffic in and about Fortres Monroe by the terms of the cession of that land to the United States.

Such I say is the recommendation made by the commanding officer of that fort, and now we have a revised plan and revised estimate of the cost of the wharf asking for $150,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary to construct a wharf equal to the demands of that place. We have also before us the action of the Senate in passing a bill, I do not know whether unanimously recommended or not but certainly recommended by the Military Committee of this body, authorizing an appropriation of $150,000 for this purpose.

Mr. CAMERON. And the bill passed the Senate.

Mr. MAHONE. The bill has passed the Senate. I hope that this statement will be quite sufficient to induce the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to accept the amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee did have all the papers which have been suggested here, but we were of the opinion that the original estimates would be sufficient to build a very extensive and expansive wharf as suggested in the Book of Estimates. The Book of Estimates provides for $80,000 and says that that will be sufficient to build a wharf that will extend to 18 feet of water. We believe that $80,000 would furnish a very good wharf at Fortress Monroe. We had before us the letters of the Secretary of War saying that the plan had been changed, and that a more commodious wharf would be required there, but it was the judgment of the committee that $80,000 was sufficient to build a wharf there for the Government.

Mr. SEWELL. Let me ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if the Senate did not pass a bill at this session giving $150,000 for the construction of a wharf of this kind?

Mr. ALLISON. It has done so.

Mr. SEWELL. Has not the judgment of the Senate been exercised on this question?

Mr. MAHONE. It is Senate bill 1148. Here is the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate passed a bill appropriating $150,000 for the purpose indicated now by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. SEWELL. The wharf at Fortress Monroe, as we all know, accommodates an immense traffic. Some of it is public and some of it is private, but more steamboats stop there, I presume, than at any other point where there is water navigation at the present day; I know more than at any landing on the North River or the Mississippi River. If it is necessary for the Government to have a wharf there for the accommodation of a great fort and arrivals and departures, the unloading of ordnance stores, it ought to have a wharf that will accommodate the traffic.

I simply say that an estimate has been made of $150,000 and the Senate has acted on it, and a majority of the Senate has voted that that amount shall be appropriated, and it seems to me that it is a penny-wise kind of business for the Committee on Appropriations to cut it down to $80,000, and to give an appropriation that will in no wise answer the purpose. A good wharf can be built for $80,000, but whether a wharf of the character to accommodate the immense number of steamboats that land there is another thing.

I should think there might be a compromise entered into between the Senator from Virginia and the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations by agreeing to expend $125,000, which ought to answer the purpose.

Mr. MAHONE. I have great respect and confidence, and I have not the slightest doubt, because we have had too many evidences given of it in the Senate, that the Senate has great confidence and great respect for the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, but I should be loath to put the judgment of the chairman, with all the respect that I entertain for that gentleman, against the judgment of the Senate as expressed in the passage of Senate bill 1148. While the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is happy at all things, I have never presumed that he would undertake to express a judgment against the deliberate judgment and opinion of the Chief Engineer of the Army charged with this subject.

It does seem to me that he might forego an insistance upon his judgment and that of the Appropriation Committee in this respect where the judgment of the Senate heretofore expressed and the judgment of the War Department heretofore is adverse. I hope my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Virginia to accept the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey, who does not seem to have so high an opinion of the Appropriation Committee?

Mr. MAHONE. I should like to stick to the amount of the estimate, but——

Mr. SEWELL. I think that would be a fair compromise on a question of this kind.

Mr. MAHONE. I am willing to place it at $125,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia accept the modification?

Mr. MAHONE. I accept the modification.

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment as modified be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "Virginia," in line 1923, strike out all down to and including the word "dollars," in line 1925, and insert:

For the construction of a new wharf and improvements to the roadway leading thereto on the Government reservation at Fortress Monroe, Va., upon plans to be approved by the Secretary of War, $125,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the purpose.

Mr. BECK. The committee amendment is in full for construction and completion of a permanent wharf at Fortress Monroe, Va., $80,000, and that is every dollar of the engineer's estimate. The approaches to it are past the Hygeia Hotel, along that line of road, as good approaches as can be made. The United States has no interest there except to give a good wharf, and $80,000 is believed to give, and I believe now will give, all the wharfage that ought to be had at that place, if we propose to do justice to other points.

Of course the military gentlemen at Fortress Monroe, guests of the Hygeia Hotel, and the people who desire great decorations can spend $125,000 or $150,000 or $250,000 in ornamentation; but every dollar beyond the original $80,000 proposed is not to be expended for the use of the Government or for the people of the United States in any beneficial sense.

I shall vote against every proposition that seeks to raise it beyond the original estimate. I have no doubt the railroad companies, the gentlemen connected with that post, the lessee and guests at that hotel would be glad to have a grand, elegant iron wharf constructed there, but that is not the business of the United States. It is not the business of Congress in imposing taxation upon these people to do that sort of thing. When light-houses and life-saving stations and the thousand things that are needed are being pinched down to the very last point in order to keep this appropriation bill within the limits, when we are meeting with vetoes even of public buildings at places where it is supposed the rent may be a few hundred dollars less than the interest on the money invested, it seems to me that to go beyond $80,000 for a wharf at Fortress Monroe is not good legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia, as modified. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. BECK. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is that amendment subject to a point of order under the rules?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No point of order has been made, as the Chair is informed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I make the point of order, if the amendment is subject to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it is an amendment which has been reported from a standing committee, and has been sent to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair sees no ground on which the point of order can be made.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the amendment of the Senator from Virginia been heretofore considered by the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CAMERON. Certainly, it was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was reported from a committee and it has passed the Senate as a bill at this session.

Mr. CAMERON. In addition to that the Senate passed the bill authorizing the payment of $150,000 for building the wharf. The bill passed on the 17th of June without any opposition, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Virginia to state those facts. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHACE (when Mr. ALDRICH's name was called). My colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired generally with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. Not knowing how he would vote on this proposition, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—38.

Blair,	George,	McMillan,	Spooner,
Brown,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Stanford,

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Signal Service," in line 1943, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "eleven;" so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of storm, cautionary off-shore, cold-wave, and other signals on the sea, lake, and gulf coasts of the United States, and in the interior, announcing the probable approach and force of storms, including the pay of observers, services of operators, lanterns, and flags, $11,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after "United States," in line 1949, to strike out "eight thousand" and insert "twenty-six thousand three hundred and fifty;" so as to read:

For continuing the connections of signal stations with life-saving stations or light-houses, including services of operators, repairmen, materials, and general service, being for the maintenance and repair of the military-telegraph line along the Atlantic coast of the United States, $26,350.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Is this clause treated by paragraphs or by separate lines?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is agreed to unless the Senator wishes a division. The proviso has not yet been read.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to offer an amendment in line 1949, after the words "Atlantic coast." I desire that it shall not be limited to the Atlantic coast, but shall be extended to the lake coast.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the text of the bill is not now open to amendment. The amendment which follows is open to amendment. The proviso will be read.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause appropriating $26,350 "for continuing the connections of signal stations, with life-saving stations or light-houses, including service of operators," &c., in line 1951, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That not exceeding $18,350 of this sum shall be used for furnishing, delivering, and laying a new submarine cable at Block Island Bay, to replace the one now unserviceable, and for completing the connection by telegraph between Block Island, Rhode Island, and the mainland of Rhode Island; and the provision of the act of March 26, 1886, making an appropriation of $5,000 to repair the submarine cable, Block Island Bay, is hereby repealed; but any expenditure already incurred thereunder may be paid from said appropriation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Here is an appropriation for laying cables to connect life-saving stations and signal stations with each other. The appropriation is for laying military telegraph lines and the most of the appropriation is made for laying a submarine cable not connecting at all with military telegraph lines. It is confined to the Atlantic coast entirely, with no more reason for it than upon the lake coast or the Pacific or anywhere else where these lines can be available.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me for a moment, I will state that this is only for the repair and care of military and Signal Service lines already established. It is not proposed to erect any new military telegraph lines by this provision.

Mr. CONGER. But all along the lake coast, wherever there is a life-saving station or signal station, where there is no telegraph that connects with it, then the military telegraph line has been established connecting it with the nearest general telegraph line. I do not see any particular necessity of confining this to the Atlantic coast or to any other coast. Where the same class of telegraph lines which they call military telegraph lines connects the signal stations and life-saving stations it should be done.

Therefore I object to the appropriation if it is not to be used for the purposes stated in the first part of the paragraph. These are placed on the upper lakes where the signal stations and life-saving stations are remote from telegraph lines and are connected sometimes by a mile, or two or three or ten or twenty miles, of military telegraph lines with the general telegraph lines. But out on rocky points, remote places where there is no line, they have been in use there for years. They need constant repair. That is the object of this appropriation. It is not for the Atlantic coast, but wherever that class of communication has been established and wherever they need repair.

Mr. ALLISON. This appropriation is in the exact line of the estimates. If the Senator will turn to page 215 he will see the precise use intended by this appropriation, the exact language of the paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The text will be open to amendment after the amendments of the committee are considered.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to call attention to this now because my duty as a member of the committee of conference on the river and harbor bill calls me away.

Mr. ALLISON. I assure the Senator that if there are any telegraph lines on the lake coast they are provided for by the general appropriations in the bill. This is for a specific purpose, which is found in the Book of Estimates, and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate added another specific appropriation looking to the relaying of a cable at Block Island.

Mr. CHACE. I do not understand that the Senator from Michigan makes any opposition.

Mr. CONGER. Not at all. I think that ought to be done.

Mr. CHACE. Then I move that that special provision be agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. It has been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been agreed to, and the reading of the bill will be resumed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 1974, to increase the appropriation "for river and flood observations, and expenses incidental thereto," from $9,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1977, after the word "maps," to strike out "or bulletins;" and after the word "maps," at the end of line 1980, to strike out "bulletins;" so as to read:

For expenses (including paper, forms, printing supplies, hire of civilian printers, engravers) of preparing, printing, distributing, and displaying maps, and for the maintenance of a printing office, under the direction of the Chief Signal Officer, in the city of Washington, for the printing of the necessary orders, circulars, maps, as may be necessary to carry into effect the appropriations made for the support of the Signal Service, $25,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be regarded as agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the question may be taken on striking out the words "or bulletin."

Mr. ALLISON. The words "or bulletin" should not be stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why not?

Mr. ALLISON. Because they are a necessary part of the publication.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The expense of bulletins is pretty great. I should like to have the chairman of the committee explain why the committee reported to strike it out and why now it is proposed to be taken in again.

Mr. ALLISON. The reason is that bulletins in the Signal Service sense have a different meaning from bulletins used for instance in the Coast Survey or in the Geological Survey. These bulletins are just what you see out in the rear of the Senate Chamber. They are put up in the chambers of commerce and elsewhere in public places by the Signal Service every day. They are denominated bulletins——

Mr. EDMUNDS. But do they not also include a great lot of prints which are sent around and that do not reach anybody until weeks or days after the event has occurred, so that they are of no consequence?

Mr. ALLISON. It is quite possible that some of this class of material may be sent out that is of no consequence; I think very likely; but what I mean to say is that it is a very small, insignificant part.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment striking out the words "or bulletin" in both places.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriation for pay of Signal Corps, in line 2007, before the word "commissioned," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of War is authorized, in his discretion, to detail for the service in the Signal Corps not to exceed five commissioned officers, exclusive of the second lieutenants of the Signal Corps authorized by law; and no money herein appropriated shall be used for pay and allowances of second lieutenants appointed or to be appointed from the sergeants of the Signal Corps, under the provisions of the act approved June 20, 1878, in excess of the number of sixteen, or for the pay and allowances of exceeding four hundred and seventy enlisted men of the Signal Corps.

Mr. CONGER. I move to amend by inserting "three" instead of "five" in the committee's report.

In order to encourage the enlistment of men in the Signal Service and make them ambitious of distinction in this service and in the scientific and practical work of it, Congress some years ago passed a law authorizing two of the signal observers, who had shown themselves most deserving of promotion and of belief in their ability to be useful to the country in this service, to be made second lieutenants in the Army. They are to be commissioned just as in other branches of the service; some men for gallant services may be promoted from sergeants in the Army to be regular commissioned officers. In this bill I see, commencing in line 2009, the following:

And no money herein appropriated shall be used for pay and allowances of second lieutenants appointed or to be appointed from the sergeants of the Signal Corps, under the provisions of the act approved June 20, 1878, in excess of the number of sixteen, or for the pay and allowances of exceeding four hundred and seventy enlisted men of the Signal Corps.

There are sixteen men since 1878, who, by their study and care, have from year to year through these years secured, as they were promised under the law, commissions in the Army as second lieutenants in the Signal Corps from the enlisted men. It has been one of the greatest incentives to these young men who have enlisted in that service to devote themselves with all their strength, soul, body, and mind, to acquiring the practical and scientific information which would enable them to gain this desired promotion, and they gained it, two in each year. They are an honor to-day to the service. They are as well versed in all that pertains to the Signal Service to-day as any lieutenant that may be sent from the plains or from the forts into Washington and placed in this service.

Why are those men, who have had the right by trial to gain a commission in the service of the United States, restricted? Why is legislation now injected into this bill virtually repealing a law which was passed with great unanimity, which has been received by the country with great favor, by restricting the number of men that can receive pay, thus either stopping the pay of those who are already second lieutenants or stopping further promotion?

Sir, the tendency nowadays is that every officer in the Army, even in the Signal Service branch of it, must come through West Point. There is no opening for the civilian; there is no opening left for the common citizen to enter into the sacred precincts of the Army by virtue of a commission, except this in the Signal Service and occasionally a chance promotion of a sergeant for gallant service in the regular Army in some way. Why is it that we, civilians all of us, close the door by consistent legislation to the admission of men who enlisted for five years in the Army as Signal Service observers, and enlisted under the promise of a chance, two chances out of five hundred, one in two hundred and fifty, of gaining an honorable promotion if they should be found deserving of it—why do we want to take that chance away?

I am one of those who believe the Signal Service of the United States, in its relations to navigation and commerce and agriculture and the crops of the country, is one of the few things which is gratifying in its operations and in its service to the vast mass of the people of the United States in every State and in every region connected with agriculture, connected with navigation, connected with the crops, connected with all the great industries of agriculture and navigation and shipping. Sir, I venture to say that on the lakes alone, since this system of cautionary signals and observations of storms has been in operation, I say it even of Lake Huron, on the borders of which I live, as the express result, the positive result of the knowledge which these cautionary signals and observations have enabled the observers to give to shipping men going out of port with their vessels, especially in the dangerous season of the year, there has been saved enough annually on that one lake to run the entire Signal Service of the United States.

I do not know what the saving may have been to the sugar-cane men and the cotton men of the South. I do not know whether any signals could give timely enough notice to save from the effect of frosts the crops of that kind which would be most affected by them; but on the great lakes and on the ocean I say that this service, by its timely warnings, by its increased knowledge on the subject of storms has saved to the navigation interests of the United States alone one hundred times the annual expense in each year in the saving of property alone. And when we compare the vast number of shipwrecks, the loss of life, the loss of property, even along the shores of our interior lakes, there is no man who lives there but attributes to the gallant service of the life-saving crews that are established on those coasts and to the timely warning of the Signal Service a diminution of the dangers and the losses both of property and life beyond comparison. Here is a direct stroke at the ambition, at the enterprise, at the study of these five hundred Signal Service observers all over the United States, altering the law to destroy their prospects, altering the law in an appropriation bill contrary to the rules of the Senate.

If we are to import from the different forts or from the different cities lieutenants and officers to have charge of this Signal Service, let it be as small a number as possible, and let the lieutenants who have been reared in this service, whose whole educated life has been connected with the Signal Service in observations and in computations and in making reports—let them be called in instead of the five and perhaps we can find room to carry out the law in regard to these young men who enlisted under the promise of the law that if they could succeed in being the best in their class there should be two of them in each year commissioned as officers in the United States service.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say that at the request of the chief of the Signal Service the committee added another regular Army officer to the House provision, and he stated to us that he was added in order that Lieutenant (now Captain) Greely might be continued in the service.

Mr. CONGER. I should like a vote on this, because I can not reach under the amendment here the point which the committee have put into the bill or which is in the bill cutting off the pay or forbidding the promotion of any more lieutenants. I can not reach the provision in this bill when it came here to the Senate which reduces the five hundred enlisted men who have learned their business and every one of whom is employed now in all the great variety of signal stations as observers and as workmen in that service—reduces it to four hundred and seventy, thus cutting off thirty of these men enlisted under the law and sent off to remote points, to far-distant regions.

I say do not touch one of them. I say do not touch any one of them on the Rocky Mountains, or on the north shore of Lake Superior, or on the distant coast of Maine, or over in Oregon or California, or on Mount Washington, or on Pike's Peak. This bill leaves in the power of that office to drop unpaid and to return to his country alone, destitute, any one of the thirty men. I say a more barbarous provision never crept into a bill. There are five hundred men in the service now unless one or two died last night, and if they are to be treated in this way Heaven has had pity upon those who died. Why introduce a bill so cruel, a bill so wicked without any provision for pay? Not a cent of this appropriation shall go to pay more than four hundred and seventy men, when there are five hundred on the rolls to-day unless some died last night.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, I will. I shall be mighty glad to have some half plausible excuse for the cruelty and iniquity of such a provision.

Mr. ALLISON. I think I can relieve the Senator. The thirty men dropped from the service are all but two of them men who are regularly enlisted in the Army, and who are engaged in working about the stables and digging about the roads and looking to the various little things connected with Fort Myer; and the four hundred and seventy men who are engaged in signal duty and the Signal Service are not one of them touched by the provision in this bill.

Mr. CONGER. That may be the information of the Senator. There are not thirty men working on the stables of Fort Myer or anywhere else, and they can not be found there, and if they are every observer and every soldier must do duty connected with this service. There are thirty men who are observers enlisted under the law as Signal Service observers to be dropped, to be unpaid here, the 22d of this month, with this last month's pay unpaid them, and no part of this appropriation shall go to them.

There is an enemy in the field somewhere. I have not tracked the enemy to his hole yet. I have got on the footsteps of some of those who are opposing this service. I find, wonderful to relate, as to many of them whom I try to follow the tracks of that their tracks have been drawn in backward into the cave and the steps go the other way. So I can not track them up, but I will do it yet.

Who opposes this service? What influences are at work here to destroy it, the only active, beneficial, do-something service of the country? What are all the soldiers doing in the land? Fighting mosquitoes, waiting to see if there is any order for them to chase upon the plains some Mexican greaser. What else are they doing? What is the Navy doing? Performing a little home duty, weeping over the remains, the unburied remains of their service. Who wants this put into the naval service? I know the men who want it there. Who wants this taken away from the military service and put into the naval service? Who wants this Signal Service that is the only one of the great branches of the military service that is to-day practical and useful and commends itself to the great prominent principal farmers, sailors, and ship-owners of the land—who is it that is trying to break up this service? The attempt is here. Every session it works in secret. The approaches are in mines and ditches. The approaches are not open and direct. We can not find them. It first takes away the school of instruction, utterly and absolutely useless for any other purpose under God's heaven, Fort Myer up over the hill, that for years has been the place to educate these sons of the people to perform practical, useful, beneficial duties to their fellow-men; and now the bill destroys Fort Myer.

What is it to be used for? Artillery, somebody says; a naval station somebody else says. It is a branch of that grand service which is to-day in such important and absolutely necessary employment. What do you want artillery up at Fort Myer for, pointing their guns on the Capitol, and by their morning guns disturbing the reveries or the sleep of overwearied Senators who have been compelled to stay here into the late hours of the night to pass a bill to destroy Fort Myer and to destroy the Signal Service, as we are about to do to-night. What kind of a place is Fort Myer for an artillery school? Deluding the people of this mighty, peaceful city with the threatened approach of thunder storms by every roar of the artillery! Who wants it upon that hill? What kind of a fort do the American people want to look upon from this Capitol, from the highest eminence in view, right alongside of the thirty, ay, forty thousand dead heroes of the war.

They have had enough of artillery and gun firing. They are embalmed in the affection of the American people, in a place for rest, away from battle sounds, away from the roar of the artillery. The people who go there to see the remains of their friends and of their soldiers do not go there to be wakened by the sound of cannon and the rattling of artillery. And yet right up to the gate it is proposed to make this peaceful, educational institution, which is for the good of the whole people, an artillery school for the rattling of wheels and the thundering of ramrods and the cursing of the mule-drivers.

Those men will not be awakened, but it will waken up in the breast of every sensible man, every man of feeling, the idea that that proud spot is desecrated by the tumult and the noise of artillery training within a few feet of the graves of the dead. They will not wake, but in the breast of every American there is a feeling of sanctity about the abode and the resting-place of the honored dead, whether from military or civil life. That has not yet been disturbed by the contiguity of such scenes as these either in a private cemetery or the public resting-place of the veteran dead.

That is what is coming; that is what is in this bill. It is a system, a plan to destroy this, the people's service, and increase it by adding and bringing in lieutenants and captains from the different posts of the Army, who want places in Washington, and stopping the promotion and stopping the service of the sixteen men who have acquired their commissions and have more practical knowledge and can bring to the service of the people better service and better information than any one of the captains or lieutenants of the five that may be called here.

Sir, I oppose this whole system. I do not want this service "of the people, by the people, and for the people" turned over either to Army or Navy. I do not want that only school which we have for the training of a branch of the military service for the general benefit of the common people of the land turned over as an artillery station and these men driven away from that school and threatened with destruction.

I suppose the committee will carry this. I suppose the influences that have led the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate to make this side attack and this direct attack on this Signal Service will prevail. Committees do not generally engage in such a work as this at the instigation of outsiders, unless they think by some means and without rebuke and without the attention of the country being called to it, it will go through.

For myself, sir, there are provisions of this bill that I speak of now, as I am necessarily called away on a committee of conference, which go to destroy the efficiency of the only service which I believe really commends itself to the common heart and affections as being useful to the common people of the United States.

Not satisfied with this, they strike out the bulletins, the ordinary daily information; but that has been restored. Not satisfied with striking that out, they have provided for the discharge of thirty of these men—not mule-drivers—but every man is equal who is enlisted as an observer; he is under the same rule; he takes his duty in manual labor; he takes his duty in attending to driving and at the barns. After he takes his position as an observer there is no distinction; the law makes none; and if it does affect the people at Fort Myer, I oppose it all the more, because I am opposed to taking away that school of instruction from the people and turning it over to the artillery branch of the service.

While I am speaking I will call attention to another clause:

And no money herein appropriated shall be used for pay and allowances of second lieutenants appointed or to be appointed from the sergeants of the Signal Corps, under the provisions of the act approved June 20, 1878, in excess of the number of sixteen—

That is the number who since that time have got their commissions—

or for the pay and allowances of exceeding four hundred and seventy enlisted men of the Signal Corps.

The law authorizes five hundred. There are five hundred enlisted men. They have been serving from the 1st of July, the commencement of this fiscal year, under a resolution up to the time when this bill will become a law; but then this appropriation, no part of which can be used either to bring those men from remote stations back if they happen to be discharged there, or to pay them back pay or allowances for the best part of the month——

Mr. ALLISON. Will it disturb the Senator if I tell him that thirty people of the five hundred are enlisted as a permanent party at Fort Myer, and have no more to do with the actual work of the Signal Service than any other enlisted men in the Army?

Mr. CONGER. If there has been such a violation of a plain, direct law it should have been found out before this. There is no provision of law that authorizes the enlistment of separate grades and men employed in different objects. They are engaged and enlisted as privates in the Army and observers.

Mr. ALLISON. Not one of them is so enlisted.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator may know more about this than I do. If he does not, I am sure his means of information and his information itself is meager.

That is the law forming this corps, and the Senator I think can not point me to any different law than the enlistment of general men. Why? Because no more than four hundred and seventy of these enlisted men shall be paid, this bill says. Why does it not say that those who enlisted as drivers, those who were enlisted different from those, shall not be paid, or shall be discharged? The Senator, I think, knows a great deal more about this subject than any other man in the Senate, excepting myself—more than almost all of us put together. I do not profess to know anything about any subjects except those I have examined and studied. But he is mistaken. Under this rule the head of the Signal Service could drop from the pay-roll any one of these five hundred. There is no restriction. I assert that without fear of contradiction. He may drop a man in the observatory, or on the top of Mount Washington, or on Lake Superior, or in California, or Oregon, or Alaska. I assert that without fear of contradiction under the bill.

I have said what I desired to say on that; but at the proper time I hope the chairman will provide an amendment by which, in the commutation of rations, there may be a provision that enlisted men in the Signal Service may be allowed to buy as soldiers do quartermaster's stores under the same rule that the officers may be allowed to buy, and that the enlisted men may have their rations or their commutation.

I call the attention of my friend the chairman to this. I have not said anything that was disparaging to this corps. I want to know why these sixteen officers in the Signal Corps may not go and draw their rations, and pay for them as other officers do.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose they can do so. If they can not, I will cheerfully agree to insert in this bill an amendment putting them upon a par with other officers of the Army in that respect.

Mr. CONGER. Then there is no provision in this bill for subsistence stores for sale to officers and enlisted men, as is provided for and authorized by section 1144 of the Revised Statutes. That ought to be put in. If the design is to kill off this service, do not starve them out, let them be killed in a bold, manly way. There are several of these things here that I would call attention to if I could be here at the time when it will be proper to make these amendments. I shall try to have the provision amended. I have noticed their absence in the bill.

I think the attack on this service is unwarranted. I think it shows a disregard of the true interests of the common people of the United States that has not appeared in any other bill, so far as it affects this valuable branch of the semi-civil-military branch of the service of the country.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, there has been conducted a very careful examination into the Signal Service and some other branches. The chairman of this committee is familiar with the whole matter, I suppose. Now, when this bill passes under our eyes, unless we take last year's bill and carefully compare, we do not notice at first how much is left out and how much may be absolutely destroyed entirely without our knowledge. I know that an investigating committee was anxious to make some changes in the service. Whether its formal report recommended all that is desired to do, I do not know; but I wish the Senator would inform us of the nature and extent of the changes that are made in the Signal Service directly here or by omission. What is it to be hereafter, in comparison to what it has been?

Mr. ALLISON. This bill as it stands now makes no change in the bill of last year except that it does not provide for Fort Myer as a signal station, and only provides for four hundred and seventy privates instead of five hundred. The bill as it came from the House contains a provision allowing enlisted men rations at 85 cents per day each. The Senate Committee on Appropriations recommend that that be stricken out, but in doing so we find it necessary to offer some amendments changing the total, which amendments are not embraced, so that this bill will be the bill of last year except the number of enlisted men reduced from five hundred to four hundred and seventy and Fort Myer dispensed with.

Mr. PLATT. The only reduction of men is those thirty?

Mr. ALLISON. There are also at Fort Myer twenty-eight second-class privates, so-called, known as the permanent party. They are men enlisted for what would be called the care of Fort Myer, and they are not engaged in Signal Service observations. There is also one corporal there and a contract surgeon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Making exactly the thirty.

Mr. ALLISON. That makes thirty.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is Fort Myer to be abandoned to a sergeant and a half-dozen men, or what is to be done with it?

Mr. ALLISON. Fort Myer is, as it always has been, under the control of the Secretary of War. I think the Secretary of War will make provision for Fort Myer in some way. I do not know what will be done.

Mr. HAWLEY. The chairman does not know what is to be done with it?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know.

Mr. HAWLEY. I heard references made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to an artillery school.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Michigan seems to understand that it is to be devoted to the artillery service. I do not know how that may be. I suppose the General of the Army and the Secretary of War will be able to devote it to some useful and proper purpose. It is a very valuable site, as the Senator knows, comprising I think about 1,200 acres of land immediately opposite the city; and there are quite a number of very valuable buildings upon it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Good buildings and grounds handsomely improved.

Mr. ALLISON. Grounds beautifully improved, that have been made so largely by General Hazen, the Chief of the Signal Service, with the aid of this force of which I speak, and which is to be dispensed with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It adjoins the Arlington Cemetery.

Mr. ALLISON. Part of the property abuts on part of the Arlington estate.

Mr. PLATT. To what particular use has the Signal Service put Fort Myer heretofore?

Mr. ALLISON. They have established Fort Myer as the chief signal station, so called, and have had there what they call a school of instruction, where the young men who are enlisted as observers in the Signal Service are sent for six months to acquire a knowledge of the practical work of observers.

The testimony taken by the joint commission who investigated that subject discloses the fact that any bright young man can acquire the knowledge necessary to take charge of a signal station in from two weeks to a month. It is not a very difficult thing to do. He wants to acquire a knowledge of the use of instruments, &c.

We found Fort Myer to be rather an expensive part of the Signal Service, and we believed it would be wiser and better for those young men who desire to enter the Signal Service to step into one of the observing stations in Maine or Iowa or Connecticut and take observations practically and study, which they can do anywhere, and when they enter the service they will enter as observers.

That was the view of the commission who examined that subject, and that seems to have been the view of the Committee on Appropriations of the House concurred in by the committee of the Senate.

Mr. HAWLEY. Where will these four hundred and seventy men be kept? How many of them stay at Fort Myer now?

Mr. ALLISON. Usually there are from eighteen to twenty there.

Mr. HAWLEY. Studying?

Mr. ALLISON. Studying.

Mr. HAWLEY. Besides the fatigue party?

Mr. ALLISON. Besides the fatigue party. There is an average of from thirty to forty young men per annum.

Mr. HAWLEY. Are they to be distributed among the different stations?

Mr. ALLISON. It is supposed and believed, certainly by myself, that the forty young men, or fifty, if you please, to come into the Signal Service each year, can be procured without the expensive system of Fort Myer. I know, as does the Senator, that a young man in two or three weeks can enter any signal station and acquire the use of the instruments necessary to enable him to take the observations required in the Signal Service and make reports.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator refers merely to the signaling of flags, lanterns, &c., that is a matter any man can learn in a few weeks.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not refer to that at all. That is a distinct branch of the service known as army signals, with an army code of signals, and it is not supposed that these signal observers, or weather observers, more properly speaking, will in any sense be required to learn what is known in the Army as army signals.

Mr. HAWLEY. Is it contemplated by the committee hereafter that they will not be taught that at all?

Mr. ALLISON. They would not be taught that. They might be taught it, of course, by getting the signal code and acquiring it. They do not use army signaling at any signal station in the United States. Therefore there is no occasion for their acquring that knowledge that I can see.

Mr. CONGER. Does not the Senator know that by the law or by the regulations no young man who is enlisted as a private in the Signal Service Corps can even be sent as an assistant to another observer until he has been six months in training to get some knowledge of the service?

Mr. ALLISON. That is undoubtedly the regulation of the Chief Signal Officer with reference to Fort Meyer, and that is just what it is proposed here to abolish.

Mr. CONGER. Yes. Does the Senator not know that no man is promoted until he has been at least a year in the service and been an assistant at an important signal observation station, to take charge even of the most inconspicuous observing station in the United States?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not.

Mr. CONGER. That is the fact. No man is considered fit to be an assistant at a prominent station until he has had six months of training and examination and study at Fort Myer or somewhere else, and he is not allowed to have the control of the most obscure signal station until he has been a year or a year and a half in the service. We can not trust to uneducated men the delicate observations of the air and the lightning and the storms. The best and wisest men fail in it.

Mr. ALLISON. The universal testimony taken before the commission was that the ordinary education of an observer could be acquired at Fort Myer in from two to five weeks and that it was so acquired. What is that? It is the acquisition of the knowledge of certain instruments, the acquisition of certain information which is derived from what is known as Loomis's Code, a code of laws for the use of the instruments prepared by a professor in Yale College. The remainder of the six months at Fort Myer is occupied in listening to lectures delivered by the second lieutenants and in Army drill and going through all the operations that young men are required to do in the infantry service of the Army. Those are the facts.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now a few words more. If these young men are to pay no attention whatever to what is the Signal Service proper, that is the conveying of language, of words, by the flag, by the lantern, by the reflection from mirrors, &c., if they are not to be instructed in army telegraphy, running out rapidly and setting up military telegraphs and the working of the telegraph in war, if none of them are to receive that kind of military instruction—and I do not see where they are to get it if the school at Fort Myer be abolished—let us then go to the scheme frequently talked of and discussed; let us entirely divorce this other bureau from anything in the shape of military organization. The military feature will remain of very little use. There is this advantage, it is true, in having the four hundred and seventy men enlisted: they may be court-martialed; they are under military authority.

It is necessary to have men under such rule so that they can be governed absolutely by the destinies of military law, if they are to be relied on at all as weather observers. That I understand; but I should not despair of finding a body of young men who would be faithful in that respect if the enlistment were entirely destroyed and they were made civil employés. I have thought it would be a very great injury to the service to make this change entirely; but you are doing it. You are taking a very great step toward it by abolishing Fort Myer, where there is the school of the soldier, of the signal sergeant, as well as of the weather observer.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say to the Senator from Connecticut that General Sheridan when brought before the commission told us that so far as army signaling was concerned and so far as teaching men in the Army that part of the military duty was concerned, so entirely had the Signal Service, so called, run into a weather bureau system that he never got any benefit in the Army from it, that the drill which was done there was of no account in the Army, and that he was all the time entirely outside of Fort Myer teaching men signal service in the Army and using them, but that he never interfered with General Hazen in this regard; that the Army got no benefit from it, and that all the drill there and all the signaling and all the military duty was of no account whatever in the Army; that that had become a weather bureau. That was one of the things that conspired with all the others to lead the commission to the unanimous conclusion that there was nothing here that required that parade and show and the keeping up of a so-called military school, and that is the reason why the commission did not go as far as several members of the commission wanted, that was to divorce this entirely from the Army and make it civil simply.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator indulge me there? Suppose you have four hundred and seventy men enlisted for five years, how are they going to acquire instruction? Suppose forty or fifty men come into the Signal Service every year. You propose to abolish the only station where instruction is given. You propose to do away with the whole basis of the organization as subject to army discipline.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator know what kind of men General Hazen gets into this service? He prides himself not on getting untutored and uninformed minds, but on getting in young men from colleges; the men who are there at Fort Myer represent colleges all over the land. The pay is good; they are anxious to go in; the duties are very simple. There is not one of these young men with his mind sharpened by the drill to which he has been subjected already who can not in even less time than the Senator from Iowa says learn everything about this weather-bureau service—not one. We do not need any school of instruction.

Mr. SEWELL. They can learn about the weather bureau, but they can not learn anything pertaining to the Army.

Mr. HALE. General Sheridan tells us that these men have never anything to do with the Army. The Army never gets an appreciable thing from it.

Mr. SEWELL. Then the law is not observed. The law was intended to cover that point.

Mr. HALE. The whole face and feature of army signaling has disappeared, has dropped out, has sunk from human vision as entirely as if no man had ever known it in the uses of this service. General Hazen, who gives his time and attention to and who is zealous and earnest in this matter, is engaged now in this larger work that is referred to so eloquently by the Senator from Michigan, the making out and sending of bulletins that shall inform men in civilian life, that shall deal with civilian service, that shall operate upon civilian pursuits, and there is no military about it, so much so that General Sheridan told us that the army signaling and the tuition they have to be subjected to is all done by him outside of this. This is of more account—I agree with the Senator from Michigan about it—than a military service, and therefore the Army has no more need of a school up there than there is need of a school for clerks to go into the Agricultural Department, or for clerks who go into any civil department of the Government; indeed, not half as much, because it is a kind of service that men who have had training already in schools and academies and colleges readily fall into.

The commission of which the Senator from Iowa was at the head spent days and nights, had more than a hundred sessions, investigating into this affair, and the Senator from Iowa does not come unequipped to this matter. He has given, I venture to say, more time and attention to the state and to the working and operation of this service than any ten men put together outside the commission, in the Senate.

Mr. SEWELL. What I wanted to get at from the Senator from Maine is this fact: Is not this likely to divest the Signal Service of its connection with the Army?

Mr. HALE. No; it is already divested.

Mr. SEWELL. It is done by this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived the Senate takes a recess until 8 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate resumed its session at 8 o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations in line 2007.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2019, after the word "men," to strike out "at 85 cents per day each;" so as to make the clause read:

For commutation of rations of not exceeding four hundred and seventy Signal Service enlisted men, $145,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to offer some amendments there.

Mr. ALLISON. So do I. If the Senator will wait a moment I will offer an amendment or two which I think will be satisfactory to him.

I propose, in lieu of "$145,000," in line 2020, to insert "$148,737.50."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2020, it is proposed to strike out "$145,000" and to insert "$148,737.50;" so as to make the clause read:

For commutation of rations of not exceeding four hundred and seventy Signal Service enlisted men, $148,737.50.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that mean?

Mr. ALLISON. It is an exact computation of the commutation that these people are entitled to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. All right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want an amendment, after the word "men," in line 2019, to insert:

And for sales of subsistence stores to officers and enlisted men, as authorized by section 1144 of the Revised Statutes, and Army Regulations.

That is simply the old law re-enacted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that an appropriation of money for these sales or only to provide the material?

Mr. COCKRELL. The material, simply placing them on the same footing as other officers of the Army.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not sure that those words will do it, but I will take it that the Senator from Missouri understands it.

Mr. COCKRELL. They are words copied from former bills on the same subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I understand that that amendment and the one as to the amount are agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the clause in line 2026, as follows:

Regular supplies:
Fuel: For various offices on the United States military-telegraph lines, and at stations of observation outside of Washington, D. C. (for fires the year round when needed), $6,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now I offer an amendment to make it conform to the former clause and make it just what it was in the last law.

Mr. ALLISON. With the understanding that it does not change the existing law, I do not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no; it is just continuing it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2025, after the word "Columbia," it is proposed to insert:

And for sales to officers, as authorized by section 8 of the act approved June 18, 1878 (twentieth Statutes at Large, page 150), and Army Regulations.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Missouri if the amendment which he now suggests places these signal officers upon an exact equality with the other officers of the Army?

Mr. COCKRELL. Just the same. It simply places them on the same footing, and this is the language of the former acts on this subject.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to it, then.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The eighth section of the act referred to in a part of it relates to troops in the field, &c. Whether these signal observers can be considered as being in the field or not, may be open to question.

Mr. COCKRELL. If they are in the field it will be considered so, and if they are in cities they will not be considered so, just as the officers. It places them wherever they may be on the same footing as the officers. I think that is right. That is the way it has always been done heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I sympathize with the Chair in his desire to get on; still I should like to understand it. This adds besides "and Army regulations." What are those?

Mr. COCKRELL. That is simply prescribing the quantity that is furnished to all officers at the different places.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It would make a statute which says that anything that is in accordance with Army regulations might be done under this clause, which reads:

And for sales to officers, as authorized by section 8 of the act approved June 18, 1878 (Twentieth Statutes at Large, page 150), and Army regulations.

What are these Army regulations that authorize sales to officers?

Mr. COCKRELL. The Army regulations simply prescribe what shall be furnished. As a matter of course they are not in conflict with the law, but they simply prescribe what shall be furnished.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have seen some Army regulations that were not in conformity with law, and this makes valid any Army regulation.

Mr. COCKRELL. These are simply regulations in regard to fuel and subsistence and have been in force for years and about which there is no controversy at all. This is the same language that has been in all the acts heretofore, in the sundry civil bills. I have them here before me—under the head of "subsistence." The War Department and the accounting officers understand exactly how it is to be interpreted, and it is only to make this conform to what has been existing for years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I move to amend the amendment by inserting before the word "Army" the word "existing;" so as to read:

And existing Army regulations.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 2031.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 2031 I move to change the amount to $47,760; so as to read:

Commutation of fuel: For commutation of fuel for not exceeding four hundred and seventy men of the Signal Corps on duty at the office of the Chief Signal Officer and at signal-stations throughout the United States, $47,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the following clause:

Forage:

For forage for ten mules and six horses, $1,805.65; straw for sixteen animals, at $7 each per annum, as allowed by paragraph 1898, Army Regulations, 1881, $112; for forage for thirteen horses kept by officers in the public service, as allowed by paragraph 1890, Army Regulations, and the act making appropriations for the support of the Army approved February 24, 1881, at $105 each per annum, $1,365; for straw for thirteen horses kept by officers in the public service, as allowed by paragraph 1890, Army Regulations, and the act making appropriations for the support of the Army approved February 24, 1881, at $8.40 each per annum, $109.20; in all, $3,391.85.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why a reference is made back to the distance of five years to find an analogy and an authority for putting this matter in. It refers back to the act of 1881 in both these instances. What has happened in the acts since? Is this a revival of an old allowance that has not been going on for five years, or what is it?

Mr. ALLISON. Two years ago the entire appropriations for the Signal Service were transferred from the Army appropriation bill to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and this is simply a reference to the appropriations respecting the officers of this corps. It has been in every bill since, referring back to that section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Senator, then, to say that this is no increase of the appropriation over the appropriation for the same object in previous years.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Although it refers five years back.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 2082.

Mr. ALLISON. I move, in line 2082, to strike out "$84,000" and insert "$85,440;" so as to make the clause read:

Barracks and quarters:

For commutation of quarters to not exceeding four hundred and seventy enlisted men of the Signal Corps on duty at office of the Chief Signal Officer and at signal stations throughout the United States, $85,440.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2111, after "1879," to strike out "and for supplying headstones for unmarked graves of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Revolution, war of 1812, Mexican and other wars not heretofore provided for, forty-five" and insert "forty;" so as to make the clause read:

Headstones for graves of soldiers: For continuing the work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves of Union soldiers, sailors, and marines, including all who have died in the regular naval service at any time, in national, post, city, and village cemeteries, naval cemeteries at navy-yards and stations of the United States, and other burial places, under the acts of March 3, 1873, and February 3, 1879, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It may not be necessary, but I wish to call attention to line 2107, where the description of these cemeteries occurs. It says "national, post, city, and village cemeteries." In all New England, and I do not know but in New York, there is another municipal division known as towns, which are much more common than cities and villages. Therefore after the word "city" I move to insert the word "town," so as to cover every place where these soldiers are buried. I know that in Vermont a great many of our soldiers' bodies rest in the town cemetery, which has no village organization at all, but is under our New England town organization.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to the insertion of the word "town."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2107, after the word "city," it is proposed to insert the word "town;" so as to read:

In national, post, city, town, and village cemeteries.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to make an inquiry of the chairman of the committee in regard to the paragraph commencing in line 2095 and ask him whether there are any other national cemeteries than those in which are buried volunteer soldiers.

Mr. ALLISON. This paragraph, as I understand it, is intended to cover only those national cemeteries in which volunteer soldiers are buried.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I observe in line 2098 there is an item for "headstones for deceased soldiers of the regular Army," while in the second paragraph below there is a provision "for unmarked graves of Union soldiers." I call attention to the distinction here, if there be one, between regular Army soldiers and Union soldiers.

Mr. ALLISON. That, I believe, is a new division not before inserted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That had better be amended then.

In view of what the Senator from Kansas has stated, and to make it sure that there is no distinction, I move to insert after the word "soldiers," in line 2099, the words "in the service," and then strike out the words "of the regular Army" and insert "United States."

Mr. PLUMB. That will be all right, except that in the second succeeding paragraph there is a general provision embracing the Union soldiers, sailors, and marines.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then why should this paragraph stand at all?

Mr. COCKRELL. The rest of it ought to be stricken out; there is no doubt about that.

Mr. PLUMB. All the rest ought to be stricken out as creating an unnecessary and somewhat injurious distinction perhaps between the regular Army soldiers and Union soldiers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think so too. I withdraw my amendment. That is better.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the amendment suggested?

Mr. PLUMB. Strike out all after the word "materials," in line 2099, to the word "Army."

Mr. ALLISON. Strike out "and headstones for deceased soldiers of the regular Army," in lines 2098 and 2099. I do not object to that. That is a new item and a new estimate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment can only be made by unanimous consent at this stage.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it will be so modified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2098, after the word "materials," it is proposed to strike out "and headstones for deceased soldiers of the Regular Army;" so as to read:

National cemeteries:

For national cemeteries: For maintaining and improving national cemeteries, including fuel for superintendents of national cemeteries, pay of laborers and other employés, purchase of tools and materials, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. Now in the line of the suggestion of the committee, in the last part of the paragraph commencing in line 2103, I move in line 2105 to strike out, commencing with the word "including," down to and including the word "time," in line 2106. That is in exact accord with the amendment of the committee in the latter part of the paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2105, after the word "marines," it is proposed to strike out "including all who have died in the regular naval service at any time;" so as to read:

Headstones for graves of soldiers: For continuing the work of furnishing headstones for unmarked graves of Union soldiers, sailors, and marines, in national, post, city, and village cemeteries, naval cemeteries at navy-yards and stations of the United States, and other burial places, &c.

Mr. ALLISON. This is new also.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to make an inquiry about that. Is it possible there is any existing statute which is qualified by these words, "including all who have died in the regular naval service at any time?" This evidently intends to authorize the War Department to go back to the Mexican war, the Florida war, and any other war, to furnish headstones.

Mr. ALLISON. All these provisions are new. I do not know but that is the reason why the committee did not at the time strike them out.

Mr. HAWLEY. It is possible these words about to be stricken out may have a qualifying effect, enlarging some previous statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 87 of the bill you will see a proposition there stricken out which provided for supplying headstones for unmarked graves of soldiers, sailors, and marines of the Revolution, war of 1812, Mexican and other wars, not heretofore provided for.

Mr. ALLISON. That was stricken out without striking out the corresponding provision.

Mr. COCKRELL. The corresponding provision ought to be stricken out.

Mr. ALLISON. So I agree.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now it is left, as I understand——

Mr. ALLISON. Just as the law is now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That this paragraph of appropriation will cover the placing of suitable marks of memory and respect at the graves of all who have died in the service of the Republic. Am I right about that?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the chairman to say that is the correct construction.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Miscellaneous Objects," after line 2116, to insert:

Survey of Northern and Northwestern lakes: For printing and issuing charts for use of navigators, and electrotyping copper-plates for chart-printing, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2120, to insert:

Surveys and reconnaissances in military divisions and departments: For publication of maps for use of the War Department, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed, and continued to the end of the following clause, from line 2137 to line 2142, inclusive.

Support and medical treatment of destitute patients: For the support and medical treatment of seventy-five medical and surgical patients who are destitute, in the city of Washington, under a contract to be made with the Providence Hospital by the Surgeon-General of the Army, $15,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the chairman of the committee explain what that contract is, and how long it runs, and what is the price paid, &c.

Mr. ALLISON. That contract has been in existence a number of years. I do not know that I can state its details. The appropriation has been made for several years under the Surgeon-General of the Army.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Can the Senator give me a reference to where that contract can be found and how long it runs?

Mr. ALLISON. It is made year by year by the Surgeon-General. It is a very reasonable contract.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do not the official reports set out the contract and show what it is?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think they do in detail.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does this include all sorts of people, or only Army people?

Mr. ALLISON. Only people sent by the Surgeon-General to the hospital.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it go for the time being; but I should like to know precisely what it all means.

Mr. BECK. We made the same provision in the law of last year and for a number of years past.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I remember that; but I have never yet been able to learn precisely what this contract is, how long it runs, whether it is from year to year, what its terms are, and how many patients are to be supported under this contract for $15,000. But I will not delay the bill to look into it now.

Mr. ALLISON subsequently said: I ask leave to have inserted in the RECORD an important statement of the expenditures last year for Providence Hospital. This is in the report of the Surgeon-General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection the paper will be inserted.

The Chair hears none.

The extract is as follows:

PROVIDENCE HOSPITAL.

Under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1885, making appropriation of $15,000 for the "care, support, and medical treatment of seventy-five transiept paupers, medical, and surgical patients, in the city of Washington, under a contract to be made with such institution as the Surgeon-General of the Army may select," a contract was entered into with Providence Hospital, and was fulfilled by that institution to my entire satisfaction and without complaint on the part of the persons sent there for care and treatment. The following is a statement of the amount of relief afforded under the appropriation:

Number of patients in hospital July 1, 1883	80
Number of patients admitted during the year	894
Total number of patients treated	974
Average number of patients admitted per month	74
Number remaining in hospital June 30, 1884	78
Total number of days' treatment afforded	32,376
Average number of days' treatment per patient	33
Average number of patients treated per day	88
Longest term of treatment.....days	365
Shortest term of treatment.....do	1
Number of patients in hospital during the whole year	15

The patients included in the statement represent all classes of diseases, acute and chronic, except those of a contagious nature. The fifteen patients shown as having remained in hospital during the whole year are paupers, incurable, without home or friends.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2145, to increase the appropriation for "Garfield Hospital: For maintenance, to enable it to provide medical and surgical treatment to transient persons unable to pay therefor," from $7,500 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the clause from line 2151 to 2160, inclusive, as follows:

Publication of the Official Records of the War of the Robellion, both of the Union and confederate armies, as follows: For continuing the publication of the Official Records of the War of Rebellion, and printing and binding, under direction of the Secretary of War, of a compilation of the official records, Union and confederate, so far as the same may be ready for publication during the fiscal year, to be distributed as required by act of March 3, 1885, $36,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that the appropriation that was made the year before?

Mr. ALLISON. The same amount, I believe.

Mr. BECK. Precisely the same.

Mr. ALLISON. It is the same amount as last year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will look it up.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2160, to insert:

Examination of claims of certain States and Territories: To enable the Secretrry of War to make examination and report upon the claims of the States and Territories named in the act of June 27, 1882 (chapter 241 of the laws of the Forty-seventh Congress, first session), $7,500, said sum to be expended in his discretion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the chairman explain that fully. What are these claims?

Mr. ALLISON. These are the Indian-hostility claims. An act was passed June 27, 1882. I wish to amend the amendment by inserting $10,000 in line 2167 instead of $7,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish the Senator would explain a little more fully what this provision is of 1882.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator has the statutes. It applies to several States and Territories. It applies to Kansas, Texas, Oregon, and, I think, Nevada. The State of Kansas has had her claim settled and paid, and the State of Texas, I believe, is now having her claims examined. It is necessary for the Secretary of War to have an appropriation for the purpose of enabling the proper officers of the Government to make these examinations. It is merely intended to cover expenditures.

Mr. HOAR. What are they?

Mr. ALLISON. The examinations are made by the regular Army officers.

Mr. HOAR. What is the nature of the claims?

Mr. ALLISON. They arise out of Indian wars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a pretty broad statute.

Mr. ALLISON. So it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to have a little attention given to this. This act of the 27th of June, 1882, chapter 241 of the laws of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress (volume 22, page 111), provides—

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, with the aid and assistance of the Secretary of War—

Which I suppose implies military assistance by the armies of the United States—to cause to be examined and investigated all the claims of the States of Texas, Colorado, Oregon, Nebraska, California, Kansas, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington and Idaho, against the United States of America for moneys alleged to have been expended and for indebtedness alleged to have been assumed by said States and Territories in organizing, arming, equiping, supplying, clothing, subsisting, transporting, and paying the volunteer and military forces of said States and Territories called into active service by the proper authorities thereof, between the 15th day of April, in the year 1861, and the date of this act.

Being a period of twenty years in round numbers—to repel invasions and Indian hostilities in said States and Territories and upon their borders, including all proper expenses necessarily incurred by said States and Territories on account of said forces having been so called into active service as aforesaid, and also all proper claims paid or assumed by said States and Territories for horses and equipments actually lost by said forces while in line of duty in active service (excepting and excluding therefrom any claim said State of Oregon may have for money expended and indebtedness assumed or incurred in suppressing Modoc Indian hostilities during the Modoc Indian war, and in defending that State from invasion by said Indians during the years 1872 and 1873, which were submitted to and passed upon, by either approval or rejection, by Inspector-General James A. Hardie, United States Army). Said accounts for and on behalf of said State of Texas shall be confined to claims arising since the 20th day of October, 1865, and shall include the necessary expenses of defense against Mexican raids or invasions as well as those for defense against Indian hostilities, and for and on behalf of said Territories of Idaho and Washington for said claims arising in the years 1877 and 1878.

Then it makes sundry limitations. That act is four years old and upward, and I should like to ask the chairman of the committee how much money has been appropriated already for these examinations and reports.

Mr. ALLISON. This is the first appropriation, I will say to the Senator from Vermont, for this purpose, but it has been estimated for by every Secretary of War since the passage of this act. Secretary Lincoln estimated $25,000, and the present Secretary estimated $25,000, and wrote to the committee a very urgent letter respecting it, and stated that these claims were being pressed. They are on file in the War Department, and they are being pressed by the States interested, and it is absolutely necessary that he shall have a small fund—he estimated for a fund of $25,000—to enable him to make a critical and careful examination of these claims. The Committee on Appropriations inserted $7,500, and have instructed me since that to move to increase it to $10,000. I therefore move that amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a very dangerous law.

Mr. ALLISON. So it is, but it is there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we might well hold up a little while and see about that.

Mr. ALLISON. It is very difficult to hold up without repealing the law. The Committee on Appropriations on examination of the question felt that it was important to make some provision in order to give the Secretary of War an opportunity to make a careful investigation of these claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is no more difficult to hold up than it has been for four years last past, I suppose. There is no gravitation that increases the rapidity of the pressure.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Secretary of War has already made some examinations. The State of Kansas has had all her claims presented, examined, and paid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Out of what fund was the examination made?

Mr. ALLISON. It was made without any additional appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why can it not be done again?

Mr. ALLISON. There was no appropriation made for the examination of those claims; but there has been one appropriation made for the payment of the Kansas claims, an appropriation of $230,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you mean to say $230,000 has been spent in the examination already?

Mr. ALLISON. No; I say claims have been examined to the extent of $230,000 of the State of Kansas and have been paid by appropriations under that law. The claims of the State of Texas I think are much larger than the claims of the State of Kansas, and the claims of the other States and Territories are on file in the War Department, and the Secretary of War desires to make a careful and critical examination of certain of these claims, and he has no fund with which to make that examination. This appropriation is for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to say in regard to this law that although it was passed before I became a member of this body I have examined it since, and the class of claims payment of which is provided for under the act referred to by the Senator from Vermont is a class of claims that has always been paid by the General Government. The States have always been reimbursed for expenses in defending themselves against Indian hostilities and against invasions. There is not a precedent to the contrary since the Constitution was formed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator mean to say that was the breadth of this act of 1882?

Mr. DOLPH. Yes, sir, and some acts have gone further. I took occasion in making a report on the claim of the State of New York to cite all the acts that had ever been passed, and many of the reports that had been made on the claims of States—a report I made at the last session of Congress, in which I examined the matter thoroughly.

I say these are a class of claims that have always been paid to the States. The claims of Kansas have been examined and reported upon and paid, appropriations having been made for them. Now the Secretary of War reports that notwithstanding he details officers of the Army to make these examinations and audit these claims, it requires money to pay the expense of office rent, I think, and clerk-hire and some other incidental expenses in the examination of the claims; and he has asked, as the preceding Secretary of War, his predecessor, asked, $25,000 for that purpose.

The senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] introduced a bill at the present session, and I am not sure but it passed the Senate, making an appropriation of $25,000 for that purpose. I am only sorry that he is not in his seat.

Mr. PLUMB. That bill is in the Committee on Appropriations, and has not been passed.

Mr. DOLPH. I know that it has not passed the House.

Mr. ALLISON. It has not passed the Senate. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOLPH. This is a small sum, but it will enable the work to be carried on. The claims have been presented, but they can not be examined without an appropriation. I am certain the appropriation is a proper one.

Mr. PLUMB. There can not be any doubt in my judgment that the Government is committed not by this law, but by precedents that run clear back through the history of all the States in the Union, including the State of Vermont, the State of New York, and all the older States that had to do with the question of defense against Indians and other public enemies, except it may be in regard to the payment for horses. This law is certainly no broader than the bills that have been passed from time to time for the allowance of claims of the various States.

I had occasion many years ago when I first introduced a bill on this subject, and which was finally incorporated in the law referred to, to run that question down very thoroughly, and I was very much surprised to find the number of precedents there were for action of that kind at a very early date, the Senator from Oregon says extending through the entire history of the Republic. It is true also, as stated by the Senator from Iowa, that the State of Kansas has gotten its pay or the largest portion of it under this law, amounting to about $230,000.

I believe that the appropriation ought to be made. While I shall not at all object to making it $10,000—and I think possibly that under the circumstances that may be the wiser thing to do—I still have a conviction, growing out of an experience which I will not here narrate, that it is a much larger sum than would be really necessary if we could only apply to the administration of the War Department in this matter the rules that apply in the transaction of ordinary private business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is to have the officers work.

Mr. PLUMB. This determination will be arrived at upon the judgment of Army officers detailed for that purpose, and while it is true that in the paucity of room which exists in that great building which has already cost, I think, about $15,000,000 there is not space there to assemble a board of three officers for this work, the only thing that is necessary to be done is to rent a building in which they can be stored. I think myself that if we could have this matter done as it ought to be done a thousand dollars would be ample, but I have had experience enough in these matters to know that a thousand dollars does not amount to much in these cases, and so far as I am concerned I am entirely willing to accede to the proposed amendment of $10,000. The Secretary wanted $25,000, and as far as I am concerned I am glad to get off at $10,000. The experience that I have had, as I said, indicates that that is outside the necessities of the situation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This act of 1882 is broader than Indian hostilities. It includes invasions, and it seems to imply that any State or Territory may on its own account and in its own discretion proceed to resist invasion and prepare to suppress it and to suppress Indian hostilities, and come to the Treasury of the United States to be reimbursed for whatever it has expended on its own account and in its own way and in its own discretion for such purposes.

I was under the impression—I do not remember this law; I was not in the city of Washington at the time the act passed—I was under the impression that it was the mission of the United States itself, as the government of the whole people for the whole people, to repress Indian hostilities and to repress and prevent invasions and to resist invasions, and that it must be a very rare and urgent and extreme case, indeed, in which a State or Territory would be justified in resorting to military force to do either of these things. That is a case extreme and sudden as where the President of the United States, the Commander-in-Chief of all its armies and all its militia, had not time in the emergency to act and to bring the force of the Government of the whole people to bear for the objects named in this law.

It will be an agreeable surprise to the tax-payers of the State of Vermont, who had some experience of this kind during the war that is now called the confederate war, but used to be called the war of the rebellion, in raising troops to resist confederate attacks from the friendly and allied territory of Canada. We had never gotten up to the idea—and probably my people in Vermont never observed this act—that the expense to which the State of Vermont went in putting troops on the border when the confederate authorities, as they were called, were fomenting invasions from that side of the country, as they had under the laws of war a perfect right to do, and as the English, favoring their side, were perfectly willing they should do, were to be paid for out of the Treasury of the United States.

It will be rather an agreeable surprise to us that we are to get one or two hundred thousand dollars on the theory of this act and on this investigation; and that rather leads me from a local motive to be in favor of this investigation; but I am very much afraid (to come back to the philosophy and propriety of the thing) that this act of 1882 goes altogether too far, and seems to be a continuing authority to the States and to the Territories to go on their own discretion and in their own way and do whatever they like or think fit and proper to resist any invasion that they may suspect that is about to be made or any hostilities that are about to break out. I do not think it is a very safe act.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am very sorry indeed that the aspirations of the distinguished Senator from Vermont prevent him from speaking of the "war of the rebellion," and that he has got to be so particular, fearing that he may offend the sensibilities of those engaged in that war, that he calls it the war of the confederacy. I hope the Senator will not indulge in that expression any more. Call it by its right name—the war of the rebellion.

Mr. President, I drew the bill that is under discussion. Sundry bills on this question were referred to me in the Committee on Military Affairs and I prepared this bill to meet all the cases, and I challenge the Senator from Vermont or any other Senator to show from 1789 down to this time one solitary law as well guarded, as carefully guarded, as closely guarded as this law is. I examined every solitary act on this question; I examined all the appropriations that had been made, and I put every provision in this bill that had ever been put in any other bill in covering the expenditures to be made under it.

Read section 2:

SEC. 2. That no higher rate shall be allowed for the services of said forces, and for supplies, transportation, and other proper expenses, than was allowed and paid by the United States for similar services in the same grade and for the same time in the United States Army serving in said States and Territories, and for similar supplies, transportation, and other proper expenses during the same time furnished the United States Army in the same country.

That did not give the States and Territories any opportunity of making any change over and above what the Army of the United States was at that very time paying in that region of country. Now read further:

And no allowance shall be made for services of such forces except for the time during which they were engaged in active service in the field; and no allowance shall be made for the services of any person in more than one capacity at the same time, or for any expenditures for which the Secretary of War shall decide there was no necessity at the time and under all the circumstances.

More complete guards could not be put around any provision.

SEC. 3. That to enable the said officers to make the examination and investigation herein authorized the governors of the said States and Territories, respectively, or their duly authorized agents, shall file with the Secretary of the Treasury abstracts and statements of all such claims by said States and Territories, showing the amounts of such expenditures and indebtedness and the purposes for which they were made, and accompanied with proper vouchers and evidence.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, at the earliest practicable time, report to Congress for final action the results of such examination and investigation, and the amount or amounts found to have been properly expended for the purposes aforesaid: Provided, That whenever the examination of the accounts of any State or Territory hereinbefore mentioned shall have been completed, the same shall be separately reported to Congress, without reference to the final examination of the accounts of any other State or Territory.

This law provided that the governors of the States and Territories should file with the Secretary of the Treasury an itemized account of every claim for which they asked reimbursement, accompanied by vouchers and receipts for the sum. This was to be done before any action was taken. Then the officers of the Army, the regular officers, and the officers of the Treasury Department were to examine all these accounts, and the closest scrutiny was required to be given. They were prohibited from allowing these States and Territories any more than the regular Army acting in its ordinary capacity was allowing at the same time and place, and they were not allowed to pay these volunteer troops for any time except when they were in active service in the field in pursuit of Indians.

It is well known to every Senator here that in almost all the Western States and Territories there have been Indian outbreaks where the Indians would have completed their raid and their depredations before the President of the United States could have gotten a regular soldier within 100 miles of the place unless he was stationed there. Look at the raid that was made through Kansas. Its traces remain there, the remains of what was done even before the governor of the State could get the militia out to meet the raid. So it was in Washington Territory, so it was in Oregon, and so it was in other places.

This law was provided to adjust all these. Each State or Territory was coming in with a separate bill and these were all taken together, and this bill was provided for that purpose. In many other cases where bills have been passed the auditing by the Treasury and War Department was an absolute settlement of the claims and they were paid; but in this case under this law even after the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Treasury have both adjudged the claims to be just they can not pay a dollar of them. They simply examine them and then report them back to Congress, and it is then in the power of Congress to do just what it pleases—appropriate or not.

There has only been one State whose claims have been entirely completed and reported to Congress and that was the State of Kansas; the accounts of that State were in a nearer state of completion than any other, and probably (unless possibly Texas may be as large) Kansas had the largest claims of any State or Territory. There were for years separate bills pending here, and they had been reported favorably and had passed the Senate once I believe for the reimbursement of Kansas alone, appropriating a certain amount of money. At the Congress of 1882, all these bills were put together and this law was prepared and was passed. There was a report made in the case, quite a lengthy report, giving the whole history of it.

The bill was prepared and reported, and, after full investigation, became a law, and I assure the Senator from Vermont that if that law is followed there can be no swindling under it, there can be no advantage taken. The governors have to file the accounts, itemized, with the vouchers and the receipts. Then the Department investigates them and by the rules there they report what they think ought to be allowed and then Congress determine whether they will pay a dollar or not.

Mr. HAWLEY. I think the question before the Senate is not upon the merits of that statute, but the question is whether the United States will examine these papers with a view of either refusing or paying these claims. I have not observed that claims diminish with age. The evidence decreases but the claim has usually grown.

One other observation I wish to make to my friend, the Senator from Vermont. He intimated that if the statute had been known to be in force it was possible Vermont might have gained some benefit from this appropriation for repelling invasions from Canada during the war of the rebellion. This is a little mistake. He will find himself without any benefit under the act, because there was a payment made to the State of Vermont for expenses incurred in protection against invasions from Canada in 1864, by the act of June 26, 1866, amounting to $16,463.81, and the amount has been paid.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That amount has been paid, but the others have not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HAWLEY. I still have the floor. I was only going to add in response to the remark of the Senator from Vermont that that was all Vermont claimed on the 4th of September, 1867, apparently.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We had not the act of 1882 in force at that time.

Mr. HAWLEY. No; the act of 1882 was not in force, but the Senator referred to expenses incurred by Vermont in attempting to protect herself against invasions from Canada during the rebellion, and if Vermont failed to present her bill in 1867 when she had an opportunity under a law for that, she is not a good Yankee State.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Probably not a law to this effect unhappily at that time.

Mr. MAXEY. I shall not go over the ground occupied by the Senator from Missouri. I was myself a member of the Committee on Military Affairs at the time the act of 1882 was prepared by that committee, presented to the Senate, passed through the Senate without, as far as I remember, a single amendment to it except to add California, went to the House, passed the House, and became a law. There were various States which had claims, and each of those States had presented a separate bill, Kansas, Nevada, Colorado, Oregon, Texas, and by amendments placed on the bill after it came to the Senate, on the motion of the late Senator from California, Mr. Miller, California was added. There was also the Territory of Washington and there were some other Territories perhaps included. The Committee on Military Affairs took all those bills and directed a committee bill to be prepared, which was done by the Senator from Missouri, and that bill passed as I have stated.

Now, the question is, shall the law be carried out? After the passage of this bill in 1882, Mr. Lincoln then being Secretary of War, I went to the War Department and had a conversation with him. He stated to me that there was a necessity for an appropriation to enable him to carry out this law, and after conferring with him in regard to it he sent a special estimate to the Committee on Appropriations, which is on file in the papers of that committee. When I returned to the Senate from the War Department I prepared an amendment to the appropriation bill then pending, sent it to the Committee on Appropriations, and they allowed the appropriation, which was $25,000. It came to the Senate and passed the Senate. No one dissented. It was lost in some way in conference.

During the present session of Congress I had another conversation with the present Secretary of War, Mr. Endicott, on the same subject. He took the same view as Mr. Lincoln, that this appropriation was necessary in order to the faithful execution of the law. He took the same course that Mr. Lincoln had taken. I proposed the amendment to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee took it up. That was also $25,000, but the committee reported only $7,500, which, in my judgment, is not enough to put the law in operation, according to the views of the Secretary of War; and the amount is now proposed to be increased to $10,000.

A word now on the subject of precedents. It was not necessary for the Senator from Connecticut to have stopped at the precedent for Vermont. There is a precedent for Minnesota and many other States, all of which were examined by the Committee on Military Affairs before this bill was presented from that committee to the Senate. But there can be no question whatever, where a State honestly and in good faith has expended money to raise forces to defend her own people when there are not sufficient troops at the command of the Federal Government to give them protection, that it is the bounden duty of the State to provide for the defense of her citizens from the scalping-knife of the Indian or from the raids of the Mexican.

That there were raids across the Rio Grande during a number of years into Texas, accompanied by robbery, arson, and every crime known to the law, is a part and parcel of the history of this country. That continued for years, and the State of Texas as a matter of duty to her own citizens did organize forces and send them to the frontier to protect her citizens. Subsequently the United States Government did send troops there in sufficient numbers to furnish defense, and I was informed by the late distinguished General of the Army, the brother of the present distinguished Presiding Officer of the Senate, that he had placed on the frontier of Texas a sixth of the effective force of the entire Army. It was absolutely necessary to the defense, of that frontier for 1,200 miles, and a large portion of that a wilderness, to place one-sixth of the Army there. My honored colleague [Mr. COKE] was for a portion of that time governor of the State, and as a matter of duty he called out forces and did defend the frontier.

A State has no power to raise and support armies. It is the duty of the Federal Government to provide for the common defense, and, ex necessitate rei, when the duty is temporarily devolved on the States to raise troops, it is the business of the Government, who ought to exercise that duty, to refund the money thus paid by the State for the common defense.

So, Mr. President, the attack on this appropriation goes further than that. It is an attack on the majesty of the law. The law is in force on the statute-book, and the proper officer, the Secretary of War, declares that he can not execute that law without the aid of this appropriation; and the Appropriation Committee has done its duty when it comes forward with the necessary appropriation to enable the Secretary of War to discharge that duty. Of all the States which were embraced in that law, the State of Kansas and that only has received the amount to which she was justly entitled.

That claim went through the War Department and went through the Treasury Department. They came to Congress and the necessary appropriation was made. Why make fish of one and flesh of another? Why, having paid that claim, lock and bar and bolt the door and say no other State shall be indemnified? That will not do. It is not just and it is not right that the appropriation should be refused.

If these claims are not just, you have three distinct ways of closing the matter out, I say to the Senator from Vermont. First, if the claims are not just and meritorious, it is the duty of the Secretary of War so to say. Second, the claims are visaed by the Secretary of War before they are submitted here to Congress, and after all that is done the claims are presented here to this body; and it is for Congress after full investigation to determine whether or not these claims shall be paid.

De Lolme said that in a certain difficulty between the executive and the legislative department in England the executive could supply a ship of war but Parliament could leave the ship stranded; in other words, he would not make the necessary appropriation to carry out the law of the land. That is a dangerous method of thwarting law, and there is no need for it. If these claims are honest we have here the means of determining that fact, and if they are honest and clear we should pay them. If they are not honest claims then Congress can so say and payment be disallowed; but in the mean time let the law be carried out, furnish the officers of the Government the means of examining and auditing these claims and presenting them in a legal and intelligent form to Congress so that we may act upon them and determine whether or not they should be allowed.

I hope the amount will be raised to $10,000. I personally believe it is all we can get, but I do not know that the Secretary of War can carry out the act with that but he can start with that.

My State is no more interested in this matter than the State of Oregon, the State of Nevada, the State of California, the State of Colorado, and the Territories which have no representation in this body; but, sir, in the name of justice and fair dealing and right between man and man it is right that these States if they have a claim should have a fair and just way of presenting and asserting that claim, and if the claims are honest Congress should allow them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "United States military prison at Fort Leavenworth," in line 2230, after the word "prisoners," to strike out the words "three thousand" and to insert "five thousand two hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

For lumber, new flooring, and paints for the hospital, and materials for general repairs of guards' quarters, prison buildings, shops and officers' quarters; new roofs, floors, painting, and pay of temporary employés for work which can not be done by prisoners, $5,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2238, to increase the total amount of the appropriations for the "United States military prison at Fort Leavenworth," from $87,667.76 to $89,917.76.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amentment was, in the appropriations for "National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers," after line 2276, to insert:

For construction and repairs at Southern Branch, Hampton, Va., as estimated in Appendix Jj, pages 299 and 300, Book of Estimates for 1887, except the items for water-supply, gas-machine, John's Creek, and electric light, $107,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2289, after the word "million," to strike out "five hundred and seventy-three thousand five hundred" and insert "six hundred and eighty-one thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For out-door relief and incidental expenses, $15,000; in all, $1,681,000. And hereafter the estimates for the support of the Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers shall be submitted by items.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Under the Department of Justice," in the appropriations for the Department of Justice building, after line 2305, to insert:

For preparing for occupancy the fifth-floor rooms, including the repairing, cleaning, and coloring of the walls, painting the wood-work, procuring and putting down carpets and matting or proper floor-covering, providing necessary desks, book-cases, and other furniture, gas-fixtures, and heating apparatus, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2314, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Penitentiary in Wyoming Territory: For necessary repairs of penitentiary building, $25,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert, after the word "for," the words "for completion and;" so as to read:

Penitentiary in Wyoming Territory: For completion and necessary repairs of penitentiary building, $25,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2319, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For one brick tank-house, with wrought-iron tanks with a capacity of not less than 35,000 gallons, $4,500; in all, $19,500;

So as to make the clause read:

Reform School, District of Columbia: For one family building of brick and stone, complete, to include steam-heating apparatus, gas and water supply, $15,000; for one brick tank-house, with wrought-iron tanks with a capacity of not less than 35,000 gallons, $4,500; in all, $19,500; one-half of said sum to be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2328, after the words "may be," to strike out "required" and insert "assigned;" so as to make the clause read:

Court-house, Washington, D. C.: For annual repairs, steam-heating, inside changes, preparation of such rooms in the western wing of the old portion of the building as may be assigned for occupancy of the Civil Service Commission, and for repairing roof and cornice of the court-house, Washington, D. C., under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, $12,000: Provided, That the Civil Service Commission shall remain in the building of the Agricultural Department until the rooms herein indicated are ready for their occupancy.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2357, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Expenses of Territorial courts in Utah Territory: For defraying the contingent expenses of the courts, including fees of the United States district attorney and his assistants, the fees and per diems of the United States commissioners and clerks of the court, and the fees, per diems, and traveling expenses of the United States marshal for the Territory of Utah, with the expenses of summoning jurors, subpœnaing witnesses, of arresting, guarding, and transporting prisoners, of hiring and feeding guards, and of supplying and caring for the penitentiary, to be paid under the direction and approval of the Attorney-General, upon accounts duly verified and certified, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to add after line 2357:

To aid in the further and more effectual prosecution of crimes in the Territory of Utah, $10,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Attorney-General.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2357, to insert:

Industrial Home in Utah Territory: To aid in the establishment of an Industrial Home in the Territory of Utah, to provide employment and means of self-support for the dependent women who renounce polygamy, and the children of such women of tender age, in said Territory, with a view to aid in the suppression of polygamy therein, $50,000; said sum to be expended upon requisition of and under the management of a board of control to consist of the governor and justices of the supreme court and the district attorney of said Territory; and said board shall duly and properly expend said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purposes herein indicated, and shall, from time to time, report to the President their acts and doings and expenditures hereunder, for transmission to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed; as follows:

Defending suits in claims against the United States: For defraying the necessary expenses incurred in the examination of witnesses and procuring of evidence in the matter of claims against the United States and the District of Columbia pending in any Department, and for necessary expenses incurred in defending suits in the Court of Claims, to be expended under the direction of the Attorney-General, $20,000. One-half of the expenses incurred hereunder on account of the District of Columbia shall be paid out of the revenues of said District; and hereafter the estimates therefor shall be submitted in the annual estimates for the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before we pass from that matter in regard to defending suits and claims against the United States I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why this appropriation is confined to the District of Columbia? It is only "claims against the United States and the District of Columbia pending in any Department." Does that mean separately and distributively?

Mr. ALLISON. In lines 2376 and 2377?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes. Would that allow the expenditure of this money in respect of a claim against the United States that did not concern the District of Columbia?

Mr. ALLISON. So I understand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With that construction, then, it is right. Of course, it ought to be distributive.

Mr. ALLISON. It is for all claims that are presented against the United States and the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Taken distributively.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2406, before the word "thousand," to strike out "thirty" and insert "thirty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Prosecution of crimes: For the detection and prosecution of crimes against the United States, preliminary to indictment, and for the investigation of official acts, records, and accounts of officers of the courts, including the investigation of the accounts of marshals, attorneys, clerks of the United States courts, and the United States commissioners, under the direction of the Attorney-General, and for this purpose all the records and dockets of these officers, without exception, shall be examined by his agents at any time, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2410, to insert:

Defense in French spoliation claims: To enable the Attorney-General to make proper defense for the United States in the matter of the French spoliation claims, $5,000, to be expended in his discretion.

Mr. ALLISON. After the word "thousand," in line 2414, I move to insert the words "six hundred;" so as to read:

Five thousand six hundred dollars, to be expended in his discretion.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE subsequently said: I was called out for a moment and the amendment from line 2411 to line 2415, inclusive, has been agreed to in my absence, I judge.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes. I had $600 added to the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. Would the Senator consent to insert in place of that the item which was contained in the legislative bill?

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to hear it read.

Mr. FRYE. It is as follows:

For the following additional force rendered necessary under the provisions of the act of January 20, 1885, providing for the ascertainment of the claims of American citizens for spoliations committed by the French prior to July 31, 1801, namely: Two law clerks at $2,000 each; one stenographer at $1,600, to be employed for one year, and to be appointed by the Attorney-General; in all $5,600.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say to the Senator from Maine that I inserted $600 additional to cover that exact expenditure.

Mr. HALE. The provision in the bill is better than what my colleague has read.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the phraseology of the bill is rather an improvement. What the Senator has read seems to be rather too long, and I think the Attorney-General can and will under this phraseology do what the Senator thinks ought to be done.

Mr. HALE. The provision in the bill is better for the Department.

Mr. FRYE. One of the gentlemen from the Department called my attention to it, knowing that I was interested in getting many of those French spoliation claims tried, and he said that they preferred this very much.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is all right.

Mr. FRYE. Very well; I care nothing about it.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "United States courts," in line 2426, after the word "thereto," to strike out "generally, the expenses stated under the following heads;" and in line 2428, after the word "namely," to insert "those stated in the following itemized list;" so as to make the clause read:

Expenses of the United States courts: For defraying the expenses of the Supreme Court: of the circuit and district courts of the United States and of the District of Columbia and Alaska; of jurors and witnesses; of suits in which the United States is interested; of the prosecution of offenses committed against the United States; of the safe-keeping of prisoners; and of the enforcement of the provisions of title 26 of the Revised Statutes, or any acts amendatory thereof or supplementary thereto, namely, those stated in the following itemized list.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "court," at the end of line 2450, to insert "and when they attend under sections 583, 584, 671, 672, and 2013 of the Revised Statutes;" so as to make the clause read:

For fees of clerks, $175,000. But no part of the appropriations under this act shall be used to pay the fees of United States marshals or clerks upon any writ or bench warrant for the arrest of any person or persons who may be indicted by any United States grand jury, or against whom an information may be filed, where such person or persons is or are under a recognizance taken by or before any United States commissioner, or other officer authorized by law to take such recognizance, requiring the appearance of such person or persons before the court in which such indictment is found or information is filed, and when such recognizance has not been forfeited or said defendant is not in default, unless the court in which such indictment or information is pending orders a warrant to issue; nor shall any part of the money appropriated by this act be used in payment of a per diem compensation to any clerk or marshal for attendance in court except for days when business is actually transacted in court, and when they attend under sections 583, 584, 671, 672, and 2013 of the Revised Statutes, which fact shall be certified in the approval of their accounts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2474, after the word "court," to insert "for stenographic clerk for the Chief-Justice and for each associate justice of the Supreme Court, at not exceeding $1,600 each;" and in line 2483, after the word "hundred," to strike out "thousand" and insert "and fourteen thousand four hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For pay of bailiffs and criers; of expenses of district judges who may be sent out of their districts to hold court; of meals for jurors when ordered by court; of compensation for jury commissioners, $5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of court: for stenographic clerk for the Chief-Justice and for each associate justice of the Supreme Court, at not exceeding $1,600 each; and for such other miscellaneous expenses as may be authorized by the Attorney-General, including the employment of janitors and watchmen in rooms or buildings rented for the use of courts, interpreters, experts, and stenographers; of furnishing and collecting evidence where the United States is a party in interest, and other miscellaneous expenses, $314,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Right there an amendment should come in which went out of the legislative appropriation bill. It will speak for itself. I move to add, after line 2484:

For increased clerical service in the Court of Claims, made necessary by the business of the French spoliation claims, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the heading "Under legislative," after line 2491, to insert:

Works of art:

For the purchase of works of art, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I move to amend the paragraph by adding after the word "art," in line 2493, the words:

And the necessary cleaning and repairing thereof, including new frames.

So as to read:

For the purchase of works of art, and the necessary cleaning and repairing thereof, including new frames, under the direction of the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress, $10,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I move to add to the paragraph the following words:

And the proper accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to credit the disbursing officer of the Joint Committee on the Library with the sum heretofore disallowed on his account for works of art for the Capitol, the same being for the cleaning and repairing of such works of art at the Capitol, $172.50.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. Did these amendments come from the committee?

Mr. SEWELL. They come from the Committee on the Library.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2508, after the word "million," to insert "one hundred thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For the public printing, for the public binding, and for paper for the public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving for both Houses of Congress, the Supreme Court of the United States, the supreme court of the District of Columbia, the Court of Claims, the Library of Congress, the Executive Office, and the Departments, including the salaries or compensation of all necessary clerks and employés, for labor (by the day, piece, or contract), and for all the necessary materials which may be needed in the prosecution of the work, $2,100,000; and from the said sum hereby appropriated printing and binding may be done by the Public Printer to the amounts following, respectively, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2513, after the word "debates," to strike out "nine hundred" and insert "one million;" and in line 2514, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

And printing and binding for Congress chargeable to this appropriation, when recommended to be done by the Committee on Printing, shall be so recommended in a report containing an estimate of the cost thereof, together with a statement from the Public Printer of the amount and cost of work previously ordered by Congress within the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made (all reserve work shall be bound in sheep).

So as to read:

For printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates, $1,010,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 2547, to insert:

And the scientific reports known as the monographs and bulletins of the Geological Survey shall not be published until specific and detailed estimates are made therefor, and specific appropriations made in pursuance of such estimates; and no engraving for the annual reports or for such monographs and bulletins, or of illustrations, sections, and maps, shall be done until specific estimates are submitted therefor and specific appropriations made based on such estimates: Provided, That these limitations shall not apply to the current fiscal year, nor to any of the reports, mineral resources, monographs, or bulletins that may have been transmitted for publication to the Public Printer prior to the passage of this act: Provided further, That all printing and engraving for the Geological Survey, the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department, and the Signal Service shall hereafter be estimated for separately and in detail, and appropriated for separately for each of said bureaus.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2572, to insert:

To enable the Public Printer to comply with the provisions of the law granting fifteen days' annual leave to the employés of the Government Printing Office, $95,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2576, to insert:

For protection from destruction by fire of the Public Printing Office buildings and property, at Washington, D. C., by the introduction therein of such methods as the Architect of the Capitol and the Public Printer may regard as most efficient for the purpose, $8,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2582, to insert:

Senate:

Eor extending Senate boiler-vaults and for additional steam-boilers for the same, $10,500, the same to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol.

To provide independent ventilating apparatus for the restaurant kitchen in the Senate wing of the Capitol, $1,500, the same to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill is concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. After line 2591 I move to add:

For the construction of an elevator in the east end of the Senate wing of the Capitol, in the northeast corner of the corridor of the lower entrance, and the closing up of the doorway of the Senate committee-room of the District of Columbia, and the building of a new doorway in the southwest corner of said room, $15,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary; and the Architect of the Capitol is directed to have the same completed for use by December 1, 1886.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations which have been passed over will now be stated in their order.

Mr. BLAIR. Is it in order to move an amendment now?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not now, as amendments of the committee are still pending.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations report to strike out lines 46, 47, and 48, in the following words:

For court-house and post-office at Denver, Colo.: For completion of building under present limit, $97,000.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to offer an amendment to that amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment heretofore offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the words:

For completion of building under present limit.

And to insert after the word "dollars:"

That the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colo.," approved May 8, 1882, be amended by making the limit for said building $575,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost thereof. And the Supervising Architect and the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are authorized and required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed in making plans and contracts for the erection of said building.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado that it changes existing law.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to know what the rule is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is that it is not in compliance with existing law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That it changes existing law.

Mr. TELLER. What is the rule that says you can not change an existing law?

Mr. ALLISON. The rule is at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the clause in regard to general legislation, the Chair supposes.

Mr. TELLER. It is not general legislation. I do not think the Senator can claim that it is general legislation.

Mr. FRYE. There is no such rule.

Mr. TELLER. I was aware of it, and that is the reason why I asked for the rule. I want to give the history of this, if I can, before the Chair passes upon this question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. TELLER. In this case the amendment is a fac-simile of a bill which has passed the Senate and gone to the House and remains unacted upon. So this appropriation has already passed the Senate and gone to the House. I offered this amendment and referred it to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. The committee reported it favorably and sent it to the Appropriation Committee, so that it has passed, I think, the necessary committees, and I do not think it can be objected to on the question of order. I ask the Senator from Iowa if he still insists on the question of order.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes. I call attention to paragraph 1 of Rule XVI.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Senator from Colorado if this is moved by direction of a standing or select committee?

Mr. TELLER. It is moved by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has it been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. TELLER. It has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as the papers show.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that if this has been introduced on the report of a standing committee and has been duly referred under the rule to the Committee on Appropriations it is in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I call the attention of the Chair to paragraph 3 of the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has read that. It clearly is not general legislation within the meaning of that clause. The Chair is of opinion that special legislation relates to the item referred to in the text of the bill and it does not fall within the class of general legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. Under that ruling of the Chair would it not be competent now to move for the erection of a public building de novo?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Where it has been reported from a standing or select committee and referred to the Committee on Appriations in that way it would be clearly in order.

Mr. PLUMB. That is to say, you can move for the enactment affirmatively for the erection of a new building on an appropriation bill and that would not be general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no doubt of it. There are appropriations of that kind in the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. But they are to carry out existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that any new item of appropriation regularly reported from a standing or select committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations in due form providing for the erection of a new building would be competent.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Chair hold that that would not be general legislation?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would not.

Mr. PLUMB. That is what I wanted to know. It has not been so held heretofore, and the committee has not acted on that idea heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would be glad to find any precedent to the contrary.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to suggest that I think the Senator from Kansas is in error. A year ago, or at least at the close of the last session of the Forty-eighth Congress, by a vote of the Senate precisely such an amendment was declared to be in order. Half a dozen or more amendments were offered and made a part of the sundry civil appropriation bill and became a law authorizing the erection of public buildings.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What year was that?

Mr. DOLPH. That was the last session of the Forty-eighth Congress, found in the act of March 3, 1885, while the Senator from Vermont was in the chair and ruled upon the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would also call attention to the fact that there are new items of appropriations not provided for by existing law reported in this bill by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. No, I do not think so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is one for the custom-house and post-office at El Paso, Tex., for procuring a site and commencing the erection of a building, $50,000.

Mr. HALE. That is in pursuance of an existing law which passed both Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That the Chair did not see. The Chair is of opinion that new items of appropriations may be reported from a standing committee if they are referred to the Committee on Appropriations in due order.

Mr. TELLER. The Chair having ruled my amendment in order——

Mr. PLUMB. I think I shall appeal from the decision of the Chair. It certainly will result in this, that there will be no necessity for any Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. It will prevent in every possible way the discussion of the propriety of the erection of any building. It will absorb in the hands of the Appropriation Committee and in the hands of the Senate acting upon bills as reported the assumption practically of all the business of this body.

I have no objection if that is to be the rule, but I want it so fixed as to be thoroughly understood hereafter, because if that is the case there will be no necessity for referring any of these bills to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. TELLER. That is the very first step, as I understand. It has got to go to that committee, and when it has the approval of that committee it becomes in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The question before the Senate is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Chair be kind enough to have read the precise form of this amendment?

The CHIEF CLERK. In lines 47 and 48 it is proposed to strike out the words "for completion of building under present limit;" so as to read:

For court-house and post-office at Denver, Colo., $97,000.

Mr. TELLER. It does not raise the appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What do you add?

Mr. TELLER. The Secretary will read it.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "dollars," in line 48, it is proposed to add:

That the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colo., approved May 8, 1882, be amended by making the limit for said building $575,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost thereof. And the Supervising Architect and the officers of the United States Government having charge of the erection of public buildings are authorized and required to be governed by the limitation hereby prescribed in making plans and contracts for the erection of said building.

Mr. ALLISON. It seems to me perfectly clear that that is legislation. It is the insertion of a provision upon this appropriation bill changing existing law, legislating with reference to a public building, fixing the limit, directing the architect, and making a new law for the erection of this building at Denver.

Mr. TELLER. The chairman still adheres to the opinion that there is a rule somewhere about changing existing law. I know there is not any such rule, and the chairman will not claim that there is.

Mr. PLUMB. This is it, it proposes general legislation.

Mr. TELLER. This is not general legislation. That is a very different question. This is special legislation about an item in this bill. If this is general legislation there is no special legislation at all. There is a wide distinction between general and special legislation. There can be no special legislation if this is general.

Mr. ALLISON. It would be special legislation then to reorganize the Army on this bill because there is an item in it which specially relates to the Army.

Mr. TELLER. This is a specific item for a particular thing, not general in terms or character.

Mr. DAWES. That is, you can change the law as to any specific item, but you can not change it as to any two items.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Chair a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado has the floor on the point of order.

Mr. TELLER. I will yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Chair what is the answer to this provision of the first clause of Rule XVI:

No amendments shall be received to any general appropriation bill, the effect of which will be to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add a new item of appropriation, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Or."

Mr. HOAR. "Or treaty stipulation, or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Or."

Mr. HOAR. "Or unless the the same"—it is the alternative.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee."

Mr. HOAR. "Or unless the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, or proposed in pursuance of an estimate"—the trouble is the last part.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Chair, as it regards the first paragraph of the rule in respect of increasing items of appropriation, &c., is clearly right, because as it respects merely increasing an item of appropriation to carry out provisions of law, if a committee of the Senate reports an amendment which is sent in time for consideration to the Committee on Appropriations, then it covers that part of the rule. So it appears to me; and in respect of a local interest I should be glad to have the ruling of the Chair sustained, because a later amendment will come in like a good many others.

Now we come to the question under the third paragraph of Rule XVI, whether this is an amendment which proposes general legislation, and that is all the ground I can see upon which a point of order can be made. So the question is whether this is general legislation?

My friend from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] said that this point was ruled in the session of 1884–'85 by the then presiding officer. I have sent for the Journal of that session, and I am not able to find under the head of "questions of order" any other than two questions that arose. One was decided by the occupant of the chair, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], on quite a different point, and the other was decided by myself, the then President pro tempore, and also on a different point, in respect of striking out a part of an amendment which made direction as to the service of soldiers who were to be pensioned.

Mr. DOLPH. I will refer the Senator to the RECORD in a moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to hear what that was. In the index of the Journal I can not find that the question now presented was raised.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to inquire if the pending question is not kindred to, if not the same, that was involved in the cruisers, an appropriation having been made some years ago and divers and sundry sections, if not pages, of legislation were placed on an appropriation bill directing and describing the character of vessels that were to be constructed? Is this not very much the same if not the same question that was then ruled by the Senator from Vermont in the chair?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With great respect to my friend from Tennessee (and it is real respect in regard to this matter and all others), I do not think it is. There was no existing law which said that no cruisers should be built beyond a certain limit or in a certain way, or otherwise on the subject of the building of cruisers.

Here, as it is stated, and I assume it to be correct, a permanent law provided that a permanent building should be erected at a certain place at a cost not exceeding a certain sum. That was complete, comprehensive, and final, and general legislation in the sense of a general and permanent provision that did not expire at the end of a year.

Now then, when you come to the cruiser question, there being no previous law which regulated the construction and equipment, &c., of cruisers, Congress comes to the appropriation of money to build a cruiser, and the first question in that instance in respect of order on an appropriation bill, there being no existing law upon the subject, no general or special legislation upon the subject at all, is whether it would be competent, under the rules, for Congress to appropriate a million dollars for the construction of a cruiser. Everybody would say that it would be competent.

It being thus competent to appropriate that money, the next question would be whether it was competent to provide how and in what terms and under what limitations that money should be expended, and that of course logically would seem to be a question that could have only one answer. The then occupant of the chair thought it could only have one answer, and I believe the Senate universally acquiesced.

Now we have this case, and as I say the local interest that I represent (if a Senator can be said to represent a local interest) gives a strong bias in the hope that in some way or other we can get over this point in order to get in a little thing that came up in my State; but it does seem to me, with great respect to everybody, that this provision in the third clause of the rule was intended to prevent in an appropriation bill the appropriation and the expenditure of money in a way contrary to or beyond that in which Congress by a fixed and definite and permanent law had declared it should be done, and that it is stated in this case. I have not looked at the Denver law about that, but assuming it to be so——

Mr. TELLER. It was $300,000.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, if my friend from Oregon has found the RECORD, to what page does he refer?

Mr. DOLPH. I desire to call attention, in the first place, to the act of March 3, 1885, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes, found on page 478 of volume 23 of the Statutes at Large. There is contained in that bill a provision for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Boston, Mass. There are a number of cases, Philadelphia, Pa., found on page 481; on page 482, Montpelier, Vt.; on page 483, Nebraska City, Nebr., Wilmington, Del., Winona, Minn., Manchester, N. H.

Many of these provisions were inserted in the Senate. There will be found on page 2373 of the RECORD of March 2, 1885, during the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, the following:

Mr. VEST. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to offer an amendment, to come in after line 315.

Then follows a colloquy with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] about some amendment he was pressing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER—

My recollection is that the Senator from Vermont was in the Chair.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, "the presiding officer" always means a Senator who is temporarily called to the Chair. It is always "the President pro tempore" otherwise.

Mr. DOLPH. The presiding officer said:

The bill is in Committee of the Whole.

* * * * * * *

The amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 14, after line 315, it is proposed to add:

Here follows the entire provision.

Mr. HALE. What is it? Read the amendment then proposed.

Mr. DOLPH. Very well. It is as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to purchase a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon, at Montpelier, in the State of Vermont, a substantial and commodious public building, with fire-proof vaults, for the use and accomodation of the post-office, courthouses, and internal-revenue office. The site, and the building thereon, when completed according to plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed the cost of $75,000; and the site purchased shall leave the building unexposed to danger from fire in adjacent buildings by an open space of not less than 40 feet, including streets and alleys; and for the purposes herein mentioned the sum of $75,000 is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until a valid title to the said site shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Vermont shall cede to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over the same, during the time the United States shall be or remain the owners thereof, for all purposes except the administration of the criminal laws of said State and the service of any civil process therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

Then the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] offered an amendment for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Nebraska City, Nebr. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. ALLISON] said:

Is this amendment subject to a point of order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska states that by direction of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds he offers the amendment. The Chair thinks the amendment is in order. The question is, Will the Senate agree to it?

The amendment was agreed to.

Then came the Senator from Maryland, Mr. Groome, who had a bill which had passed the Senate and gone to the House but had not been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and favorably reported. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] was in the chair, and the Chair ruled that the bill having passed the Senate it was equivalent to having been reported by a committee and it was adopted and passed.

Then came the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] who had not been so attentive to this matter of public buildings as some other Senators who had their amendments reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and he offered an amendment. But before I come to that I shall refer more particularly to the amendment offered by the Senator from Maryland, which was for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building at Annapolis, Md.:

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on this amendment.
Mr. GROOME. I will state that this measure has already passed the Senate unanimously as a bill, and hence I do not think it subject to the point of order.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has it been reported from a committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations?
Mr. GROOME. It has not been referred to the Committee on Appropriations as an amendment to this bill.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks then it is not in order.
Mr. GROOME. But I think the case is exactly like that of the State capital of Vermont. Certain it is this is a building for a State capital. It is for the only State capital I think in the Union for which steps have not been already taken to provide a public building. I hope, therefore, that the point of order will not be pressed if the amendment is amenable to the point.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks if it has not been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, it is not in order under the decision of the Senate this morning on the yeas and nays after discussion as to the meaning of the words "carrying out an existing law" or "a bill or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session."
Mr. GORMAN. A moment ago, in a case precisely similar at Montpelier, Vt., where the bill had passed the Senate at the last session and been reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the Chair held that under the rule that was in order, and it was inserted on this bill within the last half-hour.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not present at that time.
Mr. GROOME. It was on the strength of that decision that I have moved the amendment.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair bases his opinion on the distinctive decision of the Senate this morning after the discussion and upon the yeas and nays as to the meaning of the words of the rule.

Then came the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] and offered an amendment for a public building at Saratoga Springs, in the State of New York, and the following colloquy took place:

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the amendment reported from a committee?
Mr. MILLER, of New York. What is the point of order?
Mr. ALLISON. It is not reported from any committee.
Mr. MILLER, of New York. The bill from which this amendment is copied was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and passed this body in the last Congress.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has it been reported as an amendment from any committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

That was the point.

Mr. MILLER, of New York. I think not.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is not in order.
Mr. MILLER, of New York. The decision of the Chair heretofore has been the other way, as I have understood it.

That is, if the bill had passed the Senate, although it had not been referred as an amendment to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and then referred to the Committee on Appropriations, it was still in order. That was the decision made in the case of the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not present when any other decision was made. In the case referred to the Senator from Wisconsin stated that the amendment was reported by a committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

That seems to be a case where the President pro tempore ruled on the amendment. That was the case of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, Mr. President, if no law existed regulating the structure of a building and its expense then it would be clear, under the earlier paragraphs of this rule, that a new item of appropriation, there being no law in existence which it would overturn and change, which had been reported from the committee and sent to the Committee on Appropriations in due time would clearly be in order, as the President pro tempore at that time ruled; and in respect of a bill that had passed the Senate, the rule is it is to carry out the provisions of a bill that has passed the Senate. But the amendment offered in the case read by the Senator from Oregon was to do the very thing that the bill which had passed the Senate and had not passed the other House proposed to do, which is quite a different thing.

I was sure the Senator from Oregon could find no ruling of mine or any other President of the Senate which held that when an act of Congress had in specific terms said what should and what should not be done on an appropriation bill you could change that and reverse it and enlarge it; and that is this present question apparently.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair had occasion during the present session to pass upon this very point, as the Chair remembers it, on the Post-Office appropriation bill, which must be familiar to most Senators, where the Chair held that an amendment somewhat similar to this, not general in its character, but applying to the particular subject then before the Senate—what that particular subject was the Chair does not now recall——

Mr. COKE. Post-Office subsidy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was something of that kind.

Mr. HARRIS. It was a subsidy to American steamers on some lines.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question was whether the act referred to changed or was a general or special law. The Chair ruled that it was special legislation and not general legislation within the terms of the rule. The Senator from Tennessee, if the Chair remembers aright, took an appeal, and the decision of the Chair was sustained very largely. The Chair thinks that has always been the case, so far as his recollection is concerned, though he has not looked up any precedents. The language of the rule is that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The occupant of the chair as a Senator was always in favor of striking out the word "general" before "legislation" and excluding the possibility of changing existing law by an amendment to an appropriation bill. That has never been the rule. The fact is that the words "general legislation" as used imply that other legislation of a special character, relating to a particular subject-matter, does not come within the operation of the rule. The Chair would be very glad indeed if the Senate would determine that no legislative amendment could be offered on an appropriation bill. That has not been the practice of the Senate and is not the rule as the Chair construes it.

Mr. HALE. There is no doubt but that the effect of a decision now, either by the Chair or by the Senate on appeal, that such an amendment as the one offered by the Senator from Colorado is in order would be very far-reaching in its effect not only upon the question of public buildings but upon every other special appropriation. The whole tide of legislation would flow in upon the Committee on Appropriations.

Nobody who wanted a new public building would go before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, whose business it is to give time to such subjects, and submit to the investigation of that committee and the chance of being reported against; but would some morning introduce an amendment, get it reported favorably, and have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and make it in order upon the appropriation bill; and so in other respects with other legislation.

One result upon this bill will be, if the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado increasing the limit upon the cost of this building which is fixed by law is admitted to the bill, that it will be followed by dozens of other amendments. The building in Detroit, which I know about personally, is precisely in the situation of the building in Colorado.

Mr. BECK. And Brooklyn.

Mr. HALE. And Brooklyn in New York, and Troy, Concord, and others that I do not now remember. They will all be offered; they will all be pushed upon the bill; and the fault is with the rule. Under clause 1 of Rule XVI any amendment of this kind, it seems to me, is in order unless it is general legislation, whether it be to carry out the provision of some existing law or treaty stipulation, or act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during the session, or if the same be moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate. Either the one or the other of all those alternatives, or all taken together, will embrace twenty bills which were before the Committee on Appropriations, and which when it completed its work upon this bill were left in a pile upon its table as high as that [indicating] rejected. There were twenty or thirty of them.

Now, the question comes whether such an amendment is general legislation. I am bound to agree with the Chair, I do not believe it is. General legislation implies that there is another kind of legislation. That other kind of legislation is special legislation, but it is legislation; it is an act of Congress; it is making law. If it is not general legislation it must be special legislation, and special legislation is legislation appertaining to a particular subject. The phrase "general legislation" is the expressio unius. It implies and carries resistlessly with it the idea that special legislation may be offered.

The Senate the other day upon the question whether in an appropriation bill the words "in full compensation" were or were not general legislation decided that they were not, and they were incorporated upon the bill then before the Senate, a general appropriation bill, and became a part of the act of the Senate, and when assented to by the other House and signed by the President became existing law, not as general legislatson but as special legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was the very question to which the Chair referred.

Mr. HALE. The fault is with the rule, Mr. President, and I never could see why it was in the readjustment and rearrangement of these rules and establishing them the little words "no amendment which proposes any change in existing law" were not substituted.

Mr. FRYE. That never was the rule in the Senate.

Mr. HALE. It ought to be, unless the Senate is prepared to accept all the results of this construction of the rule, which I think is rightly given by the Chair now. So evil would be the result, upon such a wide sea would we be launched, and so little is the Senate in the habit of paying any particular attention to rules, notwithstanding all this I would vote as a precedent in the Senate on the proposition now before the Senate to declare that it is not in order. There never was a body that was so little bound by rules as the Senate. There never was a body that paid so little attention to the rules as the Senate. In all the years past, upon propositions making additions and new clauses to bills and to appropriation bills, the Senate has been in the habit of fixing its own rules.

Notwithstanding the ruling of the Chair upon this proposition, notwithstanding that the logic is in that direction, I would, under this undoubted practice and habit of the Senate, for fear of the results that would follow, vote here now that this proposition is not in order, thereby establishing that as the rule of the Senate until the sixteenth rule can be recast. So I shall vote on the appeal that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. TELLER. But you think it is.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is. I do not mean that it shall be.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, only one word. I, of course, do not wish to discuss the phraseology of these rules, but I think it has been uniformly held hitherto that amendments of this character are not in order. The effect of the adoption of the construction placed upon this rule by the Chair would be, in the nature of things, to substitute the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate as the final arbiter and judge with reference to all public buildings as against the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HALE. And pretty much everything else.

Mr. ALLISON. If the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is in order, many other amendments are in order or will be put in order, so that we shall have this whole contest with the House of Representatives upon the question of public buildings in this bill. That is a contest upon which I do not care to enter. Of course I shall submit to the judgment of the Senate in reference to it, but believing that the amendment is not in order I shall so vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I should like to say a word. Of course I am not an authority on rules, as the President of the Senate knows, but I should like to vote, if I could, that the amendment is not in order, and for this reason principally: If this Denver bill is allowed to become a part of the sundry civil bill in the shape it is by extending the limits, there are four or five others which are before us, the Detroit building, the Brooklyn building, and other buildings. I have just sent our clerk to the committee-room for the public-building bills which have passed the Senate at this session, all of which would be in order, and they would all be reported, of course, from this committee, as they all have been reported, and they have all passed the Senate and they are all tied up in the House. I have not counted them, but there are somewhere in the neighborhood of thirty.

Mr. ALLISON. Thirty-one.

Mr. BECK. Now, the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate have never had a chance to consider those bills. The House of Representatives has not acted upon them. Three of us have to go as conferees on the part of the Senate to confer with three conferees on the part of the House. If any number of these bills are put on, and perhaps they all will be (they are very likely meritorious, because the Senate acted upon them all, and the presumption is that they are meritorious or the Senate would not have passed them), then we meet the House conferees, three gentlemen from that body, and they say, "we agree to this," "we agree to that," "we reject this," "we reject that."

We can not say anything wherever they accept because we have passed them all, and here we come back without knowledge of them and without having had a chance to examine them and without having had them in such a shape as to enable us to understand them, and just whatever the three conferees on the part of the House say they will accept we have to accept, and what they say they will reject we have not a word to say about, and there we are. Of course, as is well suggested, those gentlemen would be glad to have certain of these bills pass, and then they might object to equally meritorious ones which we have put on the bill.

I do not want to be placed in that condition, and I am afraid that I shall be one of the conferees, as I was one of the subcommittee. That is the difficulty I have about it.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for one moment?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to call his attention to the point made by the Senator from Vermont. The point made by the Senator from Vermont would not extend to any of the bills the Senator holds in his hand. Those bills come very clearly under clause 1 of the rule, and the Senator from Vermont admitted that they did.

Mr. BECK. They have all passed the Senate at this session.

Mr. FRYE. They clearly come under it and are in order. The Senator from Vermont makes the additional point, which is a sharp one, too, that the bill touching the public building at Denver is a law now on the statute-book not coming as those bills will come, as bills having passed the Senate at this session, but being a law on the statute-book the proposition of the Senator from Colorado is to amend it, and the amending of a law already in the statute-book is general legislation. That is the point made by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. SPOONER. Would it be so if the law on the statute-book is not a general law?

Mr. FRYE. That is the point made by the Senator from Vermont. I am not giving my view about it at all, but I only call the Senator's attention to the fact that every one of those bills is clearly in order under clause 1 of the sixteenth rule.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator maintain that the third clause of that rule does not qualify and in fact render nugatory that provision of the first clause of the rule? If these matters which are sent from the various committees to the Committee on Appropriation are general legislation, are they not within the inhibition of the third clause?

Mr. FRYE. I have no question that so far as clause 3 is applicable it would qualify it; but how can it qualify this item?

Or act, or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session.

There is an act or resolution which has previously passed the Senate at this session.

Mr. PLUMB. It does not say that those shall be in order. It is stated negatively that nothing shall be in order "unless," and then if you will strike out the second clause and put in the word "but," so as to read, "but no amendment proposing general legislation shall be in order on an appropriation bill," you will have it in its logical sequence.

Mr. PLATT. The difficulty all arises out of trying to get at an understanding of what general legislation is. It is suggested that general legislation is the opposite of special legislation, and therefore that all which is special legislation is in order upon a general appropriation bill, provided it has been referred to a committee and moved by direction of a committee. Evidently that is not so.

It must be evident to every Senator that certain acts which we know as special legislation would from the very nature of the case not be in order, although they had been recommended by some committee of the body and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Let me give an illustration. Suppose in this appropriation bill, as might very probably be the case, there is an appropriation for gas for the Capitol. Suppose that an act to incorporate a new gas company had been referred to some committee of this body and had been recommended by that committee as an amendment to be inserted after that clause for an appropriation for gas. That incorporation of a new gas company is exactly what we mean by special legislation, but that kind of special legislation, I think, it would be very apparent would not be in order; yet that is just one of the things that we call special legislation in contradistinction to general legislation, such as has to be pleaded, to be taken notice of by a court.

That can not be the meaning; and without being able to find just exactly a reason why I am so impressed, it seems to me that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado must come within the third clause of Rule XVI and be general legislation.

Mr. PLUMB. Of course if the proposition of the Senator from Colorado is not general legislation then there is no such thing practically as general legislation; the Committee on the District of Columbia could report a bill to buy the Washington Gas-works, and it would be in order, because it applies only to the Washington Gas-works and not to all the gas works in the country.

The Military Committee can report a bill to establish ten new grades, forty new grades in the Army, to provide for enlisting five or ten thousand additional men in the Army, for putting fifty additional regiments in the Army, and so you can cover the entire field of legislation, because the particular amendment under consideration only deals with one question; and it is not then general legislation.

Perhaps it will be said, "What is the odds if that be the will of the Senate?" We have had a good deal of discussion in the last few years about the functions of the Appropriations Committee, and that committee has been drubbed and cuffed and kicked here about its supposed disposition to absorb all the functions of legislation and to render unnecessary, practically, the other committees of the Senate; and in that drubbing there seemed to be an understanding, as I supposed, and I think the committee did also, that the committee was to stick very closely to and to govern itself by the laws that had been passed calling for the appropriation of money, and to report nothing except what was necessary to carry out those laws.

That committee itself, of course, would have no objection particularly to any new deposit of power such as would result from the adoption of this idea, but it would make the appropriation bills the vehicles to carry all the garbage of legislation. It would be absolutely impossible that anything that could be suggested, unless it was unusually vicious, could be refused entrance on appropriation bills. Here are a dozen, fifteen, fifty men, all the members of the Senate, interested in something that has not had the good luck to get through both Houses.

You could take our entire Calendar and get votes enough at almost any stage of proceedings on an appropriation bill of this kind, especially this one which is the omnium gatherum of all the bills, and put on it every single thing that was a claim, and it is idle to say that the Senate would resist it. This combination of interests—not speaking of it offensively at all—would always be sufficient to do it. By the same token that I would agree to the proposition of the Senator from Colorado, he is bound to agree to any proposition I advance in regard to amending the bill.

In this way the bill is loaded down with measures which, whether they have received the favorable consideration of the Senate or not, have not received the favorable consideration of the other House so as to become laws, and so are wanting in one of the essential elements necessary to constitute legislation, to wit, the consent of the other body of Congress.

They then go into conference, where, as the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] says, there are three men who direct the bill on the part of the Senate and three who direct the bill on the part of the House who meet for the purpose of determining what shall go into it.

The suggestion has been already made audibly to the Senator from Iowa that if these matters go in the bill they must not be given away. That amounts to simply this: that these matters are put on with this kind of understanding and are vital in some way. If they are not put on the bill finally the movers will not be offended, but of course if the committee yield, the result is the Senate stand in compact phalanx behind the conference committee and say, "You shall not give that up; if you give up one you give up all; if you do not give up all you must not give up any."

There the House stands and the House says, "Of course we have got to accept all or none, because here stands the Senate with this powerful impulse of private interest"—not offensively speaking, but of those things which concern the district or State of the different members who father these propositions and have them put on the bill. And thus we compel the House to enter on this course of legislation in violation of its own rules, in violation of propriety, in violation of everything which cencerns the dignity and the orderly procedure of that which finally becomes law.

I do not mean to say that I am any authority on the question of the rules; but whatever they may be, there can be no more vicious thing than to have that established as the rule. There will be no legislation anywhere except on appropriation bills, because it would be idle to work on the Calendar, except the private claims, that are excluded by another clause of the rule. Why not wait until the last moment and then take up bills for the Army establishment and for everything else that anybody happens to be concerned in, that have been reported from a committee and put them on appropriation bills, send them to the other House, and then send three men along with them to determine which of them shall be given away, and yet under the impulse, if we give anything away, we are subjected to the reproach of having discriminated against some one.

I am speaking now of the general unwisdom of that kind of proceeding, whether it be applicable to the frame of mind in which the Chair may be about this matter or the Senate itself. So far as that part of it is concerned, this thing applies to myself as well as anybody else. I have a public-building bill which I should be glad to put on this appropriation bill. It has gone through that stage of legislation which, as the Senator from Maine argues, entitles it to go on this bill. He says that while you can not do anything in regard to a measure which has passed both Houses, at the same time if it has only passed one House it may be put on this bill.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Maine said nothing of the kind.

Mr. PLUMB. It is not worth while to discuss it. The RECORD will show it to-morrow unless it is altered.

Mr. FRYE. It will not be.

Mr. PLUMB. And so on. That will be the worst possible condition of things that could arise. As I said a moment ago, I have a bill that has passed the Senate increasing the appropriation for a public building at Fort Scott. I should be glad to put it on this bill. Of course I am not going to be virtuous enough to keep that off if all the others are going on.

So it goes, and it will be a matter of surprise to my mind, under this construction of the rule, if the whole seventy-six members of the body do not find occasion to get something or other on this bill that is material to their State or to the particular locality in which they happen to live.

I think the bill had better be held open for a while in order that everybody may get in his amendment.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to discuss this question at any length, but the fearful results of this ruling have so stirred up the Senator from Kansas that it seemed to me I might suggest that this was not a case where he should apply quite so much terror to the Senate. This case is a very harmless one at least, and it will be well enough for the Senate to meet the fearful cases as they occur. When we propose general legislation, the repeal of the Army bill, or a general increase of the Army on an appropriation bill, that will do.

Now let me state what the trouble is at Denver. Denver is the capital of Colorado. In 1882 an appropriation was made for a public building there, which was limited in its cost to $300,000. The Government paid $65,000 for a piece of land and the citizens around there paid $35,000 and gave it to the Government toward paying for the land. They have got up to the level of the street now with the building after three years, and it is a question to-day whether you will put wooden beams in it or whether you will have iron beams in it.

The Treasury Department say that with the appropriation heretofore made they can not complete the building without making it disgraceful to the Government, and it can not be built in the town under the ordinances of the city, because within the fire limits just such a building as that they do not allow any citizen to build. Besides, this building is to be constructed under the wing of a building that cost $800,000 not counting the ground. The State has a little new public building, a capitol, costing two millions, or somewhere in that neighborhood, and the Government of the United States is to put up a building with wooden beams and wooden columns inside of the fire limits, unless prohibited, as I hope they will be if the limit is not increased, by the city, or else they can stand still.

A suitable building can not be constructed with the $97,000 even with wooden beams. It is an absolute necessity that the building stop where it is or that the limit of cost be extended.

A bill for this purpose passed the Senate. It has had all the necessary observation of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and the Committee on Appropriations; at least it was referred there and I was there with it, but I did not get much consolation out of the committee. Now, I hope the Senate will put the amendment in the bill, and then if any unworthy case comes up from Kansas or Nebraska or any neighboring State that can be acted upon when it is presented without prejudicing my case.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to say simply a word. I was not myself undertaking to express any opinion whatever touching this rule. I was simply undertaking to show the point which the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] was making, and the admission which he made apparently would admit every bill the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] held in his hand. I did not express any opinion myself as to whether or not they were admissible under the rule, and I avoided doing it for this reason: I had occasion to examine once the decisions of the Senate on questions of order to see whether or not they ought to be incorporated in the Manual, and I found that it had been the habit of presiding officers to leave more than half the questions of order to the decision of the Senate, and I found on the very same day decisions of the United States Senate exactly the opposite of each other.

I found the decisions a perfect medley, and that the Senate always determined questions of order by the present wish of the Senate as to the enactment into law of any measure pending. For that reason I wished entirely to withhold my opinion of what the rule is, because I am going to vote against the proposition to receive any of these bills as amendments to this appropriation bill, and therefore I did not wish to express an opinion as to what the rule was.

Mr. TELLER. But you think they are in order?

Mr. FRYE. I am going to vote that they are not in order.

Mr. TELLER. But what does the Senator think about it?

Mr. FRYE. I do not wish to say what I think about it, because I prefer to vote that they are not in order. I wish to go home some time or other.

The Senator from Iowa has a proposition, which passed the Senate and passed the House, for a public building in Iowa, which was vetoed by the President of the United States. There is one in Ohio which was vetoed by the President of the United States, and one in North Carolina which was vetoed by the President of the United States. And if the Senate determines that that rule will admit of these building bills which have passed the Senate, it will admit of every one of these buildings; and I do not know what the result of that will be. I had rather myself go home in one week from to-day than to sit here and undertake to pass a vetoed bill.

Mr. TELLER. This is not to pass a law, but to erect a building. The law is already passed.

Mr. FRYE. I was not talking about the Senator's case. The Senator from Vermont makes an entirely different point on that case.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this argument and discussion, I think, very clearly illustrates the fact that the rule of the Senate is simply whether the Senate desire a bill passed or not. It is in order if we wish it to pass according to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] and it is not in order if the Senate does not wish it to pass. The proposition of the other Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is, that the ruling of the Chair shall not be sustained because the rule is a bad rule. The rule is, as the Chair has declared it to be, that special legislation is not general legislation—a very plain proposition—and that special legislation can not be prohibited because general legislation is prohibited.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] says that the decision of the Chair ought not to be sustained because the Committee on Appropriations have not been able to consider whether they will reverse the ruling of the Senate or not. The Senate has passed certain bills. Now the objection is that the committee have not had time to consider whether the Senate was right in passing those bills or not, and that the action which the Senate has taken may be reconsidered by the Committee on Appropriations.

Why, Mr. President, I do not think that character of argument is worthy of the Senate. The rule is plain, as the Chair has decided.

General legislation is not special legislation. To amend a bill relating to a particular individual does not make it refer to other individuals or to the country at large. These are plain propositions. You can not make a rule that no special legislation shall go upon an appropriation bill, because an appropriation bill is legislation, and a large part of it must be always special legislation in the very nature of things; and if the Senate has passed these bills and the House shall concur, either in a conference upon this appropriation bill or in any other way, they ought to be provided for.

If the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is right, it is the duty of the Senate now to pass this amendment and it is not excluded by the rule; but if we have rules, it is a very poor argument to say that because they are bad rules we shall decide that they are not rules. It seems to me that the objections to the rulings of the Chair conclusively establish the propriety of it and of the Senate taking action on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In view of the statements made by Senators regarding the rule, the Chair will avail himself of the second clause of Rule XX, which provides that—

> The presiding officer may submit any question of order to the decision of the Senate.

The question submitted to the decision of the Senate is whether this amendment is in order. Those who hold that the amendment is in order will say "ay;" those of a contrary opinion, "no." [Putting the question.] The "noes" appear to have it.

Mr. TELLER. I ask for a division.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 18, noes 21.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. Not knowing how he would vote if he were present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—18.

Aldrich,	Coke,	Miller,	Teller,
Blair,	Dolph,	Sawyer,	Van Wyck,
Bowen,	Jones of Nevada,	Sewell,	Walthall.
Call,	McMillan,	Sherman,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is held not to be in order.

AMENDMENT OF RULES.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask consent of the Senate to give notice at this time that I will to-morrow move to amend the third clause of Rule XVI. I also introduce a resolution for that purpose and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be received and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution is as follows:

> Resolved, That the third clause of the sixteenth rule of the Senate be, and the same hereby is, amended by striking out of the first line of said third clause the word "general," and insert after the word "legislation," in said first line, the words "which modifies or changes existing law."
> So that said clause will read:
> "No amendment which proposes legislation which modifies or changes existing law shall be received to any general appropriation bill."
> Leaving the balance of said clause as it now exists.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. TOWLES, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5038) for the relief of Stephen Sauer.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1421) granting a pension to William H. Weaver.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills with amendments; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (S. 1492) for the relief of Ellen Sadler, sister of John Sadler; and

A bill (S. 2609) granting a pension to Emily J. Stannard.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 8310) granting a pension to Cyra L. Weston; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

EMILY J. STANNARD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2609) granting a pension to Emily J. Stannard, which were, in line 6, to strike out the words "one hundred" and to insert the word "fifty;" and in line 7 to strike out the words "June 1, 1886" and to insert the words "the passage of this act."

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives, and ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. BLAIR, Mr. SEWELL, and Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, were appointed.

ELLEN SADLER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1492) for the relief of Ellen Sadler, sister of John Sadler, which was, at the end of the bill, to add the words "to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations to strike out the clause from line 46 to line 48, inclusive, as follows:

> For court-house and post-office at Denver, Colo.: For completion of building under present limit, $97,000.

Mr. TELLER. Will it be in order for me to offer this amendment in the Senate when the bill is reported to the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will have to hold, under the decision made by the Senate, that it is not in order.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose we can take the question then on the question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Of course it can be presented.

Mr. TELLER. I ask if the chairman who has the bill in charge will let this be passed over? I do not know whether this ought to be stricken out or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out this clause.

Mr. BECK. I only desire to say that my recollection is that the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, Mr. Bell, said to the committee that it would be a blunder to insert this appropriation of $97,000 for the completion of the building at Denver, that it can not be completed for that sum in such a way as to make it at all a satisfactory building, that we ought to allow it to go until the limit is extended by law. He says he can not complete it for this money, and it would be useless to appropriate it. I think I am correct in saying that. The chairman will recollect the facts.

Mr. TELLER. I do not suppose the building can be erected for any such sum. I said it could not be built, and that it ought not to be built, but the Senate, contrary to its own judgment upon this matter, terrorized by the suggestion that the Senate can not take care of itself, terrorized by the suggestion that the Senate is not able to control its vote and can not tell when to put on an appropriation bill proper legislation, has voted against the express judgment of several Senators.

This is not a matter of very great consequence to the State of Colorado, yet the United States has scarcely ever put a dollar in that State. We get nothing of the great appropriations. You appropriate millions of money for rivers and harbors, and you appropriate not a dollar for any purpose for that State. A Territory for sixteen years, we never had a dollar for public buildings except a small amount for a penitentiary. We have had no help from the Government at all, and when we come here to build a little insignificant building—insignificant when compared side by side with many private buildings—the spasm of virtue that seizes the Senate in fear of itself compels the Senate to vote against it.

I do not care very much whether the provision is in or out. I know the building can not be built for that sum, even if you put wooden beams in it, and you ought either to appropriate more money for this building or let it stand uncovered and unfinished. To say that the Senate is so fearful that it would not know where to stop, when here is a case where the Architect came before the committee and declared the building must stand still now or this change must be made, when the Senate has said after careful deliberation by its committee that it is proper to increase the limit of cost, I do not know that it makes very much difference to me whether this item comes out or whether it goes in.

Mr. BLAIR. As I was just observing to the Senator from Maine in a conversation with him, if he had got up here in the Senate and made his argument upon the basis that the construction of the rule was wrong he would have been overwhelmingly defeated; but he got up and said to the Senate that the Chair was right, but it is going to keep us here a great while. He says this in substance. He says: "The Chair is right, but notwithstanding the Chair is right, I am determined to be wrong." That was the position which he took, and his colleague said he wanted to go home and see his folks; and, accordingly, this matter was decided against the sense of the Senate and the ruling of the Chair. Everybody who has made an argument here to-night on this question of order has admitted that the Chair was right in his ruling.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair withdrew his ruling and submitted the question to the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I know the Chair withdrew his ruling, but nevertheless that was out of regard to the customs of the Senate, it having been stated upon the floor that the Senate was accustomed to decide one way or the other, disregarding the idea of consistency entirely, according to its present wishes. That may be all right, but there are some instances where this is working great hardship at the present time.

In my own State there has been $200,000 appropriated for the erection of a public building at the capital. It is the first public building of the slightest consequence ever erected in the State.

It is approaching completion, and it has been discovered that $35,000 more is indispensable in order that it may be made a fire-proof building. The matter has been submitted to the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and on June 7 he sends this letter to the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SUPERVISING ARCHITECT,
Washington, June 7, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt by reference from you of letter of Hon. WILLIAM MAHONE, chairman of the Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, dated the 4th instant, in regard to the advisability of increasing the limit of cost of the court-house, &c., building at Concord, N. H., from $200,000 to $235,000, in order to permit of fire-proof construction. I respectfully recommend the additional appropriation of $35,000, in order that iron floor-beams and iron roof-framing can be used and to permit the substitution of iron for wood in stairs and of hard-wood finish instead of pine for the interior trimmings.

Respectfully, yours,

M. E. BELL, Supervising Architect.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

That is a letter which he writes on the 7th of June; and further on, June 17, he directs this letter to Hon. J. H. GALLINGER, House of Representatives, who represents the district in which the building is being erected, acknowledging the receipt of his letter, and says:

I inclose herewith copy of a letter of the 7th instant—

Which I have read.

The additional $35,000 is asked in order that the floor-beams and roof-framing of the building can be made of iron, and to permit the substitution of iron for wood in stairs, and to use hard-wood finish instead of pine for the interior trimmings.

This building is to be constructed of granite, and all the mason-work will be first class in every particular; and it seems to be very desirable that an additional appropriation of $35,000 should be made as soon as possible, as the structure is now ready for the first-floor beams, which will have to be put in——

Mr. PALMER. What is the question before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is on striking out a certain clause in regard to the Denver court-house and post-office building.

Mr. BLAIR. This is the point to which I wish to call especial attention. The building is in process of completion, and under the contract must very soon be finished, must be finished, and will be finished before the next session of Congress, and this appropriation must be made immediately.

The letter continues:

As the structure is now ready for the first-floor beams, which will have to be put in place within the next two or three weeks, unless action is taken by Congress in the matter, there does not seem to be any necessity for argument to show the advisability of making the work fire-proof and to put in first-class interior finish.

Respectfully, yours,

M. E. BELL, Supervising Architect.

There are a few cases of this kind, and it seems to me that when the ruling of the Chair was admitted to be right, we ought to have had the courage of our convictions to see that the money already appropriated to some of these buildings in process of construction is not practically wasted for the lack of a few dollars in order that they may be completed in a fire-proof way and so as to be durable and serviceable public structures.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. In the next clause the amendment, instead of being agreed to, should be disagreed to, because, upon subsequent inquiry, I find that the money there appropriated is needed for completing the purchase of the ground. It is not intended to go on with the building until the limit of cost is removed by a law passing both Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment has already been agreed to, the Chair is advised. Does the Senator move to reconsider?

Mr. HALE. I move to reconsider, because I was not present at that time.

Mr. PALMER. That was not agreed to. It was passed over informally by the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations report to strike out lines 49 and 50, as follows:

For court-house and post-office at Detroit, Mich., for continuation of building, $50,000.

Mr. HALE. That should be disagreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. If that is for the purchase of ground the language ought to be changed so as to read:

For purchase of ground.

Mr. HALE. In the Supervising Architect's office, where a provision has become a law for the purchase of ground and the erection of a building, they construe this phrase as covering ground and all.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any necessity for $50,000?

Mr. HALE. They have paid out already the previous appropriations, and this is needed for the ground. It is not intended to go on with the construction of the building until Congress passes a law. It is not proposed to put this in by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. PALMER. I will state for the information of the Senator from Missouri that there is a balance now on hand which, with this $50,000, may leave, after the purchase of the land, a balance, and on that account it was put in "for continuation of building." I think the phraseology has usually been "for the purchase of land and continuation of building."

Mr. COCKRELL. How much is the ground going to cost?

Mr. PALMER. Nearly $400,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, striking out lines 49 and 50.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment passed over was to strike out from line 63 to line 69, as follows:

For custom-house at Galveston, Tex.: That the sum of $25,000 appropriated by the sundry civil appropriation act approved July 7, 1884, for continuation of the court-house and post-office, be, and the same is hereby, reappropriated and made available for the completion of the custom-house at Galveston, Tex.

Mr. ALLISON. When that paragraph was under consideration there was a difference of opinion between the members from Texas and the committee as to whether, outside of this appropriation, there had been the amount authorized by the original law providing for this building; and on a careful examination I find that this appropriation when inserted in this paragraph will only meet the $125,000 provided for. Therefore the amendment of the committee should be disagreed to and the paragraph allowed to stand.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised there is an amendment pending to this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. No, I do not offer any amendment to it. I allow the paragraph to stand.

Mr. COKE. The amendment of the committee striking out the clause has been non-concurred in I understand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is non-concurred in. The clause stands.

The next amendment passed over was, after line 187, to insert:

For the purchase of land, and buildings thereon, being lots numbered 11 and 12 of the subdivision of square numbered 689 on the original plat of lands in the city of Washington, bounded north by South B street, east by New Jersey avenue, and west by South Capitol street, $275,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; said purchase to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the use of the Treasury Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, at the beginning of line 435, to strike out "That" and insert "And;" in line 437, after the words "denominations of," to strike out "ones" and insert "one;" in the same line, before the words "and five," to strike out "twos" and insert "two;" after the word "dollars," in the same line, to strike out the words "on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury, in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government. That;" in line 440, before the words "the silver" to insert "and;" after the word "receivable," in line 441, to insert "redeemable;" and after the word "character," in line 446, to strike out the words "and shall be redeemable in standard silver dollars on demand, and when paid into the Treasury shall be reissued, subject to the provisions herein for the redemption of the same," and insert "Provided, That said denominations of one, two, and five dollars may be issued in lieu of silver-certificates of larger denominations in the Treasury, and to that extent said certificates of larger denominations shall be canceled and destroyed;" so as to make the clause read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars; and the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable, redeemable, and payable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character:" Provided, That said denominations of one, two, and five dollars may be issued in lieu of silver certificates of larger denominations in the Treasury, and to that extent said certificates of larger denominations shall be canceled and destroyed.

Mr. BECK. It is 11 o'clock. I desire to say something about that, but it is too late now. Perhaps we can take up other amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I had hoped we could finish the bill to-night.

Mr. HALE. Take up the other amendments.

Mr. BECK. Take up the other amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I will consent that this be passed over for the present and that we take up the other amendments which have been passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment will be passed over and the next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations reported to strike out the clause from line 1112 to line 1124, inclusive, as follows:

Mint at Philadelphia: For the removal of the steam-power plant to the northwest corner of the mint property, locating the boiler-room outside of the walls of the main building, for underpinning, new walls, girders, brick-work, new boilers, engine, steam-pipes, and shafting, $54,639.20; and for construction of vault for the storage of silver dollars out of the present boiler-room, $60,000; in all, $114,639.20; to be expended under the immediate supervision of the superintendent of the mint at Philadelphia, on contract, subject to the approval of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. ALLISON. Since that amendment was reported by the committee the committee have made further examination of this question. I believe that the first portion of the clause should be agreed to down to and including line 1117, and I move instead of striking out the whole paragraph to strike out lines 1118, 1119, 1120, and 1121, down to and including the word "cents."

Mr. HALE. That does not include the vault?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out, after the word "cents," to the end of line 1117, the following:

And for construction of vault for the storage of silver dollars out of the present boiler-room, $60,000; in all, $114,639.20.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on striking out the remaining part of the clause.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the remaining part of the clause will not be stricken out.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BECK. You agree that the remainder of the clause shall stand?

Mr. ALLISON. The superintendent of the mint at Philadelphia was present in the committee the other day. I think the Senator from Kentucky was not there at the time.

Mr. BECK. Is the chairman content that the remainder of the clause shall stay in the bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BECK. Very well. Then I have nothing to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To avoid any misunderstanding the Secretary will read the part of this clause left in the bill.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mint at Philadelphia: For the removal of the steam-power plant to the northwest corner of the Mint property, locating the boiler-room outside of the walls of the main building, for underpinning, new walls, girders, brick-work, new boilers, engine, steam-pipes, and shafting, $54,639.20; to be expended under the immediate supervision of the superintendent of the Mint at Philadelphia, on contract, subject to the approval of the Director of the Mint.

Mr. HALE. Should not that be "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury?"

Mr. ALLISON. I think so.

Mr. HALE. That is our general rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the words "Secretary of the Treasury" will be inserted in line 1124.

Mr. HOAR. Now let the last clause be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Subject to the approval of the Director of the Mint, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. No; "Subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury," in place of "Director of the Mint." We do not want two.

Mr. ALLISON. Strike out "Director of the Mint" and insert "Secretary of the Treasury."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will again be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To be expended under the immediate supervision of the superintendent of the mint at Philadelphia, on contract, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be considered agreed to in that form.

The next amendment passed over was, in line 1416, after the words "Capitol terraces," to strike out—

For continuing the work upon the terraces of the Capitol, sections marked K, D, and J, as shown on printed plan accompanying the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury (Executive Document No. 9, first session Forty-eighth Congress), including wages of mechanics and laborers, and for reconstructing boiler vaults connected with sections C and K, $150,000.

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for continuing the construction of the terrace and grand stairways of the Capitol made in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," is hereby reappropriated or rendered available for the continuation of that work during the fiscal year 1887.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

All work upon the Capitol terraces shall be suspended till a further plan shall be submitted to Congress providing for committee-rooms upon the western front of said terraces, with proper ventilation and light from windows in the outer western wall.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, this improvement was commenced deliberately by Congress and has proceeded up to the present time very satisfactorily. The original idea on which the appropriation was made aggregated an estimate of $815,000. The idea upon which this estimate was made and the appropriation which followed was simply this: The defect in the architectural plan and structure of the Capitol is that the building is too wide for its height. It was impossible to raise the Capitol and it was impossible to put another foundation under it.

It was thought then by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds after mature deliberation that the only way to remedy this matter was to construct this terrace, giving to the foundation of the Capitol on the western approach an appearance of solidity and of additional height. That was the theory on which Mr. Olmstead made his plan, and the plan has proved to be a correct one.

In this original idea as before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds no great stress was laid upon the proposition to obtain rooms for the use of either House of Congress. That was a subsequent matter. I have stated what was the principal idea, and that was to remedy this defect in the architectural plan and in the appearance of the Capitol, but, at the same time, if we could secure additional rooms that would be no objection and might be a small argument in favor of the appropriation. Mr. Olmstead asked how many committee-rooms would be necessary, and the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds told him that twenty would be enough. Under this plan he obtained twenty-eight. They are each 25 feet by 15 in size.

It is now proposed by the Committee on Appropriations to do away with the very object that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had in view when they recommended this appropriation, and which was the main feature and almost the only feature of the architectural plan adopted by Congress and proposed by Mr. Olmsted. It is proposed now to do away with that appearance of solidity on the part of this terrace and to put windows into it for the purpose of lighting these committee-rooms; in other words, to make this Capitol look like a Pennsylvania barn with windows in the lower story.

Mr. ALLISON. Red lines.

Mr. VEST. I suppose so. I suppose hereafter red lines will be proposed if this change is made in the terrace. I understand it is said—I have not heard the argument on the other side except by report, but I understand it is said—that these rooms are not sufficiently lighted. I have examined the rooms personally. They are all of good size and there is a window to each room opening on the area. Here is the plan, if any Senator desires to look at it.

There is an area, and between the rooms upon the inner space and the outer space, to each of these rooms there is a window with a door opposite, giving ventilation. There is a space above to give light to these committee-rooms. They are not lighted as any outside room would be. It is the same defect which the Senate Chamber has and all interior rooms must have; but at the same time it is not dark, and it is sufficiently lighted for all purposes of committee business.

Another objection, I understand, that is made is that these rooms are damp. They are damp now because they are unfinished and because no fires have been built there; but after they have been once thoroughly dried out and completed there can be and will be no complaint on this score.

What would be thought of a gentleman who would construct a building for a private residence worth $100,000, with a lower story or foundation taking the place of this marble terrace, who would then put windows in it looking on the street?

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator a question.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Did the Senator ever see on this continent, or elsewhere, any great building, or any small building, that was intended for the use of human beings, where around the bottom of it there is to be a plain unrelieved blank wall such as would be put around the base of a monument, without windows in it; and if so I should be glad to have the Senator tell me where that building is to be found? I have asked a great many architects, and I can not find one.

Mr. VEST. Take any of the old private buildings in Washington and you will not find the thing the Senator speaks of.

Mr. HALE. An unrelieved wall at the bottom the height of a story without windows in it?

Mr. VEST. You will not find windows looking out upon the street. You will find that in the lower story the windows look out upon an area.

Mr. HALE. I never saw such a house, and the Senator can not find one.

Mr. VEST. Well, sir——

Mr. HALE. They all have windows in the basement. When they were building this Capitol originally with a basement, why did they not leave that without windows? That was the old basement. However, I did not mean to interrupt the Senator from Missouri. I shall have something to say by and by.

Mr. VEST. I find the letter that was written by Mr. Olmstead——

Mr. HALE. I have just sent for that, because I want to use it.

Mr. VEST. I have it. It is nothing but fair and just that we should hear what this architect says in regard to this matter.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have that whole letter read.

Mr. VEST. I intend to read it, if the Senator will contain himself a moment.

Mr. HALE. I did not know but that the Senator was proposing to leave out this valuable literature. I want it read.

Mr. VEST. I intended to have read every word and line in it. I ask the Secretary to read it.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Hon. WILLIAM B. ALLISON,
Chairman of Committee of Appropriations,
United States Senate:

DEAR SIR: I respectfully ask that the attention of your committee may be invited to certain considerations affecting the question of opening windows in the outer wall of the terrace of the Capitol.

The essential purpose of the Capitol is provided for in a range of halls for legislative assemblies with connecting corridors, ante-rooms, and side rooms, and this range is manifested exteriorly by colonnades and other decorative features carried around the entire building. It is set well above ground, and is held up and made more conspicuous and notable by a very plain basement story.

Below this basement story there are foundation walls, and between these foundation walls a cellar. It is not customary in buildings of any importance to make a show of the foundation walls or of the cellar. It would detract from the dignity of such buildings to do so. That the cellar may be lighted and ventilated it is usual to make what in common city buildings is called an area, within which windows are opened through the foundation walls into the cellar in such a manner that they can not be seen in a general view of the building from the outside.

This is essentially what has been done in building the Capitol, the area on the west side being a very large one. There are rooms of some importance in the cellar story, but these rooms are not designed to be presented to view, nor can they be presented to view with propriety any more than the coal vaults or any domestic offices in the cellar of ordinary fine large town houses.

The original design of the Capitol has thus been sufficiently explained. Now, as to the construction that is being added to it, called the terrace, it must not be supposed that this has been designed with the slightest idea of amending or reorganizing or overruling the original design of the building. It has not been intended to make a more important feature of the cellar part of the building, to bring it out of ground or to light it. Had there been any such purpose, had Congress asked for a plan for any such purpose, a very different plan would have been devised for it from that of the terrace. Nothing whatever of what has thus far been built of the terrace would have been proposed.

What, then, was the object of the terrace? The answer may be given in this way:

Here is a great and costly building, the greater part of the cost of which has been directed to the purpose of producing a certain impression on the minds of those looking toward it, and an impression that should be associated with ideas of the strength and majesty of a great nation.

There is nothing more necessary to a successful realization of such a purpose in a building than that it should seem to stand firmly; that its base should seem to be immovable. There is a difficulty in making as strong an impression in this respect as is desirable when an extraordinarily massive structure is placed, as in the case of the Capitol, hanging upon the brow of a hill.

The object of the terrace was to more effectually overcome this difficulty. How was it to be accomplished?

It was proposed to be accomplished by setting a strong wall into the face of the hill in front of the foundations of the building; that is to say, in front of its cellar wall. Such an outer wall, it was calculated, would have the effect upon the eye of a dam holding back whatever on its upper side looked liable to settle toward the down-hill side. Every dollar thus far spent on the terrace, and on the grounds in connection with it, has been spent on the supposition that this calculation was soundly made. If it was soundly made, then it will appear that the opening of holes in this wall would leave the same effect as the opening of holes in a dam. It would make the building behind it look less secure in its foundations, less firmly based on the down-hill side,

Another way of stating the intended effect of the wall is that it would seem to overcome all tendency of the upper part of the hill to be squeezed out by the weight of the great mass of masonry above it.

Now, such a wall being seen a short distance in front of the cellar wall of the Capitol, it is of no consequence, with reference to the purpose stated, whether the space between the two is occupied by solid earth, or whether the earth is excavated, and in its place cross-walls built, by which any tendency of the cellar walls to slip out would be resisted. The result must be the same, a firmly reinforced base. In this case the arrangement of cross-walls has been adopted, and it has been thought that an advantage would be gained by making the spaces between these cross-walls available for storage vaults, and in those parts where, under the old arrangement, a sunken area had been provided for the lighting of the cellar of the main building, that the spaces so gained should be prepared in a manner making them equally suitable with the best of the present cellar rooms in respect to the requirements of light and air. But the advantages to be gained in this way have always during the ten years in which the scheme has been under discussion been presented as incidental advantages simply, not as the main purpose.

With reference to this incidental purpose, and more especially to the requirement of additional committee-rooms, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was asked to say how many additional well-lighted and ventilated rooms were desirable. The answer was that twenty would be enough. As the plan stands now, twenty-eight rooms are provided for. Their average area is 25 by 15 feet. Each has at least one window opening upon the area, and the smallest of these windows measures 8 by 11 feet. There is a large door opposite the window of each room opening from a spacious corridor, through which a thorough draught can be carried. The rooms would be large, lofty, airy, and well lighted.

Respectfully,

FRED'K LAW OLMSTED,
Landscape Architect.

WASHINGTON, July 15, 1886.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to make an inquiry. This work is now being carried on under the authority of law, and the House provision is to conduct the work. The Committee on Appropriations strike out the provision, thereby suspending a present law. I make the point of order that there has been no reference from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds or from any other committee recommending this to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DOLPH. I suggest other amendments for additional work are not in order, being general legislation. I make that point of order.

Mr. HALE. In other words, the point is that Congress can not at any time stop appropriating money.

Mr. SEWELL. You can not change existing law by an amendment to an appropriation bill.

Mr. HOAR. Is the proposed amendment in italics now before the Senate—that is, the motion to strike out and insert?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The motion is to strike out and insert; to strike out the text of the bill as it comes from the House and insert the words in italics.

Mr. HOAR. Then I rose for the same purpose as the Senator from New Jersey. I desire to ask the Chair how this language—I do not speak of the mere stopping of the appropriation; that is a different thing—how this affirmative enactment that "all work upon the Capitol terraces shall be suspended till a further plan shall be submitted to Congress providing for committee-rooms upon the western front of said terraces, with proper ventilation and light from windows in the outer western wall," can be supported in the face of the ruling the Senate has just made?

Mr. HALE. I give my own answer to that. There is no law that fixes the kind of work that shall be done upon the terraces. It has never been the subject of any law. From year to year the Congress has appropriated sums of money and has declared how they shall be spent. After great solicitation, after being besieged and beset early and late, an appropriation was made allowing this work to be begun; and while that is not important I may say, in passing, every appropriation that was made was made upon the agreement on the part of the architect and Senators who were urging the measure that there should be windows on the outside; but appropriations were made from time to time, and each year the question whether there should be any work done, where it should be done, and how it should be done, has been settled upon the appropriation bills. There is not any law anywhere which declares that after an appropriation which has been made shall be spent the work shall be done in any particular way anywhere else, but it has awaited the action of Congress from year to year in appropriations.

Now all that is sought in this amendment is no change of law. It does not propose to change any law, but to provide, in view of future appropriations, that a plan shall be submitted. This is what is done with reference to every structure that has ever been made by the Government. From year to year when naval ships are being constructed, Congress intervenes and says that the work shall not go on until plans shall be submitted to Congress with a view to its enlightenment.

It is a direction as to the appropriation, and the power of limiting an appropriation and its uses has never been questioned by Congress. That is not the question we have already passed upon about general legislation, about removing limits, and all that, but it is the method of expending the money. I should be glad to have any law cited that shows how this money shall be spent.

Mr. VEST. I have sent for the sundry civil act of 1883 in which this appropriation was first made; and here is an extract from it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will suspend a moment. A question of order is raised as to whether or not this amendment is in order.

Mr. VEST. I am speaking on that question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has indulged others to speak, though the question is not debatable. The Chair is not disposed to interpose objections.

Mr. VEST. The provision of the act of March 3, 1883, is as follows:

And hereafter all changes and improvements in the grounds, including approaches to the Capitol, shall be estimated for in detail, showing what modifications are proposed and the estimated cost of the same.

That is a clause in the sundry civil appropriation bill of March 3, 1883.

Mr. HALE. This is the same kind of a clause, that there shall be a plan submitted to Congress.

Mr. VEST. I will only say this: So far from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds having recommended any such legislation as is contained in the Italics on page 59, that committee are unanimously opposed to any such legislation, and are here to-night protesting against it. We protest against taking this work out of the hands of the architect. After Congress has agreed to appropriate $815,000 for the construction of it, and after completing one-fourth of this work we are opposed now to stopping it and retaining it in this unfinished condition, in order to meet the ideas of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that I do not agree with him. I do not admit anything that he has stated about the agreement here to appropriate. There has been nothing of that kind.

As to any change of plan, and as to its being sought now by the Committee on Appropriations or any member of it to take this out of the hands of the architect, before this discussion closes it will be shown that this architect has been going along from time to time and making changes that never were thought or heard of, and the Committee on Appropriations is only seeking to maintain the original design of this work. If I am not able to show that before this thing is through, then I will back out from this amendment.

Mr. EDMUMDS. Did the original design provide for windows down here?

Mr. HALE. There never was a time since the thing was started when the appropriations were discussed in the Committee on Appropriations that the question was not asked will there be light, bright, and well-ventilated committee-rooms on the interior walls, and it was always said that there would be. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], the colleague of my friend at my right, who is much interested and has had the charge of this matter so far as anybody has had on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, always claimed that that was so; and when on the north side we came here at the end of the work and complained and found fault that there were no rooms out there with lights in them, it was said that upon the north side they proposed to have store-rooms without windows, but that upon the west side, looking out upon the sun and upon the light and the air, we were to have committee-rooms; and never till we got here this winter was there any suspicion in the mind of the Committee on Appropriations, who made these appropriations, that there were not to be committee-rooms there.

It has gone on in a bold and defiant and flagrant way in opposition, and the letter that has just been read introduced a theory about this dam or wall outside that was never thought of originally when discussed here in the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Now, Mr. President, I hold in my hand—and it is the most complete answer to the Senator from Maine that mortal man can conceive of—the estimate and plan submitted by Mr. Olmsted, from the Architect's Office, United States Capitol, Washington, D. C., September 27, 1883, giving the dimensions of this terrace, giving all the details, giving the estimated cost down to the minutest particular, and there is not one word about these committee-rooms.

Mr. DOLPH. What document is that?

Mr. VEST. The executive document referred to in this bill, being a "Letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates for proposed terrace and approaches for the United States Capitol, Washington, D. C., December 5, 1883—Referred to the Committee on Appropriations," of which the Senator from Maine is a member, and he voted for the appropriations under this estimate and plan; and I want him now to show me what he says was always discussed in committee.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator that without consultation with a single member of the Committee on Appropriations that has from year to year considered this subject (and no other committee has reported these appropriations), I appeal with confidence to every member of that committee in years past whether every time that that matter came up and we were solicited to make appropriations it was not upon condition that these exterior walls should have well-lighted committee-rooms with windows on the outside.

Mr. VEST. Is it possible that the Committee on Appropriations have gone on with an estimate of $814,000 for this work, and they say now that this thing rested in a verbal understanding?

Mr. HALE. We never adopted that estimate. We always declined giving the $814,000.

Mr. VEST. Here is the estimate placed before that committee, referred to it.

Mr. HALE. I know that we rejected it. We never adopted that estimate. They wanted us to give $800,000 outright, so that they could go on and have their own sweet will here and do what they pleased, and the committee always declined to do it, but jealously watched and guarded, and gave the appropriation piecemeal, because it felt that this work had got to be watched.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the Senator from Maine was there or not a perspective drawing, a plan, an elevation of this work?

Mr. HALE. Never submitted to the committee with this line of blank wall.

Mr. VEST. Here it is, "referred to the Committee on Appropriations," the whole of it.

Mr. HOAR. Has there not been all these years in the room of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, or elsewhere, a map, an elevation, seen by nearly all the members of both Houses of Congress, and was there not one hanging on each side of the terraces half way down?

Mr. HALE. I do not know. There never was brought to the Committee on Appropriations that reported these appropriations any idea or suggestion that there were not to be committee-rooms on the exterior walls. In fact that was negatived when the appropriation was given, and the debates will show that from time to time that was one of the things which commended the proposition, that there were to be committee-rooms.

Mr. HOAR. I think this is rather an important question, and I should like to be sure that I understand my friend's measure, and I will put the question again. My memory is that there have been for the last two or three years, in various places about the Capitol, drawings in perspective or otherwise, showing this wall, and showing it without windows as it is now proposed, and that there was a picture in the room of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and that there were two of those drawings on the second terrace showing that thing.

Mr. HALE. It has never been the understanding either in the debates here or in the Committee on Appropriations when the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] came from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and presented it—never. On the contrary, in terms that was all negatived.

Mr. SEWELL. Was not the matter in charge of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HALE. The appropriations have always been made in the annual appropriation bills, and it was understood Mr. Olmsted was going on under the limitations contained in these bills.

Mr. SEWELL. Under the charge of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HALE. I suppose it was under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol.

Mr. VEST. There has never been an appropriation that our committee did not appear and urge it. I distinctly affirm here, and every member who has taken any interest in the matter will corroborate what I say, the Senator from Kentucky and my colleague opposed this appropriation as originally made. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and myself—and I acted only as the adjutant in the matter——

Mr. HALE. I should like the Senator himself to ask the Senator from Kentucky if he was not surprised when he came here this winter and found that there were not windows in the western wall of this structure?

Mr. VEST. I affirm this: that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and myself explained and had before us that identical diagram now being examined by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] which was submitted to the Committee on Appropriations in 1883. We argued this case upon that estimate and upon that idea, and we carried the vote upon it.

Mr. HALE. Upon the proposition that there were not to be committee-rooms on the outside walls?

Mr. VEST. There is not one word in that paper about a committee-room. It was stated by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and Mr. Olmsted had given the information to our committee, that if we needed committee-rooms they could be made there, but that was simply an incident to the main improvement.

Mr. HALE. It was made a very important matter in the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VEST. Mr. Olmsted's idea and the idea of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds from the beginning was to relieve the Capitol from the architectural defect that was thought to exist in it.

Mr. HALE. When did the Senator first hear of this idea of this being a dam around the Capitol?

Mr. VEST. From the time I read that paper in 1883 and from the time Mr. Olmsted first appeared before our committee. I became a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds seven years ago.

Mr. HOAR. What is the question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is indulging debate on the question of order.

Mr. HOAR. It is not on the question of order, but on the merits.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Executive Document No. 9, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, contains a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury embracing estimates for this work, accompanied by a ground plan and by a front elevation showing what the basis of this terrace work was to be, and everybody will see who looks at it that there is no provision for windows, but every provision for solid blocks of stone in every face of those bases on all sides, and nothing else, and the Senator from Maine will be obliged to admit that if he will come and look at the diagram.

Mr. HALE. I do not dispute that the diagram is so. I say it was never adopted; never.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see. I find, opening the first book that happens to be on my desk, and the very last appropriation I think for this purpose, which I presume is like its predecessors—here is the paragraph:

For continuing the construction of the terrace and grand stairways of the Capitol, as shown on plan accompanying the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury (Executive Document No. 9, first session Forty-eighth Congress), including wages of mechanics and laborers, $200,000.

So that the very last appropriation of Congress, as I have no doubt all its former ones were, expressly required that the work should be constructed in accordance with that plan, and that plan excludes windows from its front faces.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me further, he will find that so careful was Congress in guarding this matter that it declared no work should be done any more than on the north side, and that it should only come out to a line that should be parallel with the extension of the front line of the Capitol. It expressly in terms excluded the idea that it adopted that plan upon the western side.

The Senator will find, either in that act itself or in the act of one of the other years, how carefully Congress reserved to itself the control of the plan, and in terms declared that it did not adopt that plan, but they should not go beyond the line which should be a continuation of the west wall. Senators who were members of the Committee on Appropriations will remember how carefully that was guarded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That proposition I deny, and insist upon the proof.

Mr. HALE. I will show it to the Senator in the laws.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here is the law.

Mr. HALE. I say it is either in that one or in the one for the next year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is not in this one, unless in a different part of the act.

Mr. HALE. I will show it to the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. At the time this law was passed, the 3d of March, 1885, according to the best of my recollection the work was substantially completed on the north front, and this last sum of money that has been appropriated was for continuing the work around to the west front where it is now being done. The very money that is named in this bill has been spent under this appropriation, and this appropriation says that that money shall be spent in that plan, and that plan says that there shall not be any windows in the faces of it.

I should be glad to know by what authority it is. If the Senator can find the law, I would be glad to see that statute.

In respect of putting holes in this terrace and spoiling its appearance, I saw in the newspapers the other day, if I may refer to it, a pretty rough illustration and statement that it would be like asking of Senators to move their eyes down from their heads into the middle of their stomachs. That is a good way to look at it.

Now, Mr. President, I am for utility. I was for utility when a large majority a good many years ago voted that they would provide for a library by extending the central eastern front of this Capitol, and it ought to have been done; but we were finally beaten out of it on the ground that it would injure somewhat, as was supposed, the architectural appearance of the building.

We started on the ground of utility in this instance. It was suggested that we could have rooms which could be used for one purpose or another, committee-rooms if you please; but there was submitted to Congress before the work was undertaken an exact proposition of how the work was to be done; and Congress in its appropriations in every instance, I believe—certainly in this last one which I happened to turn to at random, having the book before me—provided that the money should not be expended in any other way, that it should be done in that way, because to do it in any other would destroy the effect of the thing. If the Senator can show us any law by which we changed that plan, which is in the very last act we passed, or anything which should guide the architect I should be glad to see it.

Mr. HALE. I have sent for the book.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Maine will suspend the Chair will dispose of the question of order. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to-night offered an amendment making an appropriation changing the limit of the cost of a public building. The Senate by a decided majority held that that amendment was out of order. This amendment of the committee strikes out an appropriation that appears in the text of the bill and inserts a legislative provision without an appropriation. The Chair holds that the amendment is not in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Then in lines 1422 and 1423 I move to strike out "one hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred and seventy-five;" so as to read: "$175,000;" and then to add: "of which sum $25,000 may be expended for the completion of the work on sections A, C, E, L, and M of said terraces."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. VEST. How is that?

Mr. ALLISON. I will state the object of that amendment. It is merely to reappropriate what is the unexpended balance provided for in lines 1424 to 1432, inclusive.

Mr. VEST. That is right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I propose to test the sense of the Senate at some time when it is fuller than now upon an amendment which shall cover this feature of committee-rooms and that the money shall not be expended in that direction.

I have found the provision of law that I sent for, showing how carefully and judiciously Congress from time to time protected this matter and did not in any way adopt or embrace the entire plan. In the appropriation act of 1884, the same the Senator from Vermont was reading from but which he did not find, I find this proviso at the end of the appropriation:

Provided, That the work under this appropriation shall be confined to the north front of the Capitol building, and shall not extend westward beyond the line of the west front of the Senate wing of the Capitol.

And the consideration of the Senate and debate of the Senate——

Mr. VEST. What was the date of that law?

Mr. HALE. It was the sundry civil appropriation act of July 7, 1884.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is March 3, 1885.

Mr. HALE. It was a previous one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This gave the plan on the west side.

Mr. HALE. It shows how carefully guarded Congress intended this work should be, that it never would adopt or embrace or admit this plan as a whole.

I do not believe that there are ten men in the Senate who until this year knew or suspected that all this line of work was to be completed on the western side, a plain blank, dull, staring wall, with no committee-rooms lighted by exterior windows. When this first came to the committee which was considering this subject and making this appropriation, the Committee on Appropriations, there was not a member on it who was not surprised and astounded, and we adjourned and went out onto the terrace to see if it was possibly so, because from the beginning that was a distinctive feature, and understood.

Whether the architect had made a plan of that kind that was not submitted generally to members I do not know. I never saw it. It never occurred to me that there was to be this work done within the walls upon the outside. I shall prepare the amendment I suggested.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will read the whole of the paragraph of the act of July 7, 1884, the proviso of which the Senator from Maine has read, in connection with his remark that the committee did not understand: that this money was to be spent in accordance with a particular plan

For constructing terraces north of the Capitol—

This was in 1884. The act I read was the next year, afterward, when we had got that done.

For constructing terraces north of the Capitol, section marked A, as shown on printed plan accompanying the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury (Executive Document No. 9, first session Forty-eighth Congress).

The very plan I have shown you where windows were excluded all around—

$60,000, including wages of mechanics and laborers: Provided, That the work under this appropriation shall be confined to the north front of the Capitol building.

The reason for that was as I remember it in general (I do not know what took place in committee, of course, but what I heard outside and in the Senate Chamber) was that some members of the Senate and a good many members of a body that I may refer to in that Congress, the House of Representatives, did not wish to go on with the work for one reason or another.

It was stated all the time that the House themselves did not want that sort of thing, and there was considerable trouble in getting them to agree to an appropriation at all. So the appropriation of 1884 was confined to the north front to see how it would look. That being done, we came to 1885, and then the Committee on Appropriations, in innocent ignorance of this plan but knowing enough of it to refer to it by name, although they did not take the trouble to look at it, said, "We will go on with the west front and spend $200,000, or whatever it was, there, in accordance with that very same plan, which excludes windows; and if the architect had proceeded to put in windows he would have violated the law, because the law said he should follow that plan, and that plan confessedly shows that no windows are to be admitted.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. MAHONE. With the permission of the Senator from Iowa I ask leave from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to submit three amendments to the sundry civil appropriation bill. I ask that they be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. PLUMB. I suggest that they be not printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, yes; I want to see them in print.

Mr. ALLISON. They can easily be printed and be back here by 11 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 11 o'clock and 45 minutes p.m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, July 24, 1886, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 23, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. BULLOCK.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read.

EMPLOYÉS IN INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with section 194 of the Revised Statutes, a list of the names of the employés of his Department for the year 1885; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not directed the printing of this document, and will not do so unless such be the pleasure of the House. It is a very voluminous document, containing simply the names of employés in the Interior Department.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate bills; which were read a first and second time, and referred as indicated:

The bill (S. 757) granting a pension to Helen Plunkett—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 821) for the relief of James M. Wilbur—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 1051) granting a pension to Lorenzo A. Clark—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 1162) for the erection of a post-office building at Lynn, Mass.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 1880) for the completion of a public building at Nebraska City, Nebr.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 1987) for the relief of David L. Brainard—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 2024) for the relief of Thomas Smith—to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (S. 2424) granting a pension to George W. Kincaid—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2487) granting a pension to Andrew Mucklin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2488) granting a pension to John B. Fuller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2551) granting an increase of pension to Thomas B. Shaw—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2584) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to condemn land at Rock Creek for the purpose of a park to be called Rock Creek Park—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 2660) granting a pension to Annie E. Gardiner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill (S. 2699) granting a pension to Sarah E. Norton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The bill S. 2720) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands in Kansas—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, for this day, on account of important business.

To Mr. LOUTTIT, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. J. M. TAYLOR, until next Monday, on account of sickness.

To Mr. NEGLEY, for one day, to attend to public business.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BUCHANAN, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to print in the RECORD remarks on the bill (S. 1486) to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GROUT, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw, without leaving copies, testimony filed in support of the bill (H. R. 4399) granting a pension to Capt. H. C. Nichols.

FEDERAL BUILDING, BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Mr. DIBBLE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to present the views of a minority of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds upon House bill 4620, reported yesterday from that committee, for the purchase of land for the Federal building in Brooklyn, N. Y.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HEWITT. I desire to occupy a moment or two with a question of personal privilege. Upon the first page of this morning's RECORD will be found what appear to be two petitions, one from the Chamber of Commerce of New York, the other from sundry merchants of New York city. Unanimous consent to have these printed in the RECORD was granted yesterday to my colleague [Mr. BURLEIGH]. These papers are not addressed to the House or the Senate; they are addressed to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. Of course no member had any knowledge of the contents of these petitions when leave was granted to print them. I never saw them before. I do not know for what purpose they are published, but I suppose to cast some doubt upon the statement I made when the river and harbor bill was under discussion, that the chamber of commerce and the merchants of New York had not petitioned for the expenditure of a million of dollars.

Now, it is unnecessary for me to call attention to the fact that the resolution of the chamber of commerce here inserted does not apply to the provision of the river and harbor bill at all, but to another provision they desire to have inserted in the bill. I have a telegram in my hand from the chairman of the harbor committee of the chamber of commerce, received in answer to a communication I addressed to him, in the following words:

NEW YORK, July 22, 1886.

Hon. ABRAM S. HEWITT, M. C.:

Written you fully. Entirely approve your views, which are wholly those of chamber of commerce. Kindly appear in behalf of chamber before Committee on Commerce to-morrow a. m. 10 sharp. Our last chance.

A. FOSTER HIGGINS, Chairman.

I ask permission to insert the letter, with the telegram, in full in the RECORD.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I object.

Mr. WILLIS. I shall not make any objection, if a brief letter from the Chief of Engineers be allowed to go in, in connection with it, which has just been received:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., July 22, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Colonel Houston reports that by means of the hydraulic excavators the depth on Gedney's Bar has been within a month past, since the contractors have been able to put on sufficient plant, been increased 2½ feet, making thereby the depth about the same as in the interior channels (the main ship). In case of further increase of depth on the bar, the attainment of which there is no good reason to doubt, it would be necessary to increase likewise the interior depth at Flynn's Knoll.

The estimates for this operation are given in the papers herewith.

Very respectfully, &c.,

JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers.

Hon. A. S. WILLIS,
Chairman of Committee on Harbors and Rivers.

ENGINEER OFFICE, UNITED STATES ARMY,
New York, July 21, 1886.

MY DEAR PARKE: The morning papers state that Mr. HEWITT moved to strike out the appropriation for the improvement of New York Harbor, on the ground that there was no definite plan, &c. (See inclosed slip.)

In Gillespie's report to the Chief of Engineers, page 779, annual report for 1885, he estimates $620,000 for dredging in the main channel west of Flynn's Knoll. This will have to be done, whatever plan of dikes may be finally adopted, unless it should be decided to improve the Swash Channel, in which case a much larger amount of dredging would be necessary. These are both inside the bar.

One million dollars could be advantageously applied in deepening the main ship channel and in continuing the work on the bar (Gedney's Channel).

The assistant engineer reports an increased depth on the bar of 2½ feet for a width of 800 feet. This depth and width will be increased this season, and should be maintained by hydraulic excavators independently of any plan of improvement by dikes, which latter would take some years to build. This increased depth on the bar necessitates the improvement of the main ship channel west of Flynn's Knoll.

The present results on the bar and the character of the material give reasonable promise of permanency, or maintenance at a moderate expense. At all events, having obtained the increased depth, it should be maintained until permanent structures are built, if they are found necessary.

Very truly, yours,

D. C. HOUSTON.

General J. G. PARKE, Washington, D. C.

Report of Board of Engineers, page 786, annual report of 1885.

* * * * * * *

Dredging would be needed through the 25-foot shoal west of Flynn's Knoll.

Colonel Gillespie's estimate for a channel through this shoal 1,000 feet wide and 30 feet deep is $62.000.

If after the construction of the dike the main interior channels should remain as they now are, this dredging would form a part of the plan; but as that is uncertain, and as much relief would be afforded here by a clear channel 1,000 feet wide and 28 feet deep in advance of the completion of the 30-foot channel on the bar, dredging to that extent is recommended.

Colonel Gillespie estimates its cost at about $420,000.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from New York did state on the floor of the House that the chamber of commerce and the merchants of New York were opposed to the insertion of this appropriation of $750,000 for the New York Harbor in the river and harbor bill, and yet the chamber of commerce has sent to the Senate and presented here a petition or series of resolutions in which this $750,000 is recommended, and showing that they are in favor of this identical bill. The bill and resolution and memorials of the citizens of New York are now before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and, sir, the gentleman states when he refers to Senator WARNER MILLER'S bill, No. 2153, I think with reference to dumping refuse matter in the harbor of New York, what is a mistake when he says that is what they referred to. They so state themselves. And the gentleman from New York is mistaken. He takes the back track now, as he always does. [Laughter.] Just the same position that he took when the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. MORRISON] came in here with his bill, he was in favor of what he considered as the foundation stones of his tariff bill, the three articles of lumber, coal, and iron ore to be on the free-list; but he took the back track on that. [Renewed laughter.] He will take the back track, I have no doubt, upon the distinguished gentleman from Missouri on his silver bill. I shall be prepared for that at any time.

The truth is that the gentleman from New York is not well. [Laughter.] But the nation is well.

In the last six years, sir, the foreign trade of this country shows $800,000,000 increase of our exports over our imports. The importation of gold the last six years was $200,000,000 in excess of the exportation, while of silver it was fifty millions exports more than our imports.

Mr. MORRISON. I must insist upon the regular order.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I should like to have just a moment longer.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order is demanded.

Mr. BURLEIGH. All right; I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded now, and of necessity this matter ceases.

Mr. MORRISON. I am directed by the Committee on Rules to submit a privileged report, which I send to the desk.

Mr. HEWITT. Before the gentleman proceeds, it seems to me that my colleague has made some remarks that justify me in asking the indulgence of the House for a moment or two in reply. I do not want to intrude on the House [cries of "Go on!"], but I think I should be permitted to make at least a brief explanation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I have withdrawn the objection to printing. [Laughter.]

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Speaker, the resolution of the chamber of commerce to which my colleague refers is in the following language:

And we respectfully request that such amount be placed subject to the discretion and judgment of the Secretary of War, but not to be confined to any one locality or plan of improvement.

It is, therefore, a protest against the provision contained in the river and harbor bill, which is in the following words:

Harbor of New York:

Continuing improvement: To secure a 30-foot channel at mean low water at the Sandy Hook entrance to the harbor, upon such plans as the Secretary of War may approve, $750,000.

Now there is but one improvement going on at that point. We made an appropriation of $200,000 in the appropriation bill of last year for dredging Gedney's Channel, of which $15,000 has been expended in preliminary surveys and investigations. One hundred and eighty-five thousand dollars of this fund remain on hand and have not been expended, because they can not be until the plans are prepared. In addition to this amount this bill proposes $750,000 more. It is against that which I protest, not against putting in money to improve New York Harbor, but against continuing an improvement behind which it has been intimated to me that there may be a job; and since the gentleman has raised this question in this manner I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter from Mr. Higgins, chairman of the committee of the chamber of commerce, in regard to this whole operation, so that the country may know what is going on.

The Clerk read as follows:

JULY 22, 1886.

MY DEAR MR. HEWITT: Yours of yesterday is at hand, and every word you write is exactly what I have confidently expected from you. I think it is due to you to state to you fully what has occurred. Your free and positive expression of an intention to put your foot on jobs met with my sincerest sympathy, and I determined to meet you more than half way by forcing our bill—then all in shape—constituting this harbor commission, to be composed exactly as recommended by those eminent men Generals Totten, Bache, and Commissioner Davis, more than twenty years ago, with the addition of two civilian members to represent New Jersey and New York. This bill had been committed to Senator MILLER's care last year and he wished to reintroduce it. My own feeling was that no jobs could well be foisted on the Government when such a board sat there watching everything. The bill was studiously left alone until a few weeks ago, when to my astonishment letters and verbal communications were received by the executive committee of the chamber of commerce from Senator MILLER stating that it was hopeless to try to pass the bill for a harbor board this session, but that he could get a million of dollars inserted in the river and harbor bill for New York as a beginning of permanent improvements to be continued, and that the chamber had better drop the bill and accept the appropriation. A council was called of all the members of the executive committee of the chamber and of my committee on harbor and shipping and the questions discussed of what was best. I set forth most forcibly that I was sure you would oppose any such request, as there certainly did not exist any accepted plan of permanent improvements, and that I could hardly believe the engineers of the United States were ready to put forward any definite plan. That the work of leveling Gedney's Channel was well enough; that there was $180,000 in hand for that and $200,000 more had been asked for that work in accordance with the engineers' report, and that beyond that I knew of no way of spending a million of dollars with any certainty of good results. I entirely convinced the council, and they avowed themselves as ready to reject MILLER's proposal if I said so. You can see my dilemma; and I frankly said, why of course, gentlemen, I can not be so unwise as to reject an offer of a million of dollars, provided it is not a wooden horse—to bind us down to some scheme or other. So we resolved to have Mr. MILLER notified that we accepted his offer of the million, provided it was to be spent on such plan as the Secretary of War should decide to be one best calculated to be self-maintaining and adapted to the wants of the harbor; at the same time to say to Senator MILLER that the bill must not be dropped, but urged for passage. In reply, Senator MILLER had to admit that the item had been inserted in such language that it would be to commence the work recommended by the engineers in their report. Of course this would be to commit us to that place alone, and shut off all consideration of any other or even examination of that, a plainly evident intention to keep all matters here confined to the exclusive judgment and control of the engineers of the Army alone. The United States board (quoted above) expressly warns against having the sole and exclusive judgment of engineers, and this all seemed to me more of a job than anything I had heard of elsewhere. When I state to you briefly that this scheme involves a system of stone walls or jetties projecting out from Coney Island some 4 to 6 miles, absorbing and destroying forever existing channels all largely used, involving an absolutely unknown limit of expenditure, but declared in the outset to involve not less than $6,000,000, and admitted to be so tentative that the work itself is recommended only to proceed as the result of each step is seen; in other words, to spend millions to find out that they are wasted; but, worst of all, the whole plan confining the channels to one single entrance, and producing such a revolution in the entire operations of nature that no one can possibly predict what destruction will not be thereby accomplished. You will see how wild and utterly unworthy such a plan appears to a business man. At all events no such scheme will ever be adopted here with my consent until the wisdom of more than United States engineers has been invoked upon and has approved it. Senator MILLER was given in unmistakable language to understand that the condition must precede the item or accompany it, and that it must not be committed to any predetermined plan. I have interchanged some very plain correspondence with Senator MILLER, and told him if he dropped this bill and accepted this sop in place of it I would deem it my duty to make a public explanation, which would not reflect credit on him. He declared he meant to pass the harbor bill if possible (our bill) in addition, and would have the condition stipulated added to the appropriation of $1,000,000, which you will see was done. I brought so many influences to bear that our bill was passed by the Senate. I will inclose you herewith the principal letters embodying the entire official action of the chamber of commerce. You will see that the general petition, which somebody had printed and sent here for circulation, was not signed by any official of the chamber as such. Its terms, however, did not commmit us to accepting the appropriation as only applicable to a specific work or plan. Instead we sent the communication to Senator MILLER, of which you have a copy herewith, and also the other, asking and urging our harbor bill. I expressly declared to Senator MILLER that of the two I deemed our bill more valuable to New York than the appropriation, and such is the view of the chamber.

I trust you will pardon the length of this epistle, but I wished you to know all about it.

Yours, most sincerely,

A. F. HIGGINS.

The paper referred to in the foregoing letter is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Preamble and resolutions adopted by the commercial associations of the city of New York in reference to New York Harbor.

Whereas the commerce of New York city and the continued prosperity of its merchants depend largely upon the superiority of its harbor in those qualities of safety and convenience which attract sea-going vessels to its shelter and accommodations; and

Whereas to retain this superiority, a careful consideration of the harbor's needs and a constant supervision over it, by a combination of expert talent and experience, is indispensable; and

Whereas these requisites are fully met in the bill drawn by the chamber of commerce, and introduced in the United States Senate by Senator WARNER MILLER, providing for a harbor board, consisting of five members, and representing by these members the interests of this city and of the State of New Jersey, and the expert knowledge of the Engineer Corps, the Navy, and the Coast Survey: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That this measure has the earnest support of this body. That any other measure substituted for it can not so fully serve the interests of our harbor; and that any appropriation, however large, for the harbor can not be of lasting benefit unless expended upon a well-considered, digested, and determined plan—decided only after the fullest possible examination under every available light and talent—and which it would be the duty of that board to invoke and obtain from all sources of value to aid in arriving at a sound conclusion.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded at once to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State and city, and that they be requested, in the name of this body, to unite in vigorously urging the passage of this measure in Congress before the close of the present session.

THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
By CORNELIUS N. BLISS,
Chairman Executive Committee.
A. FOSTER HIGGINS,
Chairman Standing Committee on Harbor and Shipping.
WILLIAM. D. MORGAN,
Chairman of Committee on Harbor Obstructions of the New York Maritime Association.

NEW YORK, June 10, 1886.

Occupying a position, in relation to this branch of service, which is perfectly understood in the scientific community, having no local or personal interests in view, we venture to speak boldly in this matter. Indeed, we regard it as our highest duty to do so. Accordingly, we unite with the memorialists, of the Merchants' Exchange, and the majority of the committee on commerce and navigation, in condemning the irresponsible course which has hitherto been pursued in relation to the harbor, and in approving the appointment of a responsible body, like the present commission, to the end that 'what remains of the harbor may be preserved for the benefit of the increasing commerce of the port.' We go further, and say that, in our judgment, this commission, or one similarly constituted and invested with similar powers, should be continued until some permanent plan of supervision and control over the waters of the city of New York alone, or over all the tidal waters of the State together (as in Great Britain), has been matured and carried into execution.

It is neither necessary nor expedient that the members of such a general commission should be professional engineers. In the exercise of its judicial as well as its executive, functions it can call on and consult engineers, like other experts; and an engineer may always be appointed as special commissioner, to the supervision of works in actual progress, under the authority of the commission of the State.

With a commission advisedly constituted like the present, exercising supreme superintendence under the laws over the tidal waters of the State, and making an annual report of its decisions and doings, to be submitted to public examination and criticism, no further injury could accrue to the harbor. If, through an error in judgment or otherwise, any were contemplated, it would be known by the report, and when known could be arrested. There would be no longer occasion to apprehend that this great commercial avenue would in any manner be destroyed or abridged.

HARBOR COMMISSIONERS' OFFICE,
New York, December 1, 1855.

The original of this is in the hands of Senator WARNER MILLER.

Mr. HEWITT. Now I send to the desk a letter from the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, in regard to the condition of the survey, which I desire to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY OFFICE,
Washington, July 22, 1886.

SIR: I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st instant, in which you ask whether, in my opinion, the survey of New York Harbor and bar has yet been so far completed as to admit of the formation of a definite judgment upon the best plan for improving the depth of water at its entrance.

Upon reference, by telegram, of the above inquiry to Professor H. Mitchell, assistant Coast and Geodetic Survey, who is in charge of the surveys and investigations relating to the physical hydrography of New York Bay and Harbor, including the study of the best methods for preserving and improving the channels, I have received the following telegraphic reply:

"No; the survey is not completed; letter.

"H. MITCHELL."

Upon receipt of Professor Mitchell's letter explaining his reasons in detail for this opinion I will immediately communicate with you.

Very respectfully,

F. M. THORN, Superintendent.

Hon. A. S. HEWITT,
House of Representatives.

The following is the letter of Mr. Mitchell, referred to in the above:

NANTUCKET, MASS., 22d July, 6 a. m., 1886.

SIR: Your telegram received late last night. To my mind the physical survey at New York bar is as yet entirely insufficient to base an improvement upon; and I think the soundings, &c., should be extended down the New Jersey coast, so as to cover the known sources of bar-building material.

Very respectfully, yours,

HENRY MITCHELL.

Mr. F. M. THORN, Supt. C. and G. S.

Address care George P. Hayward & Co., 153 Milk street, Boston.

Mr. HEWITT. Now I ask to have read this telegram, which has been handed to me since I have been on my feet.

The Clerk read as follows:

BROOKLYN, N. Y., July 23, 1886.

Hon. A. S. HEWITT,
House of Representatives:

Chamber of commerce highly appreciates your valuable services; wishes you every success at meeting of committee on commerce here to-day.

A. FOSTER HIGGINS.

Mr. HEWITT. I think these documents have answered in full all that has been said, not, I am sorry to say, in a charitable spirit, by my colleague from New York [Mr. BURLEIGH]. I shall not imitate him in making any personal allusions whatever.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I ask unanimous consent to occupy one minute.

Mr. MORRISON. I will be through in a moment. I can not yield further now.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I ask unanimous consent that I may print a statement in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that he may print a statement in the RECORD? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAYNE. I think it is hardly fair that the gentleman from New York [Mr. BURLEIGH] should not have five minutes when his colleague has occupied so much time.

Mr. BURLEIGH. I only want three minutes.

Mr. MORRISON. I think I will be through in a moment.

Mr. BURLEIGH. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] can not evade his position in this way. Over his own signature Mr. A. Foster Higgins, the chairman of the committee on the harbor, in a letter to the Senate, dated June 11, 1886, said:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

At a joint session of the executive committee and the committee on the harbor of the chamber of commerce, held Thursday, June 10, 1886, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That these committees learn with pleasure and gratitude that through the efforts of Senator WARNER MILLER an appropriation of $1,000,000 has been placed in the river and harbor bill for the improvement of New York Harbor. And we respectfully request that such amount be placed subject to the discretion and judgment of the Secretary of War, but not be entirely confined to any one locality or plan of improvement.

Attest:

CORNELIUS N. BLISS,
Chairman Executive Committee.
A. FOSTER HIGGINS,
Chairman Committee on the Harbor.

NEW YORK, June 11, 1886.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has read the RECORD, and this was referred to in it when the debates were going on in the Senate.

I also wish to have read a letter dated July 22, signed by C. N. Bliss, chairman of the executive committee, which further explains this subject.

The Clerk read:

NEW YORK, July 22, 1886.

MY DEAR MR. MILLER: I have your favor of the 21st. The copy of the RECORD is not yet to hand; but I am surprised to hear that Mr. Higgins has presumably made any opposition to the appropriation for the New York Harbor. In the prior letter sent you about June 11 you have his assent to the proposal over his own signature as chairman of a committee of the chamber of commerce, together with the approval of the executive committee; also of other interested bodies, besides the document signed by many of the merchants. I believe it to be, practically, the unanimous expression of opinion of the members of the chamber that the appropriation should be made now, whether the commission bill becomes a law or not. The latter is deemed to be very desirable if practicable, but the harbor should and must have immediate attention, whether the work be done just as my friend Mr. Higgins wishes or as the Congress chooses to have it done. If you will indicate anything you would wish to receive from here in further support of your action I will endeavor to furnish it promptly.

Very truly, yours,

C. N. BLISS.

Hon. WARNER MILLER,
United States Senate.

Mr. BURLEIGH. In the same connection I will ask the Clerk to read a letter which I send up, dated July 23, addressed to Hon. A. S. WILLIS, chairman Committee on Rivers and Harbors, by General John Newton, Chief of Engineers.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ENGINEERS, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, D. C., July 23, 1886.

SIR: My communication of yesterday, forwarding Colonel Houston's communication, was to furnish some idea of the cost of dredging at New York, without adding expense of maintaining the channel thus dredged.

I send more complete information to-day. Appendix F, report of Colonel Gillespie, page 773 to page 779, discusses the survey made by him of Gedney's bar, and furnishes an estimate of the sums required to obtain 30 feet at mean low water by dredging without the aid of permanent works, namely:

Improving Gedney's Channel for 30 feet mean low water	$350,000
Improving channel inside the bar	620,000
Total	970,000

Say $1,000,000, and no estimate for yearly dredging thereafter to maintain the channels, because such estimate would at this time be a matter of pure speculation. The channel at Gedney's bar has been recently deepened 2½ feet for a width of two or three hundred feet, but no test has yet been made of the filling again when the storms of the autumn, winter, and early spring shall come on.

The board of engineers was called upon, and made a report upon the method of permanent improvement. (Pages 779, 780, and page 783 to page 787 of Appendix F.)

I also append a copy of Executive Document No. 78, Forty-eighth Congress, second session, which gives also the reports of Colonel Gillespie and of the board of engineers, the same as in Appendix F. This executive document is referred to to show that the matter of the permanent improvement of the harbor of New York has not only been made the subject of a definite plan, but has likewise been directly brought to the notice of Congress.

Of course, as in other places, a certain amount of dredging will be done in this harbor prior to the completion and full effects of the proposed jetties, but it will be small in proportion to the amount required if dredging alone be relied upon.

I know of no engineer of any experience who would rely upon dredging in this harbor except as a temporary measure in default of a better method, and it may be said that there is no certainty even of temporary benefit from dredging to last sufficiently long to prove of advantage to navigation.

Of course the more quickly the jetties are constructed the less would be the amount of auxiliary dredging, and as there are no data to give for the time to be consumed in building the jetties, which would depend upon the liberality with which appropriation shall be granted, no reliable estimate can be given for this auxiliary dredging, which ought, however, under favorable conditions of appropriations, to be small.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN NEWTON, Chief of Engineers.

Hon. A. S. WILLIS,
Chairman Committee on Harbors and Rivers.

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the improvement of the great harbor of New York, through which flows the commerce of this country, and I am also in favor of having the work done under the direction of the Secretary of War and the engineers of the United States Government, and I believe that this House will be in favor of it when it is properly understood. Of course, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], representing New York city, arose from his seat and stated that the citizens of New York or the chamber of commerce did not want this appropriation it appeared to be a good reason for the members of this House to vote against it; but I believe the facts have clearly shown that the gentleman was mistaken, and that the opinion and wishes of the people of New York, State and city, are that this appropriation should be granted and accepted, and I believe that this House will also recognize its importance.

The gentleman uses the following language:

It has been intimated that there may be a job.

I would like to have the gentleman explain to this House who the job is with. The chamber of commerce and the Senate bill state that the money is to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. Does the gentleman know of any job being put up with the Secretary of War?

BUSINESS OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS COMMITTEE.

Mr. MORRISON. I make a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That on Saturday afternoon, the 24th of July, the House shall take a recess from 5 o'clock until 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of such bills as may be presented by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds; that the evening session herein provided for shall not continue later than 11 o'clock p. m.

Mr. MORRISON. I demand the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 115, noes 10.

So (further count not being called for) the previous question was ordered.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is the resolution debatable?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate; fifteen minutes for the proposition and fifteen minutes against it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not care to occupy the time of the House in debating the proposition, but I think it is due to the House that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] who offers the resolution should explain, before we vote on the question itself, the necessity for a special night session for this purpose.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, all the explanation that I have to give is there is a necessity—probably not so great as is claimed—for such structures as public buildings. It is the duty of the Government to provide them wherever they are necessary. To that end, we have in Congress and in the House a Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which have been referred sundry bills with a view to providing for the necessity I have referred to, and these bills have been reported back. They have not been considered by the House and the committee has had no day to consider these bills. It has been deemed prudent and right by the Committee on Rules to give to the consideration of the subject of public buildings three hours in which the House may consider such bills as have been reported by the Committee on Public Buildings, during which time the House may authorize the construction of such buildings as are required for public uses and justified by public necessities.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I did not know but there might be some special reason for setting apart Saturday evening for the consideration of bills for the construction of public buildings. But it seems the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] knows of no particular reason. He knows of no one or two or three very important cases. If there were I should not object to setting apart an evening for that purpose. But as it is, with no important cases to pass upon, it seems to me quite unnecessary at this stage of the session. That committee has had its full share of time in this House. It has had a day or two already.

Mr. STORM. Is it not the fact that that committee has been recognized more frequently than any other for motions to suspend the rules?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I believe so; and it has been recognized for the passage of bills by unanimous consent probably more frequently than any other committee of the House. And it has obtained the passage of quite as many bills I think as the Architect can well look after before we meet again. Several of them have been vetoed. It is too late in the session to require of the President to examine more bills of this kind. There will be an opportunity also for suspensions of the rules later in the session.

Mr. DIBBLE. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me to interrupt him, I will state for his information that the only day the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has had was a day to consider small bills embracing no appropriation at all or appropriations under the sum of $25,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has occupied quite as much of the time of this House, I think, as any other committee, unless it be the Appropriations Committee. If it has not had separate days set apart for the consideration of its bills, it has occupied a great deal of time.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman state how much time it has occupied?

Mr. McMILLIN. With the permission of the gentleman from Ohio I will answer the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MILLIKEN]. The time in addition to the regular session that has been given to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has been a good portion of almost every day that has been devoted thus far by the House to motions for suspensions of the rules. I believe there have been very few such days on which some public-building bill has not gone through.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I do not know how many bills have already been passed; but there are a large number, thirty or forty, on the Calendar, beside bills which have come from the Senate—bills for the construction of public buildings in little towns all over the country where there is certainly no urgent need of them. There are other measures of more importance than these bills for public buildings which ought to occupy the time of this House every hour it can remain in session.

I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] for a question or a statement.

Mr. McMILLIN. In the line of what the gentleman has just stated, let me remind the House that there are now pending bills declaring forfeited more than 50,000,000 acres of the public lands unearned by the corporations to which they were granted, and I think it is not only improper but highly improper for the House to neglect that kind of work and go into the passage of more public-building bills, many of which are, to say the least of it, in their very nature of questionable propriety.

Mr. DIBBLE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. McMILLIN. With pleasure.

Mr. DIBBLE. One of the objects of this proposed evening session is to give the gentleman from Tennessee an opportunity to put his views into practice by voting against the Chattanooga building.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will put my views into practice in the future as I have done in the past, by favoring every bill that I think is right and opposing every bill that I think is wrong, no matter where it comes from. I know no locality, as the gentleman is well aware, in the discharge of my duties here; and if he intends by his remark to imply that I am improperly influenced by such considerations, I am willing to place my record and his before the House and the country, and let them judge as to which of us stands here most strenuously for that which is right.

Mr. DIBBLE. It was to give the gentleman that opportunity that I spoke.

Mr. McMILLIN. I thank my magnanimous and considerate friend from South Carolina for this exhibition of superlative generosity. There is, I will say to him, need for a public building at Chattanooga.

But to return, Mr. Speaker, there is no more important question than the reclamation of unearned public lands. This Congress has already reclaimed 35,000,000 acres, and should not fail to consider the other bills reported by the committee. Let us go resolutely at the work and see that all lands fairly subject to forfeiture are reclaimed for "homes for the homeless."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, if we are to have a night session for any purpose I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] that it should be for more important measures, like the bills forfeiting unearned land grants. There is a bill before the House for the forfeiture of 35,000,000 or 36,000,000 acres of unearned lands, or lands alleged to have been unearned, and that bill gets crowded out by other things. It could pass here in one evening.

There are many other measures, too, of infinitely greater importance than these public-building bills, of which I think we have passed quite enough for one session. I am therefore opposed to setting apart Saturday evening, or any evening, for the purpose of passing more of them. If it could be shown to the House that there were any one or two or three important measures of this character that ought to be acted upon without delay I should not object, but I see no necessity for an evening session at this time for the indiscriminate consideration of such measures.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. What does the gentleman think of the importance of providing for public buildings at Dayton and Zanesville, Ohio?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. They are not important enough to require an evening session at this time. I have voted for no bills for my own State this year, and I do not think there is any pressing need of such bills anywhere. I think such bills can all very well go over till next session. I notice on the Calendar quite a number of bills for Indiana. Does my friend desire to have an opportunity to vote for those?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Oh, no. Since it has been solemnly decided that a city like Dayton, with 60,000 inhabitants, and a place like Asheville, N. C., where there is a United States court and no building for its accommodation, are not entitled to public buildings, I do not see any use in further legislation of that kind.

Mr. McMILLIN. I am very glad the gentleman agrees with our President.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Well, whatever might be the result, I do not think we ought to be compelled to come here at night to pass any more of these public-building bills this session.

Mr. McADOO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. McADOO. Don't you think that the building of a good post-office at Zanesville is a more important local issue than the silver question?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The gentleman is facetious, not serious. I do not think that Zanesville is suffering for want of a public building. I do not think there was any urgent necessity in the first instance for spending $8,000 or $10,000 to provide quarters for each Government official employed in that town, when the buildings that are erected by the people of the town for offices do not cost on an average, perhaps, more than $500 for each occupant. I think that rule should govern.

Mr. SOWDEN. Does not the gentleman consider it more important that the House should consider the bill reported from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, providing for the redemption of the outstanding trade-dollars?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Certainly. There are any number of bills more important. Let us get through with those first.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, every time in the last five or six months some gentlemen have endeavored to get away from the consideration of any question, they have run behind land-forfeiture bills, which have been here all these many months, and yet these forfeitures have not been made up to this time—some of them most justifiable and most urgent.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. The gentleman himself is on the steering committee, I believe.

Mr. MORRISON. Certainly, and we steered the Committee on Public Lands into a rule made by its own members—its chairman—but that did not satisfy them; they gave us notice that "in season and out of season" they would obtrude their greatly desired land forfeitures upon us until we should change the rule. We did that, and they have been out of season ever since. [Laughter.] The rules as they now are give the right of way to land-grant forfeitures at all times.

Mr. WARNER. Well, give us a chance to vote on the land-forfeiture bill and we will pass it.

Mr. McRAE. If the gentleman is so anxious to take up the land-grant-forfeiture bills why is it that he has voted so persistently with the oleomargarine men to postpone everything else in order to take up the oleomargarine bill out of its order?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I did not vote to take up the oleomargarine bill as against the land-grant-forfeiture bills. If the land-grant-forfeiture bill had been at issue I would have voted to take it up, and I will do that at any time.

Mr. McRAE. The gentleman from California who has charge of the bill is now ready and has heretofore attempted to get consideration for the Northern Pacific forfeiture bill, and would have done so but for the oleomargarine bill.

Mr. MORRISON. There are some meritorious bills pending for the construction of public buildings. I remember one for a building at the capital of the good old State of Maryland, and there are some others. It would seem that there should be a commodious public building at the capitals of all the States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen about me understand very well that all they have to do to prevent a bad bill from passing on Saturday night is to come here and say, "I object."

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is not a part of the proposed order, I believe.

Mr. MORRISON. It is the result of it. No bill can pass without a quorum if objection is made by demanding a quorum, which is never present at night sessions.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Of course the passage of bills can be obstructed by calling for a quorum, but a mere objection will not do it.

Mr. MORRISON. I have said more than once there are some meritorious bills for public buildings; and this Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has never yet had a day for general business. It is always such cheeky members as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], and myself [laughter] that rush in, importune the Speaker day after day until they get recognition, and not always for the most meritorious bills.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have not asked recognition from the Speaker to pass a bill this session, as he will bear witness.

Mr. MORRISON. Nor have I.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I believe my time is not all out. I wish only to say that when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] intimates that I have sought recognition to bring up bills, he does me injustice, and he fails to give credit to gentlemen who have exerted themselves, as I have not, in that way.

Mr. MORRISON. I did not say you had. I said "such cheeky members as you, the member from Tennessee, and myself" rushed in and got recognition. This was in answer to the statement that gentlemen had been recognized to call up public building bills, and that such recognition should be charged to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understand that.

Mr. MORRISON. Then let us vote.

Mr. McMILLIN. I excuse the gentleman from Illinois for his reference to me, on account of his having put me in such good company as himself and the gentleman from Ohio. I try to have the courage at all times to fight for what I think right and oppose the wrong.

Mr. HENLEY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: Is an amendment to the resolution in order?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered; and the rule provides that the previous question cuts off all amendment.

Mr. HENLEY. I want to substitute the consideration of land-grant-forfeiture bills for public-building bills.

Mr. MORRISON. There goes the gentleman from California again under cover of land-grant forfeitures. [Laughter.]

When I used the names of the gentlemen from Tennessee [Mr. McMILLIN] and Ohio [Mr. WARNER] in connection with my own but a moment ago, I expected them to correctly understand me as meaning exactly what I did not say.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] that he can attain his object by moving to recommit with instructions.

Mr. HENLEY. If there be no objection I will make that motion. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered; but the gentleman has the right to make a motion to recommit.

Mr. MORRISON. There is no objection to his making it.

Mr. HENLEY. I move then that this resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Rules with instructions to report a resolution appropriating the session of Saturday night for the consideration of land-grant-forfeiture bills—the Northern Pacific land forfeiture. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from California put his motion in such a form that the Chair can submit it to the House? The gentleman first mentions land-grant-forfeiture bills generally, and then he names a particular bill.

Several MEMBERS (to Mr. HENLEY). Make it general.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand whether the gentleman intends the business of that evening session to be the consideration of all land-grant-forfeiture bills or only the Northern Pacific——

Mr. HENLEY. The Northern Pacific.

Several MEMBERS. Make it general.

Mr. MORRISON. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California moves that this resolution be recommitted with instructions to report it back with a substitute providing for a session on Saturday evening next, beginning at 8 o'clock, for the consideration of the bill to forfeit the land grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. HENLEY. I modify my motion so as to allow the consideration of all bills forfeiting land grants.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to amend so as to fix Monday night for the consideration of bills for the forfeiture of land grants.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to amend the instructions so that the resolution as reported back shall provide for a session of the House on Monday evening for the consideration of bills forfeiting land grants.

Mr. WHEELER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. CANNON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it not now in order under the existing orders for the Committee on Public Lands to call up at any time the bill in relation to the forfeiture of the Northern Pacific Railroad land grant?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled heretofore that the committee can report at any time when the House is not considering some other matter and can have the report considered.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That committee now has all the time there is, and it wants more!

Mr. HENLEY. I demand the previous question on my motion.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the motion of Mr. HENLEY) said: The noes seem to have it.

Mr. HENLEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being—ayes 43, noes 123; more than one-fifth voting in the affirmative.

Mr. LONG. Will the Chair state the question?

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California to recommit this resolution to the Committee on Rules with instructions to report the same back with a substitute providing that Saturday evening be set apart for the consideration of bills forfeiting land grants to railroad companies.

The question was taken on Mr. HENLEY's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 138, nays 93, not voting 91; as follows:

During the roll-call the following pairs were announced from the Clerk's desk:

Until further notice:

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. WADSWORTH.

Mr. MILLER with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. DOWDNEY with Mr. O'HARA.

Mr. DANIEL with Mr. WHITING.

Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. OWEN.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. RANNEY.

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. PAYNE.

Mr. NORWOOD with Mr. O'DONNELL.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. RIGGS with Mr. PHELPS.

Mr. BLAND with Mr. VAN SCHAICK.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. BARBOUR with Mr. LIBBEY.

Mr. BARKSDALE with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. BRAGG with Mr. CASWELL.

Mr. SENEY with Mr. SYMES.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. HANBACK.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, with Mr. WEST.

For this day:

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, with Mr. LOUTTIT.

Mr. REESE with Mr. BAKER.

Mr. J. M. TAYLOR with Mr. NEGLEY.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. WAIT, on this vote.

Mr. WILSON (after the vote had been announced) said: Mr. Speaker, I was in the Hall during the roll-call, but did not hear my name called. I ask, by unanimous consent, to have my vote recorded.

There was no objection, and Mr. WILSON'S vote was recorded.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, the House has decided to give Saturday night to the Committee on Public Lands, and I ask by unanimous consent it may be done under the provisions of the resolution without the inconvenience of making a report as ordered by the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks the order may now be made in accordance with the provisions of the resolution recommitted to the committee.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask that may be considered done as if we had reported back the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask by unanimous consent that to-morrow may also be set apart for the same purpose.

Mr. MORRISON. To-morrow's session is set apart for the consideration of other business, as everybody and the gentleman from Indiana knows.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask by unanimous consent that to-morrow be set apart for the consideration of the same business to which the evening session is exclusively devoted.

Mr. MCADOO. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks that by unanimous consent a recess be taken to-morrow from 5 o'clock to 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of bills for the forfeiture of unearned land grants, not to extend beyond 11 o'clock p. m.

Mr. BRADY and Mr. STRAIT objected.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. BAYNE. I move that Monday next be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. SOWDEN objected.

MORNING HOUR DISPENSED WITH.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business has been called for. The regular order is the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. HATCH. I move the morning hour for the call of committees for reports be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. That requires a vote of two-thirds.

Mr. DIBBLE demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 128, noes 8.

So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the morning hour was dispensed with.

PRIVATE BUSINESS DISPENSED WITH.

Mr. HATCH. I move to dispense with private business for to-day.

Mr. HISCOCK. Would it not be in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole House now?

The SPEAKER. Not until private business is dispensed with. The House could of course resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, but it would be for the consideration of private bills.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Would the affirmative of this vote dispense with the session of this evening for pension bills?

The SPEAKER. It would not affect the evening session, which is under a special order of the House, nor would it affect the two bills reported by the Committee on War Claims, with reference to which a special order was made for their consideration to-day.

The motion of Mr. HATCH was agreed to.

M'MINNVILLE AND MANCHESTER RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. There are two special orders which are to be disposed of in some way, the McMinnville Railroad bill——

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, having reported that bill, and understanding that it will be impossible to have it considered now, I move that its consideration be postponed until the Friday after the first Monday in December, to be taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal, and to stand there as it now stands upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5194) directing the Quartermaster-General to settle with the McMinnville and Manchester Railroad Company, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

THE MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the title of the next business on which a vote was ordered to be taken up to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 72) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that this be postponed until next Friday under the same conditions as the last bill acted upon.

Mr. OATES. I object to the postponement of that bill. It has been postponed several times already. It is under the operation of the previous question now, I believe, and I ask if it is competent under these circumstances to move to postpone the consideration? Would it not require unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that until the question has been taken upon the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution, upon which the previous question has been ordered, postponement could be made only by unanimous consent. As soon as the vote is taken on that question it could be postponed by a majority vote of the House. The reason, the Chair will state, is this: The effect of the previous question is to bring the House to an immediate vote on the question then pending, which is the engrossment and third reading of the resolution. The motion to postpone would defeat that order; but as soon as that vote is taken a majority can then postpone the resolution or take such other steps as it may see proper.

Mr. OATES. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion and let us have a vote directly upon the passage of the resolution. It has already been debated and favorably reported from the committee. There is nothing to do but to vote upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. It will inevitably involve a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. OATES. Not unless you demand it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred upon the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move to postpone further consideration until next Friday.

Mr. OATES. I make the point of order now that it requires unanimous consent to do that.

The SPEAKER. It does not, as stated by the Chair a moment ago. As long as the previous question was pending the motion could only be made by unanimous consent, because the effect of the previous question is to bring the House to a direct vote, which would be defeated by postponing consideration.

Mr. OATES. Then I hope the House will vote down the motion.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 79, noes 58.

Mr. OATES. No quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think it will facilitate business to move to lay this resolution on the table and settle it right here.

The SPEAKER. The question of no quorum being made, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. OATES and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 94, noes 75.

So the motion to postpone was agreed to.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

Mr. WHEELER. I desire to submit a privileged report from a conference committee.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

FRANK L. WOLFORD,
JOSEPH WHEELER,
Managers on the part of the House.
CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement submitted by the committee of conference is as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on H. R. 68 make the following statement of the action of the conference:

It leaves the bill as it passed the House of Representatives, and it is recommended to the favorable action of the House.

JOSEPH WHEELER,
FRANK L. WOLFORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. The report I think is not in conformity with the rule of the House, as it makes no statement of the effect.

Mr. WOLFORD. It leaves the bill just as it was passed by the House.

Mr. BAYNE. And this is the unanimous report of the conferees as I understand.

Mr. WHEELER. Last January the Committee on Military Affairs made a unanimous report, recommending the passage of this bill. It passed the House without division. The Senate amended the bill so as to provide for Major Chambliss by giving him a pension of $75 per month. The Senate conferees consent to recede from the amendment of the Senate, and agree that the bill stand as it passed the House.

The effect of the report of the conference committee is to restore Major Chambliss to the Army, and place him on the retired-list with the rank which he resigned nineteen years ago.

A similar bill passed the House in the Forty-seventh Congress, and was reported favorably by the Senate Military Committee. The case has been before Congress on several occasions, and it has never been adversely reported upon by any committee of either House.

Mr. BAYNE. And unanimously reported from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; the report of the House committee in favor of Major Chambliss's bill was unanimous.

The service of this officer is given by the War Department in these words:

VOLUNTEER RECORD.

Enrolled as second lieutenant Company E, First Tennessee Mounted Volunteers, May 23, 1846, and served with regiment in Texas and in war with Mexico until muster out of regiment in June, 1847.

Re-entered service as captain Company C, Third Tennessee Volunteers, October 7, 1847, and served in the war with Mexico until mustered out with company July 24, 1848.

REGULAR ARMY RECORD.

Appointed first lieutenant Second Cavalry 3d March, 1855; captain Second Cavalry, 6th April, 1861; Fifth Cavalry, 3d August, 1861; major Fourth Cavalry, 30th March, 1864; brevetted major 4th May, 1862, for gallant and meritorious services in action at Warwick's Creek, Virginia; lieutenant-colonel 28th June, 1862, for gallant and meritorious services at the battle of Gaines's Mill, Virginia.

Service.—On regimental recruiting service in Tennessee from May 8, 1855, to September 14, 1855; with regiment at Jefferson Barracks, Missouri, to October 27, 1855; en route to and in Texas to May 18, 1858; on recruiting service to April 19, 1859; on leave to September 22, 1859; on duty at Carlisle barracks, Pennsylvania, to March 8, 1860; on recruiting service to July, 1860; on delay to October 17, 1860; on duty at Carlisle barracks, Pennsylvania, to November, 1860; conducting recruits to and with regiment in Texas to April, 1861; Washington, D. C., to March 10, 1862, and in the field, Army of the Potomac, to June 27, 1862, when wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Gaines's Mill, Virginia; prisoner of war to July, 1862; sick on account of wounds and on parole to October 23, 1862; assistant instructor of tactics and commanding cavalry detachment at the Military Academy, West Point, N. Y., to August 23, 1864; special inspector of cavalry, Military Division of the Mississippi, from September, 1864, to December 23, 1865; joined regiment February 20, 1866, and commanded it at San Antonio, Tex., to May 9, 1866, and on duty with regiment at same place to October 19, 1866; on leave of absence until he resigned, November 1, 1867.

I also ask to have read a letter from Major-General McClellan, dated March 22, 1880, and an affidavit of this distinguished soldier made about a month later:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Trenton, March 22, 1880.

Independently of his services, when a mere boy, in the Mexican war, the admirable, gallant, and soldierly manner in which Col. William P. Chambliss performed his duty during the recent war merits high appreciation and reward.

Literally riddled with balls, he was left for days on the field of battle at Gaines's Mill, only to be taken thence to the Libby prison.

Escaping death as by a miracle, he has for several years past been in wretched health—the consequence of his many wounds, of exposure on the field of battle, and of a still unextracted ball.

If under any circumstances an officer who has voluntarily resigned his commission can be placed on the retired-list, I think that Colonel Chambliss, by his services and sufferings, eminently deserves to be of the number.

GEO. B. McCLELLAN.

I certify the foregoing is a correct copy of the original, which is now before me.

ROGER JONES,
Lieut. Col., Asst. Insp. Gen'l, U. S. A.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 20, 1880.

STATE OF NEW JERSEY, Mercer County, ss:

On the 21st day of April, before me, a notary public in and for said State, personally appeared George B. McClellan, who, being by me duly sworn, declares and says that he is personally acquainted with William P. Chambliss, late captain Fifth United States Cavalry, and that the said Capt. William P. Chambliss was present with his company and regiment at the battle of Gaines's Mill, Virginia, on the 27th day of June, 1862, the army then being under my command, and that he was left on the field suffering from a wound from a musket ball in the left shoulder, and from a buckshot wound in the upper part of the chest, and from a rifle ball through the abdomen and another through the left thigh.

He had also received other injuries, among them the dislocation of the right shoulder.

He remained some days on the field of battle, and was finally taken into Richmond as a prisoner, but was exchanged a few weeks afterward. His condition when exchanged was such that his recovery seemed impossible, and I think that very few survived such wounds and exposure as fell to the lot of Captain Chambliss. He further declares that he has no interest directly or indirectly in this matter.

GEO. B. McCLELLAN.

During this session numerous bills have been referred to the Military Committee which have for their object the restoration of resigned officers, but I believe this is the only one which has received favorable action.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. WHEELER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that the bill under consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when the committee rose yesterday evening may be laid aside for the present.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I object.

Mr. COBB. I move that the House proceed to the consideration of the House Calendar for the purpose of taking up the land-forfeiture bill.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order as against the motion of the gentleman from Missouri. The only way the gentleman from Indiana has of reaching his purpose is to refuse to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. COBB. Very well.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH, the Speaker stated the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. COBB. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 24.

Mr. COBB. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 16 members voting therefor.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

MANUFACTURE OF VINEGAR FROM GRAIN.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the unfinished business. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9733) to regulate the manufacture of vinegar made from grain.

Mr. HATCH. It is well understood by the House that when we entered upon the consideration of this bill yesterday it was with the view of an adjournment pending its consideration and not with an expectation on the part of the friends of the bill known as the oleomargarine bill that this bill would be finally disposed of at this time. Without desiring to place the bill in any other than its normal condition on the Calendar, and with a view to reaching the bill I indicated when I made my motion to go into committee, I now move to strike out the enacting clause of the pending bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. I think it would save time to ask unanimous consent of the committee that this bill be passed over. I make that request.

Mr. MORRISON. I object.

Mr. HATCH. I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The effect of this vote is that when the committee reports to the House it will report this bill with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out. The Clerk will report the next revenue bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Is it now in order to move that the committee rise for the purpose of finishing this matter?

Mr. HATCH. I will make that motion when we get to the other bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not desire to do anything that is obstructive, but I would prefer that the committee should rise and that this matter should be settled before we go further.

Mr. HATCH. Then I will make the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. HOLMAN. You may lose your ground if you do.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the committee should now rise, and if the House should reverse the action of the committee, when we return into committee would we not be on the same bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I withdraw my motion that the committee rise, and hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] will not insist on it at this time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not.

Mr. DIBBLE. I move that the committee rise.

The question being taken, the chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. MORRISON. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 32, noes 152.

So the motion was not agreed to.

IMPORT DUTIES, INTERNAL-REVENUE TAXES, ETC.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next revenue bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9702) to reduce and equalize duties on imports, to reduce internal-revenue taxes, and to modify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that that bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. DIBBLE. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk commenced to read the bill.

After a portion of the bill had been read,

Mr. DIBBLE. I withdraw the demand for the reading of this bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order under the rule unless the House determines to consider the bill. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has asked unanimous consent that the bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks that it be passed over. I ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] not to interpose an objection; he shall have the time he desires.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over for the present. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule the committee will rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration revenue bills, and having reached the bill (H. R. 9702) to reduce and equalize duties on imports, to reduce internal-revenue taxes, and to modify the laws in relation to the collection of the revenue, objection was made to passing it over, and, under the rule, the committee rose and he reported the objection to the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the bill be passed over.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I understand this to be the revenue-tariff bill.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HATCH. Regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] moves that this bill be passed over.

The question was taken; and the Speaker stated that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 113, noes 26.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to act as tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be excused. This is a dilatory proceeding, and I do not want to take any part in it.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair will appoint the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] instead of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 145, noes 20.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, and they were refused; only 18 members voting in favor thereof.

The bill was passed over.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of revenue bills. The Clerk will report the next revenue bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 164) repealing tax, special and otherwise, upon tobacco and upon the sale and manufacture thereof.

Mr. HATCH. I move that that joint resolution be passed over for the present.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I object.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let the joint resolution be read.

The Clerk read the joint resolution.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that this joint resolution be passed over for the present.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I object.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, as objection is made to passing this over, and as there is an adverse report on this joint resolution, I move to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not in order. The House is now in Committee of the Whole. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. On that I ask for a division.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Does the Chair mean that the motion is to report this bill back to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is that the joint resolution be laid aside, and that when it is reported to the House it be with a recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That motion, I believe, is debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Several MEMBERS. The House is dividing.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole.

The Chair, having counted those voting in the affirmative and those voting in the negative, was about to announce the result——

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee is now dividing, and the Chair will first announce the result of the vote, and then hear the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But it is in reference to this question that I desire to make the inquiry. I find on page 342 of the Digest this statement:

A motion in the Committee of the Whole to strike out the enacting words or clause is debatable.

I raised that question a moment ago, and the Chair decided that it was not debatable, and prevented debate.

Now, sir, the rule gives the right to debate——

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The House was dividing.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No; it was not. I want to know whether the Chair is going to decide directly in the face of the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will pardon the Chair. Upon the pending question the committee has divided; and the Chair must now announce the result on that question.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desired to appeal from the decision of the Chair, it was his duty to do so when the Chair announced that the question was not debatable and before the vote was taken. Now the vote has been taken, and the Chair must announce the result.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But that does not alter the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must announce the result.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I want to raise the question whether the Chair proposes to decide directly in the face of the rule. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that this vote has been taken and must be announced. Upon this question the yeas are 112, the nays 17. The ayes seem to have it. [A pause.] The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill.

BIENNIAL EXHIBITION, BOTTLERS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9208) to permit the entry, free of duty, of foreign goods for exhibition at the fourth biennial exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association.

Mr. HATCH. I ask that this bill may be passed over.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I object. I desire that the bill be read.

The bill was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over for the present.

Mr. HATCH. Pending that request, I will ask unanimous consent that the vote be taken without debate on laying this bill aside to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I object to that. I desire to debate it.

Mr. HATCH. I insist on my motion that the bill be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia objects to passing the bill over; and under the rules the committee will rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration revenue bills, had reached the bill (H. R. 9208) to permit the entry, free of duty, of foreign goods for exhibition at the fourth biennial exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association; and that unanimous consent having been asked to pass this bill over objection was made, and under the rule the committee rose, and he reported the objection to the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House direct the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to pass the bill over?

Mr. HATCH. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent that a vote be taken on this bill without debate.

Mr. RANDALL. The report of the Committee of the Whole relates only to passing the bill over in committee, and the only question is whether the House shall direct it to be passed over.

The SPEAKER. That is the only question.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SPRINGER. This motion is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is not; but the Chair does not know for what purpose the gentleman from West Virginia rises.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I want to make objection to laying this bill aside.

The SPEAKER, That objection has been made in Committee of the Whole. The question is, Will the House direct the Committee of the Whole to pass the bill over?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 107, noes 22.

Mr, GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, and Mr. HATCH were appointed.

Before the count by tellers was concluded,

Mr. HATCH said: Mr. Speaker, the objection is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The objection can not be withdrawn in the House. The House may, however, by unanimous consent, direct the Committee of the Whole——

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand there is no objection to the passage of this bill; and I request unanimous consent that the bill may be considered and passed in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HATCH. Without any debate.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Without any debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with a vote upon the objection raised in Committee of the Whole, and to direct the Committee of the Whole to take a vote on the bill without debate. If there be no objection that order will be made, and the committee will resume its session. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. COLLINS. I ask unanimous consent to say one word in favor of this bill.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It will pass without any objection.

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has been given to dispose of the bill in Committee of the Whole without debate.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the House the question is on laying aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. 9208) to permit the entry, free of duty, of foreign goods for exhibition at the fourth biennial exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association.

The question was decided in the affirmative.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the title of the next revenue bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9873) to reduce the tax on spirits distilled from apples, peaches, and other fruits, and for other purposes.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be passed over.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I object. The bill provides among other things that farmers may sell leaf-tobacco without license or having to hunt a licensed dealer, and is very important.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the Committee of the Whole will rise and report the objection to the House.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration revenue bills, had directed him to report back with a recommendation that it pass the bill (H. R. 9208) to permit the entry free of duty of foreign goods for exhibition at the fourth biennial exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association; also that the Committee of the Whole had reached the bill (H. R. 9873) to reduce the tax on spirits distilled from apples, peaches, and other fruits, and for other purposes; and that unanimous consent having been asked to pass this bill over objection was made, and under the rule the committee rose and he reported the objection to the House.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. If in order, I desire to have the bill read.

The SPEAKER. It might have been read if desired before objection was made in the Committee of the Whole. The bill is not in the House. The question is on ordering the bill to be passed over.

Mr. MCMILLIN demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 34.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed as tellers Mr. REID, of North Carolina, and Mr. HATCH.

Mr. HATCH. I would request Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, to act in my place.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I demand the yeas and nays.

The House divided; and there were ayes 26.

The SPEAKER. Not a sufficient number.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Tellers.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Count the other side; that is the easiest way out.

The other side was counted; and there were noes 113.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays are not ordered, one-fifth not having voted in favor thereof.

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order that the gentleman from North Carolina having demanded tellers, and tellers not having been ordered, he is not now entitled to tellers.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman had simply demanded tellers and they had been ordered by the House, and he had then demanded the yeas and nays and the yeas and nays had been refused, the Chair thinks the point of order would be well taken; but the gentleman from North Carolina made the point that no quorum had voted, and if that is insisted upon the tellers will resume their places.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the Chair please state what the number voting was?

The SPEAKER. Twenty-six in the affirmative and 113 in the negative. It requires one-fifth of the entire vote, and 26 is not one-fifth of the entire vote. The tellers will resume their places.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 134, noes 31.

So the bill was ordered to be passed over.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

[Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments of the Senate.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Is this one amendment, or are there several amendments of the Senate?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not state until they have been read.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will make that point at the proper time, that they are divisible.

The CHAIRMAN. Reserve the point until the amendments are read, and then the Chair will decide it.

The reading of the Senate amendments was concluded.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to submit the proposition by unanimous consent that all debate on the Senate amendments be limited to two hours.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Make it one hour. [Cries of "Vote!"] I withdraw my suggestion.

Mr. HATCH. I will state to the committee I make this proposition in deference to gentlemen on the floor opposed to the Senate amendments and opposed to the bill. I am making it in good faith. I desire gentlemen who have expressed the wish to speak for a few minutes on these amendments shall have the opportunity to do so. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] has requested the control of one hour.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. An hour and a half.

Mr. HATCH. Well, I consent to one hour and a half, out of which the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] is to have fifteen minutes.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Has no arrangement been made with those who are opposed to the bill?

Mr. HISCOCK. That is satisfactory.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. That is as it stood in its original position, and who are now content to agree to the Senate amendments.

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman will simply let me get my unanimous consent before the committee, it will be for the committee to determine. I ask all debate on the Senate amendments be limited to two hours, one and a half to be controlled by Mr. DUNHAM, and thirty minutes by myself in the interest of the bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Indulge me, before I give consent, in asking this question: In what way will this be presented for a vote of the committee? Will it be concurrence, or non-concurrence and asking for a conference?

Mr. HATCH. In obedience to instructions of the Committee on Agriculture this morning, it is in accordance with telegrams and petitions received in the last twenty-four hours from friends of the bill throughout the United States. I shall move to concur in the Senate amendments. [Applause.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I shall concur in that most cheerfully.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri if he makes that motion now.

Mr. HATCH. I will make it when the proper time comes.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. For I desire to amend the motion so as to concur in the Senate amendments with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not now in order.

The gentleman from Missouri moves that all debate upon the Senate amendments be closed in two hours, of which time one and one-half hours are to be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois on the left [Mr. DUNHAM] and thirty minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri himself.

Mr. VAN EATON. I object.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. As the gentleman has stated that it is the intention of the committee to move concurrence in all of the Senate amendments, I do not see any necessity for this consumption of time.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman will not interpose any objection to this arrangement.

Mr. MORRISON. I do not want to object to the two hours' debate, but I do object to the time being farmed out between these two gentlemen.

Mr. HISCOCK. Is there any objection to limiting the debate to two hours, without specifying how it shall be divided?

Mr. COBB. I object.

Mr. HATCH. Then I move that the committee do now rise.

I will say before that motion is submitted that the amendments in the order in which they have been read at the Clerk's desk make but one material change in the bill as it left the House, and that is the reduction of the tax upon oleomargarine from 5 cents to 2 cents a pound.

There is one other amendment inserted in the eighth section—the word "knowingly," which of course changes the phraseology of the section to that extent. The other two amendments simply strike out the minimum punishment and leaves it in the discretion of the court to fix the punishment, not to exceed the maximum prescribed by the statute.

Reserving the remainder of my time, I move that the committee do now rise with a view to limiting debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. HOLMAN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union having had under consideration House bill No. 8328, with Senate amendments thereto, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue, and pending that motion I move that all general debate upon the Senate amendments be limited to two hours.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend by making it one hour. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I move to amend the amendment by making it fifteen minutes.

[The Speaker here resumed the chair.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to indulge me for half a minute to state the reasons for making this motion. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Several members objected.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to know whether the motion of the gentleman includes all debate.

The SPEAKER. All general debate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And all debate under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. That can not be done under the rules of the House.

The question is upon agreeing to the amendment to the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 93, noes 58.

Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture who has charge of this matter may be permitted to make a brief statement in reference to this request for two hours, which I think will be satisfactory to the House. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the question on the demand of the gentleman from Illinois for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HISCOCK. There was a distinct understanding that there was to be a certain amount of time for debate.

Mr. HATCH. I again renew my request for unanimous consent to be permitted to make a very brief statement to the House.

Mr. STORM objected.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, Mr. DUNN, and others, demanded the regular order.

Mr. ROWELL. After an arrangement was made by which this time was to be granted for debate [cries of "Regular order!"] it ought not to be cut off.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska, and Mr. DUNHAM were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 113, noes 72.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The motion of Mr. HATCH as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I now renew the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate on the Senate amendments to the bill under consideration is limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I yield the fifteen minutes allotted by the House for general debate on the Senate amendment to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] with the request that he will yield five minutes of that time to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON]. I hope he will give him as much time as he can spare.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, there was an arrangement entered into between the Committee on Agriculture, or the chairman representing that committee, and myself this morning by which one hour and a half was to be given to the opponents of this bill, the time to be under my control. The House has seen fit to refuse to carry out the agreement of the committee. Of course that action of the House must be accepted.

It was my intention to have presented to the House some statements that have been made by experts and chemists in regard to the composition of oleomargarine, from what it is made, and as to whether it is injurious, proving beyond a question that it is not injurious in any manner to the public health. But inasmuch as I have not been given the time I shall ask consent of the House to extend my remarks in order to embrace fully this expert testimony.

I agree to the request of the chairman of the committee and will yield five minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia, and will thank the Chair to notify me when I have but five minutes remaining.

I understand that nothing that can be said at this time will have any effect on the result of this vote. Friends of the cow are here in force, determined to enact this unprecedented and dangerous legislation. Nothing can now be said that can induce a change of plan or in any way alter the intention to pass this bill, not that the members of this House fully believe it fair to strike against an established industry, but because it is thought to be a good political move and will bring about a favorable result in the fall elections.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I desire to ask the gentleman——

Mr. DUNHAM. I yield to no interruption.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Does that not apply to yourself as much as to any man on our side?

Mr. DUNHAM. I have no time to answer questions. If time is given me I would be willing to stand here all the afternoon and allow you all the interruptions you wished.

Mr. MILLIKEN. You should not talk uncivilly.

Mr. GALLINGER. You should not make false charges.

Mr. DUNHAM. I make no false charges. I say the object of this bill is not revenue, but to increase the price of a certain article to benefit a particular class of citizens, and members representing dairy constituencies desirous of their own or their party success dare not vote against it.

A MEMBER. What are your motives?

Mr. DUNHAM. My motives are to oppose the bill for two reasons: First, it is wrong in principle; second, the Congress of the United States is engaged in the business of striking at an industry that is more largely represented in my district than in any other in this country, and I am here to defend the interests of my constituents.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Have not the other members of the House the right to do the same thing?

Mr. DUNHAM. You seek to benefit your people by injuring or attempting to ruin a portion of mine. You propose to destroy a legitimate commercial article because it comes in competition with another. The whole power of the United States Government is to be invoked to help defy commercial laws, to pull down established industries. Republicans, believers in protection favoring American citizens, unite now with free-trade Democrats to destroy capital and depress labor employed in one manufacturing branch in order to revive as it is said the drooping dairy interests. Such legislation is a species of iniquity that in time will return to "plague the inventor."

Some gentlemen seem to be troubled about my remarks or they would preserve a more dignified silence. I have heard it claimed the truth should not be told at all times or that men do not always desire to hear it. That is an exploded doctrine. No statesman sitting in a legislative body should seek to bar himself against a true statement as to the intent lurking beneath the lines of any measure presented for consideration.

I think gentlemen understand my meaning. I am not speaking of any individual, but I am speaking of what I have heard outside of this Hall and what I have read in the newspapers. It has been asserted in the public prints over and over again that the object of this bill is to raise the price of butter, and men expect to benefit their political party by this action in the same way as they do by legislation on other subjects. Republicans hope to accomplish a Democratic disaster, while Democrats pray for the opposite result; perhaps both will win. The dairy men only expect to be the financial gainers by this bill; they are to reap any benefit that accrues to their product.

A MEMBER. And who eat it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Yes—and who eat it. You have not a single petition in your committee or before this House from the consumers of butter in this country asking the passage of this bill.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That is not so.

Mr. DUNHAM. You have petitions here from dairymen who ask its passage. You have no petitions from the great community at large who are not makers of butter but who are eaters of it.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Where do the petitions in favor of oleomargarine come from? The gentleman, knowing no one has any opportunity to answer him, should not make such statements.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will inform the gentleman that thousands of workingmen all over the country have petitioned against taxing oleomargarine. By the time you get through taxing oleomargarine you will then come here proposing to tax something else. The woolen manufacturers of the country will demand for their protection that everything that has cotton in it shall be taxed. The makers of cigars will demand that cigarettes shall be taxed so that nobody shall buy anything but cigars. And so all the interests of the country that think they are injured by the manufacture of something that sells on a par with their goods will come and ask for taxation on the competing goods. You say no now, but you do not know how large a fire you may kindle.

I say to you gentlemen who advocate this proposition because you expect to gain votes in the country, there is a great city vote and a great labor vote that is liable to go the other way. I join with you in requiring that this oleomargarine shall be sold for exactly what it is. I agree with you as to that, and will join in the enactment of any law that in that respect will be as binding as necessity may demand. I am opposed to having any man deceived. But your proposition is to overrun the houses in my district, for instance, with a lot of internal-revenue officers to annoy and put to trouble the manufacturers of this product, and you propose to assess them for the privilege of manufacturing it. You propose to charge the wholesale dealer three times as much as is charged for any other kind of license under the internal-revenue laws. You propose to assess the retail dealer, who perhaps does not sell over a hundred dollars' worth of this article in the year, $48 a year for the privilege of trying to make a little profit.

The tax goes on to the product. And why is this proposition made? Simply, as has been stated, to begin a system of trying to blot the product out of existence. If I were allowed to state here what I have heard in another branch of Congress, I think I could convince every man present that the principal object of this bill is to tax this product out of existence and to raise the price of butter; but I am not permitted to state this or to read the statement, and therefore I can not lay it before the House.

I have no expectation that any gentleman here will vote differently from the way in which he has started out in this campaign. This is a campaign made out of a farmers' panic. This is a campaign made not in response to the honest sentiments of the people, but because the people have been made to believe that they are being injured by the sale of oleomargarine.

As a part of my remarks I publish the following statements, being extracts from the testimony taken before the Senate Committee on Agriculture. This testimony bears upon and proves conclusively that oleomargarine is a wholesome food product.

[Statement of Professor Henry Morton, of the Stevens Institute of Technology, Hoboken, N. J.]

I appear at the request of Mr. Coudert to state facts within my own knowledge chiefly in regard to this matter, and it may not be improper for me to state, in the first place, how it comes that I should know about it.

Senator GEORGE. That is not material, if you will just tell the facts.

Professor MORTON. The subject is one which has been of great interest to all scientific men from the time of the original discovery by Mége, which was made, as you are aware, during the siege of Paris. Many persons have been interested in it and have followed it up. I have been frequently called upon to examine processes and superintend operations where modifications in the manufacture have been suggested, and so on, and specimens have been brought to me as a chemist to examine from time to time microscopically and chemically.

When the substance was first introduced, the question was raised as to whether it could be distinguished from butter by any test, and I was led in that way to investigate the subject, and to examine as to all the properties which it exhibited, as well as to compare different samples of it, and I have in my experiments in this line examined great numbers of specimens of oleomargarine prepared as butter, and of oleomargarine oil for the preparation of butter, from all parts of the country, and also have visited factories very frequently and spent long periods there. I have remained as long as a week in one of these factories continuously, sometimes spending the night as well as the day there in order to watch the process completely and see the operation from beginning to end—to see what was put in and what was not, and to observe what was done and what was not done.

In the course of these examinations I have reached the conclusion, founded on these observations, that the material is of necessity a pure one, and can not possibly be unwholesome, and is, in fact, in that sense, thoroughly desirable and safe article of food. I will express as briefly as I can my reasons for this opinion, and state the facts on which they are founded.

In the first place I have found, as a matter of observation, that fat which is to be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine, if it is in the slightest degree tainted before the manufacture begins, if it is not strictly fresh, if it is not taken almost directly from the slaughtered animal, if it is allowed to stand in a barrel for a few hours in ordinary weather or in cold weather, if put in a barrel with any animal heat in it for a few hours, then an incipient change begins which, in the succeeding process, is exaggerated so that an utterly offensive material is produced which could not be used for any such purpose.

Senator GEORGE. Offensive to the smell and taste?

Professor MORTON. Offensive both to the smell and taste, so much so that no one could eat it or endure it; it is very disagreeable. The only way to avoid that is to use extreme care in the collection and preparation of the material, and in the subsequent processes, after it has been cleaned and washed, by melting it carefully and then allowing it to settle and straining it so that all the animal fiber of every sort is removed. It is next submitted to a treatment by which the stearine is removed, and what is left is almost identically the same in composition as butter made from milk and cream.

Now, if in that process, after the melting has been gone through with, the slightest portion, even a microscopic portion, of the animal tissue, of the fibrous tissue, or anything else but the pure fat is left in the material in the oil, then in this process of crystallizing by which the stearine is removed (which has to be done at a temperature of about 80°), the result will be that the material will become putrid and utterly offensive. I have seen that done over and over again where there has been a little carelessness in the filtering or cleaning, or want of proper treatment where the fat has not been heated hot enough during the rendering, so that there may be a little fiber left in. Under these circumstances, during this process of crystallizing, a fermentation takes place which is very offensive, almost unendurable, and they have to throw the entire mass into the tanks used for the refuse to make tallow of, as it would not be food fit for use at all.

Senator GEORGE. Is there no way of counteracting this offensive condition?

Professor MORTON. No way whatever, except to take fat and purify it in a manner that would make it a very expensive process.

Senator GEORGE. Can it not be clarified?

Professor MORTON. No, sir; there is no way of doing that.

The CHAIRMAN. Would putrefaction take place if the material was kept at a temperature of 45 degrees, the usual temperature for keeping butter?

Professor MORTON. It will not take place after the butter is manufactured. That putrefaction of necessity takes place during the manufacture. One of these processes involves the keeping of the material for ten or twelve hours at a temperature favorable for fermentation or putrefaction if there is anything in it to putrefy. If it has gone so far as that without injury, it is because there is nothing in it capable of establishing putrefaction.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you never found any of these tissues in oleomargarine after it was manufactured, under the microscope?

Professor MORTON. Never. This statement I make is important as to the effect of the process; that is, the putrefying effect which would result from a neglect to thoroughly separate the fatty matter from the fiber. This is important because it bears upon the question which has been raised as to whether the germs of disease could in any way be carried from the animal into the product. These germs, in the first place, have never been found. There is no scientific testimony anywhere that they have ever been found in the fat of animals. They are always found in the muscles and tissues, but never in the fat.

Senator GEORGE. Then the germs of disease from diseased cattle are never found in fatty substances?

Professor MORTON. No, sir.

* * * * * * *

Senator BLAIR. Is stearine an unhealthy substance that you wish to get rid of it?

Professor MORTON. It is not unhealthy except in this sense——

Senator BLAIR. I mean in the proportion in which it is found is it unhealthy?

Professor MORTON. It would be less digestible undoubtedly. It would be the difference between the digestibility of butter or a fat like butter and mutton fat. As it exists in the mutton fat, there being an excess of stearine, the fat is harder when it enters the stomach, and is not broken up so rapidly and absorbed by the digestive organs. In that sense it is less digestible, just as one kind of bread would be less wholesome than another because not so digestible. Very light bread would be more digestible than bread not so light. There would be that difference. A person with a delicate stomach might be able to eat beef and beef fat and yet not be able to eat mutton and mutton fat.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. What would you say then to a sample of oleomargarine which was still sweet, but which under the microscope did show fibrous material?

Professor MORTON. I should like to know a good deal about its origin; what its history was. Of course, if it was some one's object to make such a thing, there would be no trouble in making such a sample. In other words, all you have to do is to make good oleomargarine and then take a little fat with scrap in it and stir it up together.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it be possible to make in any oleomargarine factory, if they were not extremely careful but anxious to make a large profit by selling it and working carelessly, an unfit article for food?

Professor MORTON. It would never be done but once. They would make one such large product and send it out, but it would all be sent back to them. They would lose their money, and they would not do it again.

The CHAIRMAN. If it was sold to consumers it would not be sent back to the oleomargarine factory, but would be pronounced bad butter.

Professor MORTON. It would be recognized at once, because the stuff would be detected immediately.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any knowledge as to the percentage of lard now used in the manufacture of oleomargarine in comparison with the amount of oleo used?

Professor MORTON. I do not now recall it. I have heard, but I have forgotten. I think it is something like 20 per cent. Some such proportions as that is frequently added, although that differs with the season of the year; in winter they need more than they do in summer.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you examined any of the oleomargarine factories lately where they use lard at all?

Professor MORTON. Yes; within a few weeks I have visited two of them in New York.

The CHAIRMAN. Then they were using lard mixed with fat?

Professor MORTON. Yes; they were using pure lard.

Senator GEORGE. What about the use of cotton-seed oil?

Professor MORTON. Cotton-seed oil has been used for the same purpose—that is to say, where the oleomargarine oil, as I have described it, has not had as much of its stearine removed from it as is required to bring it to the consistency of butter, then the same result can be obtained by adding more olein, more oil. Cotton-seed oil is like olive oil, almost pure olein. There would be another way of doing this thing. You might take the pure rendered fat, and instead of getting rid of the stearine, if you had some other material which would add the palmatin and olein by themselves, you might thus bring it to the same consistency or proportion by adding this instead of removing the stearine. The process, as I have said, is not entirely under control as to the amount of stearine to be removed. But when not enough is removed you can get the required consistency by adding olein or cotton-seed oil.

The CHAIRMAN. In the factories you have examined, do they use much cotton-seed oil?

Professor MORTON. They were not using it at either of the factories I examined. At one of them they were using all the winter what is known as benne oil or oil of sesame. Sesame is a grain very well known in the East. You may remember in the Arabian Nights in the story of the forty thieves, where the robbers opened the cave by saying "Open sesame." It is the name of a grain, a grain which is made into bread and eaten in that way, and by pressure there can be extracted from it an oil which is largely used in that region for cooking, and also as a salad oil. It is nearly pure olein, something like olive oil and cotton-seed oil.

The CHAIRMAN. You have stated that the pure fats of animals do not contain, or that it never had been discovered that they contain, germs of disease. Would it not be possible that the tissues surrounding the fats of these animals could contain germs of disease?

Professor MORTON. They have never been found in the fats—that is a scientific fact. There is not an instance recorded or a reliable statement made of their having been found in the fats, although there is abundant evidence of their being found in the muscles or muscular tissues.

The CHAIRMAN. I speak simply of the tissues that surround the fat; as to the oils I understood your statement.

Professor MORTON. No, sir; they have not been discovered.

The CHAIRMAN. Are you prepared to make the statement that they could not be found there?

Professor MORTON. They never have been in the history of science. With all these microscopical examinations, nobody has been found to make the statement. No one having the slightest show of authority has ever recorded the fact. Such things may have been stated in the newspapers.

* * * * * * *

Senator JONES. In how many factories have you ever seen this substance prepared?

Professor MORTON. In about six factories.

Senator JONES. Is the plant and machinery of this process expensive?

Professor MORTON. It is rather expensive.

Senator JONES. Can it be manufactured in a small way and by small establishments profitably?

Professor MORTON. Not with profit. It must be done, I should say, on a fairly large scale to be profitable.

Senator JONES. Have you any idea how many establishments of this kind there are in New York and Philadelphia, for instance?

Professor MORTON. I have only heard of one in Philadelphia, and in New York, at present, I only know of four.

Senator JONES. In those which you have examined are there any tricks of the trade resorted to—if I may use a vulgar expression—by which a cheaper product is made which is more deleterious or objectionable than a product honestly made?

Professor MORTON. None whatever. There is very little temptation to do such a thing. In other words, anything that will cheapen the product spoils it. You can only make a good product. Any attempt to use fat that is really old and stale is unprofitable. An ounce of stale fat put into a ton of good fresh fat will spoil the whole thing before the process is completed. So that so far from there being any temptation to use anything impure, the object is to use the very best material, in order to make a good salable product.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you think the lard is used because it is cheaper than beef fat?

Professor MORTON. No, sir; I think the motive is to improve the structure.

The CHAIRMAN. What would you say of oleomargarine which contained 90 per cent. of lard and 10 per cent. of oleomargarine?

Professor MORTON. I should say it was a very poor article. Of course, it may happen that some man may make a foolish experiment, thinking he is going to make it cheaper, but he will find out that he has cheated himself. He could not make a good article that he could sell twice to the same customer, unless he is honest and cleanly in the manufacture.

Senator JONES. We have been told about the vile compounds that are used in making the oleo—the fat of cats and dogs and animals which died of disease.

Professor MORTON. To any one who knows about it these stories are simply absurd. It is utterly impossible to do any such thing. As I have said, if the animal has been dead a short time the fat can not be used. For instance, you could not use fat from the meat which is hung up and exposed for sale in market for the purpose of making oleomargarine. Although such meat is not hurt for ordinary use, and can be cooked and eaten, the fat of it would be utterly ruined for the purpose of making oleomargarine. The exposure of the meat in the market would give the product a strong tallowy odor, different from a putrid one, but the moment you tasted it you would say that it was not butter. No one would eat it. It would not have a butter taste. The very same taste in beef, to which we are accustomed, would be considered offensive if observed in butter. The very same flavor that I have defined as tallowy does not offend us at all in connection with cooked meat, because we are used to it in that connection.

But if you try this experiment—if you take from a piece of beef you are eating a piece of the fat and chop it up fine and mix it with butter which you have on your table, and taste it, you would say it was very bad butter. It tastes good enough as beef fat, because you are accustomed to it in that way, but you object to that flavor in butter. It is just the same way with cheese. If you know you are eating a piece of Swiss cheese with its peculiar odor, your sense is not offended. But if a piece of that cheese gets on the side of the table or on your coat, and you smell it, you think there is something very nasty about it.

Senator JONES. Then you think that animals which have died a natural death could not be used in this way, because a putrefaction would be produced in the manufacture?

Professor MORTON. Yes, a change would be produced which would render the product tallow and not oleomargarine.

Senator JONES. That you say would be unavoidable?

Professor MORTON. It would be unavoidable. It could not be helped.

Senator JONES. You do not think you could make good oleomargarine out of a dead cat or dog?

Professor MORTON. I will stake my reputation on that—that it could not be done, because I have tried an analogous experiment to that very thing. I have taken fat which was put in a barrel and left over night, and in melting it down I found that the product was perfectly offensive and could not be used for one moment.

* * * * * * *

Senator GEORGE. I have been requested to ask several questions by some gentlemen present. You have probably gone all over this subject, and therefore you can answer these questions without making much explanation. I am requested to ask you first to state your age, residence, and occupation.

Professor MORTON. I am forty-nine years of age; I reside in Hoboken, N. J., and am president of the Stevens Institute of Technology in Hoboken, an institute of mechanical engineering.

Senator GEORGE. What attention have you given to the study of chemistry, and for how long a time?

Professor MORTON. For over twenty-five years it has been my particular life study.

Senator GEORGE. What knowledge have you regarding the manufacture of oleomargarine and relative substitutes for butter, as carried on in a commercial scale in this country?

Professor MORTON. From the time the process was first invented and the product first came to this country I was informed about it, and have been called upon to examine various patents and processes continuously from year to year. Hardly a year has passed where something has not come to me to be examined and reported upon in connection with that subject.

Senator GEORGE. What is your opinion in regard to this material as a wholesome article of food?

Professor MORTON. I consider it perfectly wholesome. I eat it myself without hesitation and have it often in my house.

Senator GEORGE. Is it true that this product can be or is made of improper substances or injurious substances, and that chemicals are used in its manufacture? Perhaps you have already answered that.

Professor MORTON. It is not true. It is utterly impossible to make it of tainted materials, and no chemicals are used in its manufacture—that is, nothing in the usual meaning of that term, such as violent corrosives or other injurious materials. Salt, which is in one sense a chemical substance, is used.

Senator GEORGE. Has any injurious substance been found in any specimen of oleomargarine by yourself or chemists of standing and repute, to your knowledge?

Professor MORTON. None whatever; there is no evidence of any such thing.

Senator GEORGE. Is it in your opinion probable or even possible under the normal conditions of manufacture, that any germs of disease could be introduced into oleomargarine?

Professor MORTON. I do not believe it is at all possible or probable.

Senator GEORGE. What are the comparative risks of the introduction of disease germs into oleomargarine and pure butter?

Professor MORTON. They are considerably greater in pure butter. It is easier to get germs into milk, and milk is never heated in the making of butter, so that nothing is done to protect it. The risk of introducing the germs of consumption from cows suffering with that disease would be far greater in the manufacture of butter than in the manufacture of oleomargarine.

Senator GIBSON. What is the point of temperature to which oleomargine is raised in the process of manufacture?

Professor MORTON. The individual particles of it come very nearly to the boiling point of water; just to a good cooking temperature.

Senator GIBSON. Would that destroy the germs necessarily?

Professor MORTON. It would destroy them under almost all circumstances. There are cases, but very rare ones, indeed, in which germs will resist very high temperature, and in such cases they would not be destroyed by ordinary cooking.

Senator GEORGE. What is your opinion of the relative digestibility of oleomargarine and butter?

Professor MORTON. I think they are substantially identical. If there is any difference it is only the difference, as I said before, between one variety of meat and another.

[Statement of Professor Charles F. Chandler, of Columbia College, New York.]

I would not, of course, wish to take up the time of the committee by repeating anything that Dr. Morton has said, but I will say at the outset that I agree with Dr. Morton in every statement that he has made.

Senator GEORGE. You were present and heard his statement to the committee?

Professor CHANDLER. Yes, sir; I heard his statement which he has just concluded. I have been called upon officially on three different occasions to investigate this subject. I was first called upon as president of the board of health of New York city, by the State senate of New York, to carefully investigate it, and I prepared a report which was approved by my colleagues of the health department and forwarded to Albany. Afterward, in 1880, I was called upon by the Committee on Manufactures of the House of Representatives, and at that time I prepared a report with the approval of my colleagues of the health department, and I will leave a copy of that report with the committee.

Senator GEORGE. You indorse the statements therein made?

Professor CHANDLER. Yes, sir; I indorse them at the present time. I have not a copy of the first report sent to the New York State senate, but it is essentially the same. I was afterward called upon by the New York board of aldermen and made a report which was approved by the board of health and which was printed in the City Record, of which this is a copy.

Senator GEORGE. You reaffirm that statement now?

Professor CHANDLER. I do; yes, sir. In all of these reports I have taken the ground that this is a new process for making an old article, and that article is butter. This is a new process for making butter. It is made of materials which are in every respect wholesome and proper articles of food, whether it be made solely from the oleomargarine extracted from beef fat, or whether it has added to it more or less leaf-lard properly prepared, or more or less sesame oil or cotton-seed oil, and whether it be or not colored with annatto or the other coloring matters used. I take the ground that there is nothing in any one of these materials in any sense unwholesome, and nothing in any one of them which makes it inferior as an article of food to dairy butter.

I regard the discovery of Mége-Mouries, of a process by which beef fat and hog fat can be extracted from adipose tissue and converted into a wholesome article of food free from any disagreeable taste or odor, as one of the most important discoveries made in this century, a discovery by which it is possible to make a perfectly pure and satisfactory, as well as a wholesome, article of food at a reasonable price. I have visited various factories where this article is manufactured, from the time the industry began down to date. I am perfectly familiar with the materials employed and the different processes, and know there is nothing whatever used either in material or process which is unwholesome or in any way deleterious to the public health.

Senator GEORGE. Or which would be disgusting if known?

Professor CHANDLER. Precisely. On the contrary, the processes by which this kind of butter is manufactured are much more cleanly than the processes by which dairy butter is manufactured. The beef fat or leaf lard is taken out of the animals there, put into cold water, and thoroughly washed and cleansed.

Senator PLUMB. Is it necessary that that should be done?

Professor CHANDLER. It is necessary. It is impossible to make an article that would sell unless this is done. In order to remove and cool the fat at once it is necessary that it should be washed, and the fat is converted into butter in both stages without being handled in any way. Then it is worked up and melted in vessels in jacketed kettles, and therefore it is much more cleanly, because never handled by human beings—all the work is accomplished by machinery. Whereas dairy butter is manufactured in small quantities without—well, it will hardly be worth while to say anything which will tend to disgust persons with dairy butter, and I will refrain from stating what everybody must know, that in some dairies at least cleanliness is not strictly observed. In the majority of the dairies the butter is constantly handled and worked by human hands, which, to my mind, is a process of manufacture far less appetizing than the process by which the oleomargarine butter is formed.

I, of course, have not followed all these proceedings before Congress, but I have read what has been printed, and am quite aware of the scope of this investigation. We had a senate investigation in New York city for the purpose of discussing fully the subject of artificial butter. The person who managed that investigation came and consulted me about it, but very carefully refrained from calling me as a witness, and the evidence taken before that commission is too ridiculous ever to have been printed by so august a body as the senate of the State of New York. The statements that were made there were utterly ridiculous. Stories with regard to offensive processes and offensive materials used in preparing food were rehearsed, and the story of the use of nitric acid was repeated, as well as the old story that the workmen employed in these factories lost their toe-nails in consequence of the acid which was used in working the fat, and many things of that kind. I never could understand how the State senators of New York could permit such testimony to go on record and be printed. But it was done, and that kind of evidence has been manufactured all over the country with the view of disgusting the public with this kind of butter. Artificial butter has never had a fair opportunity to be presented to the citizens of this country, and this legislation with regard to it recalls to my mind legislation which is found in the records of the past.

Some of you remember, I presume, that before the discovery of the passage around the Cape of Good Hope to India the only dye-stuff cultivated to any extent in England was woad, an inferior dye which our ancestors employed for dyeing their products. When the trade with Bengal sprang up indigo was brought to England, and immediately there was a great hue and cry made against indigo. It was said it was going to ruin the woad farmer of England, and they called it devil's dirt—Teufeldrockh was the name in German—and it was made a capital crime in England, France, and Germany for anybody to be caught with indigo on his premises. It was not suggested that it should be colored blue, because that was its natural color and it was not necessary.

Soon after logwood was discovered in Honduras, and when it was attemped to introduce it into England as a dye laws were passed against it. We have had that kind of legislation always. It is not many years since a petition was presented to Parliament in England protesting against the use of hops in beer, on the ground that it would destroy the digestion of the English people. There was a similar attempt at legislation in regard to the burning of soft coal. They had used only wood and charcoal in England, and when it was proposed to take coal out of the ground and bring it to London they said it would ruin the industry of the people who cut wood in the forests to make charcoal; that it was unhealthy and would make a smoke that would get into the lungs of the knights who came from the country to Parliament to sit and legislate for the people.

With regard to the statements concerning the unwholesome character of these materials, I have paid particular attention to the subject, and feel competent to speak upon it.

Senator GEORGE. Are you a doctor of medicine?

Professor CHANDLER. I am an M. D., but I am not a practitioner of medicine. I have been a professor in a medical college for twenty years, and have made a special study of this subject of germs—not recently, but I began a dozen years ago. I have a laboratory where I conduct my experiments by the use of the microscope, and I am familiar with all the literature on the subject of any value, and I do not hesitate to say that there is nothing whatever in the assertion that there is any danger of germs in this artificial butter. There is no foundation of fact at all for those statements. It is a bugbear which is conjured up in order to disgust people on the subject of beef fat.

* * * * * * *

[Statement of Professor James F. Babcock, of Boston, Mass.]

I am a chemist by profession. At present I occupy a position which our statutes require all mayors of cities to fill by appointment, namely, that which is called with us in Boston inspector of milk. By our statntes, inspectors of milk are also charged with the enforcement of the laws in regard to butter and some other food products.

* * * * * * *

It has been within my knowledge, and is within my knowledge at the present time, that there are thousands of persons in the city of Boston who buy butterine, knowing perfectly well what they are buying—who call for butterine, who pay the price of butterine, and who receive it in a paper marked as the statute requires of them in those cases. The marking, so far as those persons are concerned, is unnecessary, because they know what they are buying. But the dealer must mark it whether the person knows it or not. Not only are these goods marked upon the tubs and marked upon the papers provided for the retail sales, but I know of a great many dealers in Boston who in addition to what the law requires mark their goods by hanging a large sign directly over the tub or the ice-chest or refrigerator where the goods are kept.

I have in mind at the present time a new store which has only been started within a couple of weeks at the south end in Boston, fitted up, I had almost said with elegance, a store for selling dairy products. They have a refrigerator with some nine or ten compartments in it, with glass doors, and nine of these contain butter and one of them contains butterine. The butterine is marked by a sign hanging over that place with letters I should say 3 inches long; the price of it is marked—15 or 16 cents, the retail price—and the prices of all this butter, ranging from 18, 19, and 20 cents up to 30 and 35 cents per pound at this season of the year, are also indicated.

You will find in the same way, in the market located in that section of the city, where the patronage is chiefly from poor people, that these goods are exposed for sale and the name is marked upon the goods. A gentleman in South Boston, a very respectable grocer, whose name I could give to the committee if necessary, said to me only last Saturday, speaking of these goods—I will say that he had two tubs of butter and one tub of butterine, and his butterine and papers were marked—he was speaking to me of the sale of these goods to poor people. He said that a regular customer of his had said to him only a few days before that the butterine which he had bought during the winter for 15 cents a pound had enabled him to give his boy butter to eat; he called it butter, but butterine is what he bought.

These goods are spoken of in that general way as butter, although they are substitutes for butter. This man said that the sale of butterine at 15 cents a pound had enabled his boy to have butter during the winter; otherwise he would have had to go without. He said his boy had never eaten any butter in his life, and the man spoke of the goods as being something which he regarded it a privilege to buy. I say it can not be disputed that in the city of Boston, and in some of our large manufacturing cities in Massachusetts, such as Fall River, Lawrence, and Lowell, there are thousands of pounds of oleomargarine and butterine, imitation butter, sold to people who know perfectly well what they are buying, who call for it, and who could not be cheated in regard to it; they know what it is worth.

Senator JONES. Do they buy it for themselves and their families, or to feed boarders on?

Professor BABCOCK. They buy it for themselves and their families; they do not keep boarders. A poor man with a family of four or five has all the boarders he can take care of. It is undoubtedly sold to and bought by boarding-house keepers, saloon and restaurant keepers, and it is certainly true that they do not put any mark upon it when they put it on their tables. There is a large sale in that direction. But the people who buy it for their own consumption are very numerous and know very well what they are buying.

* * * * * * *

Senator JONES. Has it been any part of your duty to determine whether these substitutes for butter are injurious to health or not?

Professor BABCOCK. It has not been a part of my duty to determine that.

Senator JONES. Have you investigated that matter?

Professor BABCOCK. I have.

Senator JONES. What are your conclusions on that subject?

Professor BABCOCK. My conclusions are that what is perfectly good on the side of a beefsteak is perfectly good when it is melted out and mixed with salt and milk. My conclusions are, in general, that oleomargarine is a perfectly wholesome food in every sense of the word. There are some points in relation to it in which it is superior to butter, I refer more especially to its keeping qualities. You take an oleomargarine print and put it on this table and leave it here for three months alongside of butter, and the oleomargarine will remain sweet while the butter will not.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that any evidence that it is better food?

Professor BABCOCK. It is no evidence that it is better food, but it is evidence that the fat from which it is prepared is freer from foreign substances.

The CHAIRMAN. Would it not equally be evidence that it is not as easily digested as butter if it will last that length of time? Salt meat will keep longer than fresh meat.

Professor BABCOCK. Certainly; but it is perfectly healthful, nevertheless. I presume it must be admitted as a physiological fact, at least to be debatable, that oleomargarine is slightly less digestible than butter. But how much less digestible? It is not as if oleomargarine required five hours to digest and butter required only a half an hour or an hour. The figures are expressed in much closer relations than that. I will not undertake to give them, but the committee can find them in the books or in the investigations of those who have considered the matter. It takes three and a half hours in one case and four hours in the other case, or something of that kind. Practically there is not any difference, and as far as food value is concerned, I do not think the physiologists have ever differed in the opinion that oleomargarine has a higher food value than butter. I mean by that that the amount of heat-producing qualities in oleomargarine is greater theoretically than in butter, but the relation still is very close; one is about the same as the other.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, during the pendency of this bill before the House I fought it at every stage. Since it has gone to the Senate it has been amended and made much less obnoxious than it was before, but it is still so obnoxious that I can not vote for it. I have already stated that I oppose this bill because it is contrary to every theory of politics I have ever entertained. It is contrary to every platform that has ever been adopted by the Democratic party since the Democratic party was formed in these United States. It is contrary to every vote that a Democrat has given, in accordance with his party platform, in this House. It is contrary to the promises which the Democracy have made to the people, and it is a direct abandonment and sale of their party to a particular interest here, for what reasons I will not undertake to state now, because I could not make the statement in parliamentary terms. Gentlemen say they are voting for this as a revenue measure, yet there is not a Democrat in this House who is voting for this bill who has not declared that we are collecting too much revenue now and that it ought to be reduced. Still those gentlemen come here and stultify themselves and betray their party by voting against what have been the cardinal doctrines of the Democratic party from its inception down to the present time.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I would be very glad to do so, but my time is limited. But, Mr. Chairman, they undertake to say now that because the tax has been reduced in the Senate from 5 cents to 2 cents that is relief which ought to make the bill acceptable. Why, sir, there can not be a pound of oleomargarine sold in any small town in the United States under this charge of $48 for a license.

There is scarcely a small town outside of the great grass-growing regions that supplies butter enough for its people throughout the year. In my own district there are months when there can not be a pound of butter purchased, and yet no merchant in a small town may sell a pound of this oleomargarine without paying a special license tax of $48 per annum.

Gentlemen know that the small dealers will not and can not take out a license for the sale of this article at such cost. Gentlemen know that that provision is in effect an absolute denial of both butter and a substitute for butter to many poor people throughout the country. Gentlemen make a mistake when they say that the farmers are for this bill. I have just returned from my district. I went into the greatest agricultural county in that district, the county where they have more cows and make more butter than in any other, and where they had in one grange adopted a resolution condemning me for my vote on this bill. I made them a speech and explained this bill to them, told them what it was, and then asked them, as I did the people in six other counties, if the farmers wanted any such bill as that, and with a unanimous voice they declared that they had not understood it, that they had been misled about it.

Mr. Chairman, this bill professes to be in favor of the farmer. Gentlemen have antagonized and probably defeated the consideration of the great interstate-commerce bill, which would have cheapened freight charges to every farmer, to every mechanic, and to every business man in this land. They have antagonized the naval bill, and probably defeated it, when the country is demanding protection and defense and workingmen throughout the land are demanding employment. They have defeated every tariff and every revenue bill that has been put upon the Calendar. They have defeated or set aside nearly every interest represented in bills pending before this House, simply in order that these dairymen, whom I have before described as a rascally set living around the cities defrauding the people, should monopolize the butter or the grease trade of the land.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate upon this bill is concluded. The Clerk will report the first amendment to the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be read, and that the vote upon recommending concurrence in the amendments of the Senate be taken in gross.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I now move concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that the House concur in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Pending that I move to concur in the amendments of the Senate with the amendment which I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. A motion to concur with an amendment takes precedence of a motion simply to concur. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That after the passage of this act the tax on spirits distilled from apples, peaches, and other fruits shall be abolished: Provided, That no person or persons shall be allowed to manufacture or distill spirits partly from fruits and partly from grain without the payment of the full tax required by law upon the making or manufacture of liquors distilled from grain; and any person violating the provisions of this section shall be fined not more than $500, and imprisoned not more than one year, at the discretion of the court; and the distillery and the apparatus therein, at which such spirits were distilled, shall be forfeited.

SEC. 2. That on all original and unbroken hogsheads, barrels, or kegs of spirits held by manufacturers or dealers at the time such abolition shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be allowed a drawback or rebate of the full amount of the said tax; but the same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been ascertained or presented within sixty days following the date of the repeal. It shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to adopt such rules and regulations, and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms, as may be necessary to carry this section into effect.

SEC. 3. That there shall be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, so much money as shall be necessary to repay the rebate provided for under the preceding section of this act.

SEC. 4. That no farmer or planter shall be required to pay a special tax for selling leaf-tobacco of his own production, or leaf-tobacco received as rent from tenants who have produced the same on his land; and any farmer or planter may sell leaf-tobacco of his own production, or leaf-tobacco produced on land belonging to him and received as rent from tenants who raised it, to persons other than those who have paid a special tax as dealers in leaf-tobacco, or as manufacturers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, or to persons purchasing leaf-tobacco for export.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I make the point of order that this amendment, to be admissible, should be in the form of an amendment to the amendments of the Senate; but it is an amendment to the text of the bill, which is not now before us for consideration. In addition to that, it is not germane.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] is not germane to the Senate amendments.

Mr. BAYNE. I make the further point that the proposed amendment is the substance of a pending bill, and therefore not admissible.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. In reply to the point last raised, I will say that this amendment is identical with no bill now pending in the House. Besides, as I am informed, the rule under which such a point could be made has been repealed.

Now, the bill before the House, as amended by the Senate, to levy a tax of 2 cents a pound on butterine and oleomargarine, is a bill raising revenue; and the tax is an internal-revenue tax. The amendment which I offer also affects the internal revenue. The only difference is that the pending bill proposes to impose internal-revenue taxation on a certain article, while my proposition is to take off the internal-revenue tax from spirits distilled from fruit, and to allow farmers to sell their tobacco to whomsoever they please. As gentlemen have stated that this oleomargarine bill is entirely in the interest of the farmers, I will say that the two items embraced in my amendment are also entirely in their interest. The amendment will enable our farmers to realize an income from the fruit of their orchards, now allowed to be wasted and lost, and that, too, in a section of country not yet very populous and rich. It also allows them to sell their leaf-tobacco to whomsoever they please. The justice of this provision is evident to every one. There will be no loss of revenue to the Government, as the tax on brandy for 1885 is $1,321,897.58, and the oleomargarine bill, with the rate of 2 cents per pound, will yield a revenue of about $2,000,000. I contend, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is in order and should be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. When this bill was under consideration in the first instance, in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the Chair held that an amendment similar to the one now offered was in order. But the House passed the bill and sent it to the Senate without any such amendment; and the Senate has concurred in all the portions of the bill except the items indicated by the Senate amendments. Therefore the portions of the bill to which the gentleman's amendment would apply are not now subject to further amendment, they having been agreed to by both Houses. In the opinion of the Chair no amendment is now in order except one that is germane to the amendments of the Senate. Those amendments may be agreed to with an amendment, but the amendment must be germane. The Chair holds that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina is not germane to the Senate amendments. It is therefore out of order on the ground raised by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] as well as that raised by the gentlman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON].

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. As the Senate rejected the proposed tax of 5 cents per pound, and fixed a tax of 2 cents, would not this proposition be germane to that amendment of the Senate?

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment relates simply to the rate of tax on oleomargarine. There is nothing in the bill or in any amendment of the Senate in regard to taxation upon distilled spirits. Therefore the Chair holds the amendment is not germane.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. If the bill were now pending as it was originally in the House, and this amendment should be offered to that clause imposing a tax of 5 cents a pound, would not the amendment be germane?

The CHAIRMAN. If the bill were now pending in the first instance the amendment would be in order.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Then, as the only difference in that respect is that the tax has been fixed at 2 cents instead of 5 cents, why is not the amendment in order now?

Mr. HATCH. It is not germane to the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment can be entertained now except one which is germane to the amendments of the Senate; and those amendments relate entirely to the tax upon oleomargarine. The Chair rules that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. WOLFORD. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I want to know whether I understood the decision of the Chair to be that gentlemen have not the right to pour whisky and brandy upon their butter? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to the manufacture, sale, or offer for sale, of any substance known as oleomargarine, which shall be shown before the same is sold or offered for sale, to the satisfaction of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under such rules and regulations as he may adopt, to be as wholesome as butter as an article of food, and that it is sold and offered for sale as oleomargarine, the same to be shown by the marks and brands thereon as provided in this act: And provided, further, That there shall be no fraud either in its manufacture, sale, or offer for sale. Any manufacturer, wholesale or retail dealer, or other person who shall knowingly manufacture, sell, or offer for sale, any such oleomargarine as butter, or without the same being put in packages plainly marked and branded as in this act provided, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the Senate amendments; and in addition that it has already had consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union when the House bill was up in the first instance.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. In answer to the second point raised by my colleague from Missouri I did offer an amendment in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union similar to this, but it was not this amendment. In the amendment offered in the Committee of the Whole it was simply this substance was wholesome, but in this amendment it must be shown to be as wholesome as butter. [Laughter.] It is to place it entirely before the people of the country whether it is for something as wholesome as butter or not.

As to the other question, it does seem to me the amendment is germane to the Senate amendments fixing the tax on the substance known as oleomargarine. I do not wish further to discuss the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the amendment is not germane to the Senate amendments, and therefore sustains the point of order and rules the amendment out.

Mr. HATCH. I insist now on my motion that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HATCH. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having under consideration revenue bills, had taken up the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with the recommendation that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

Mr. HATCH. On concurrence in the Senate amendments I demand the previous question.

Mr. MORRISON. What has become of the vinegar bill?

The SPEAKER. There are other bills reported from the committee which take precedence of this, and unless the House takes some action they must be disposed of.

Mr. HATCH. Let us dispose of this first.

Mr. MORRISON. Let them be taken up in their order.

MANUFACTURE OF VINEGAR.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was the bill (H. R. 9733) to regulate the manufacture of vinegar made from grain.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. HATCH. I hope that will be voted down.

Mr. MCADOO. It is an excellent bill.

The House refused to strike out the enacting clause, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand it, the vinegar bill goes back without any order to the Committee of the Whole?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so stated. It has gone back to the committee without motion.

REPEAL OF TOBACCO TAX.

The next report from the Committee of the Whole was joint resolution (H. Res. 164) repealing the taxes, special and otherwise, upon tobacco, and upon the sale and manufacture thereof.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the report of the committee to strike out the enacting clause.

The motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill, under the rule, is recommitted to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

FOREIGN GOODS FREE OF DUTY.

The next report from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 9208) to permit the entry free of duty of foreign goods for exhibition at the fourth biennial exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association.

The SPEAKER. That bill is reported from the Committee of the Whole with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. COLLINS. I move the bill be put upon it passage. [Cries of "No!"]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COLLINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The next report from the Committee of the Whole was the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

The SPEAKER. The committee recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. HATCH demanded the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurrence in the Senate amendments.

Mr. MILLS. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 60.

So (more than one-fifth having voted in the affirmative) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 175, nays 75, not voting 72; as follows:

The Clerk then recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HAMMOND with Mr. O'DONNELL, until further notice.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, with Mr. MILLIKEN, on the oleomargarine bill. Mr. MILLIKEN would vote to concur in the Senate amendments and Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, against.

Mr. LOWRY with Mr. BRUMM, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. LITTLE with Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, for this day.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York, on this vote.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. WAIT, on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1391) to provide for the erection of a public building at Springfield, Mo.;

A bill (H. R. 3379) granting a pension to George G. Early;

A bill (H. R. 3750) for the relief of Frances H. Plummer;

A bill (H. R. 4335) making an appropriation to continue the construction of the public building at Clarksburg, W. Va., and changing the limit of cost thereof;

A bill (H. R. 5051) to place the name of James Madison Pruitt on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 5179) to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States, to limit Territorial indebtedness, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7513) granting a pension to Katharina Nickert;

A bill (H. R. 8336) granting an increase of pension to Duncan Forbes; and

A bill (H. R. 9106) granting a pension to Rachael Barnes.

AMENDMENT TO THE RULES.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a privileged resolution relating to an amendment of the rules.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to present it for reference, or as a matter of privilege, to lie over for another day?

Mr. DINGLEY. I ask that it be permitted to lie over, to be called up hereafter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the House be amended as follows:

First. By adding at the end of paragraph 4 of Rule XXIII, the following: "Provided, That pending a motion that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, a motion shall be in order to designate a particular bill on the Calendar to be considered."

Second. By inserting after the words "for one hour," in paragraph 5 of Rule XXIV, the following: "unless this call shall be dispensed with by a majority vote."

Third. By inserting after the words "shall have been occupied," in paragraph 6 of Rule XXIV, the following: "or dispensed with by a majority vote."

Fourth. By inserting after the words "general appropriation bills," in the first item of the seventh division of Rule XXIV, the following: "Second, House bills on the Calendar returned from the Senate with amendments."

Fifth. By adding to the second item of the seventh division of Rule XXIV, the following: "Second, House bills on the Calendars returned from the Senate with amendments: Provided, That pending a motion that the House proceed to the consideration of business on the House Calendar, a motion shall be in order to designate a particular bill on the Calendar to be considered."

Mr. MORRISON. Let that go to the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. It is not introduced for immediate action, but under the rule to lie over for one day, and when it comes up to-morrow, or whenever it is called up, it will then be for reference or consideration, as the House may determine.

RHODE ISLAND CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged resolution.

Mr. WILLIS. I have one also which I wish to submit.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the two, and the question of privilege will be decided as between them.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the contested-election case of Charles H. Page vs. William A. Pirce, from the second Congressional district of Rhode Island, and that the House proceed to consider said case.

Resolved, That neither Charles H. Page nor William A. Pirce was duly elected a member of this House from the second Congressional district of Rhode Island, and that the seat now occupied by said William A. Pirce be declared vacant.

The SPEAKER. This presents a question of the highest privilege.

Mr. HOPKINS. I raise the question of consideration.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPOONER. My inquiry is whether the resolution should not be referred to the Committee on Elections?

The SPEAKER. Not necessarily. If the resolution is taken up for consideration by the House a motion to refer is in order; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] makes a question against consideration, and until that question is decided in favor of consideration no motion as to the disposal of the resolution is in order. The question is, Will the House consider the resolution?

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey. On that I desire the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 48 members voting therefor.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn; and pending that motion I move that when the House adjourns it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. ROWELL. And upon the latter motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 56 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas none, nays 138, not voting 184; as follows:

The Clerk commenced to read the names of members voting.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the further reading of the names.

Mr. PAYNE and others objected.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I did not hear the affirmative vote read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DUNN). There is none.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the names of members voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. MCCREARY with Mr. JOHNSON, of New York, for the rest of the day.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. WAIT, on this vote.

The SPEAKER. On this question the yeas are none, the nays are 138.

Mr. PAYNE. No quorum.

Mr. TURNER. It appears from the call of the roll that there is not a quorum present of friends of the resolution and that we have not a sufficient number of Democrats in their seats to justify any hope of reaching a result in this case to-day. I am therefore willing to forbear pressing it for the present, that other business may proceed.

The SPEAKER. But the roll-call shows no quorum on the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. The difficulty might be removed by that motion being withdrawn.

Mr. PAYNE. I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Then the question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] withdraw his resolution?

Mr. TURNER. I will let it lie over until we have a quorum.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I understand the gentleman withdraws the resolution.

Mr. TURNER. I am willing the resolution should lie over until such time as we can command a quorum.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It would be better to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to offer the resolution.

Mr. REED, of Maine. He can offer it again.

The SPEAKER. He can offer it as a privileged resolution, and if the House refuses to consider it it lies on the table as a privileged matter.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I present a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House 7480, making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

ALBERT S. WILLIS,
N. C. BLANCHARD,
THOMAS J. HENDERSON,
Managers on the part of the House.
S. J. R. McMILLAN,
O. D. CONGER,
M. W. RANSOM,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of objection the report will be accepted.

Mr. WILLIS. As is well known to the House, there were some matters embraced in the Senate amendment on which no opinion of the House had ever been asked. I now desire to say, representing a majority of the committee and a majority of the conferees, it has been thought right and proper to permit the House to vote on those matters. I therefore offer the resolution which I send to the desk and demand the previous question on it. I state that I represent a majority of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in presenting the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the House that its conferees on the river and harbor bill should insist on striking out of the Senate amendments the following item:

For the national harbor of refuge of the first class at Sandy Bay: Continuing improvement, $75,000.

Mr. WILLIS. Upon that I demand the previous question.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a point of order against that resolution?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. The river and harbor bill is now in the hands of a committee of conference, and I submit that the proposition just offered is in effect an instruction to the committee, and that it can not be adopted by this House without infringing upon the rule that when a matter has been referred to a committee of conference the conference shall be in all respects free. Any such vote as this would restrict or impair the authority of the committee of conference to deal with the subject which has been submitted to it.

The effect of this resolution would of course be to restrict the authority of the committee and tie it down so that it could not deal with the subject with that entire and full discretion which the very idea of a conference implies. A conference never takes place until the business has reached a stage where the House can not deal with it in the ordinary way; it is because the House finds it impossible to come to any agreement with the Senate that a committee of conference is appointed, and I understand it to be the established rule of parliamentary law that when a subject of this nature has once been submitted to a committee of conference it is irregular, out of order, not parliamentary to attempt in any way by a vote of this kind to restrict the authority of that committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] that the conference is ended and the Senate amendments are not now in the hands of any committee of conference. They are before the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then under what order of business, Mr. Speaker, does this resolution make its appearance here?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes a privileged report from the committee of conference, which brings the subject back to the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is this a report from the committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. It is a report of a disagreement.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I do not understand this is a report of a disagreement. I understand that it is a request of the House for certain action.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk has just read the report. As soon as that report is made of course the subject is back before the House, and, the subject being before the House, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] offers a resolution to instruct the managers upon the part of the House as to the sense of the House with respect to a certain amendment.

Mr. CUTCHEON. But is the resolution privileged?

The SPEAKER. It has been very frequently so held.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Under what order of business can that possibly come here?

The SPEAKER. The amendments are here for some action on the part of the House. The Chair thinks that the original parliamentary practice was not to instruct committees of conference, but to leave them entirely free. However, a practice has grown up in this House, and has prevailed for several years, under which the House has very frequently passed resolutions instructing its managers as to the sense of the House with respect to certain amendments.

Mr. REED, of Maine. In this manner?

The SPEAKER. In this manner. There have been frequent occasions when it has been done. It is so stated in the Digest, and the rulings upon which the statement is based are cited. The Chair remembers several such cases in the House during the last eight or ten years. If this were an original question the Chair would be very much inclined to hold that the committee of conference must be free to decide in any way it choses, subject, of course, to the action of the House afterward.

Mr. WILLIS. I demand the previous question.

Mr. BAYNE. Does the committee of conference still exist, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. There is no committee of conference now existing with power to act until the House gives it some additional power.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then, how does this committee of conference make this report? How does this come in here?

The SPEAKER. This resolution is offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] upon the floor, the subject being before the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. What right has he to offer such a resolution? He is not acting as a member of the committee of conference?

The SPEAKER. Not at all.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Well, what right has he to offer such a resolution?

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman has a right to offer such a resolution, the Chair thinks. There are certain motions which would take precedence over it, but the gentleman has a right to offer the resolution.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then when the gentleman from Kentucky gets through I may make a motion with regard to some amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. There are certain other motions that would take precedence over this one even now, but there is no other motion now before the House with regard to this amendment. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I desire to ask whether the Chair regards the report of the committee, in which they state that they have been unable to agree, as a dismissal on their part of the whole subject? Are not that committee still competent to deal with the subject notwithstanding their report to the House that they have failed to agree?

The SPEAKER. Not unless the House gives them new authority. The universal practice is to request a further conference or to decline to do so.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is a motion to non-concur in order?

The SPEAKER. The House has already non-concurred.

Mr. LONG. Would not a motion to insist and have new conferees appointed be in order?

The SPEAKER. Certainly; and a motion that the House recede from its disagreement and agree to the Senate amendment is in order and has precedence over these other propositions. There are two motions, as the Chair has said, which would have precedence, but neither has been made.

Mr. LONG. Would not a motion to insist and appoint new conferees take precedence of the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I make that motion.

The SPEAKER. Pending the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky, the gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask a new conference.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is it not too late to make that motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, because it relates directly to the disposition of the matter in controversy between the two Houses and has priority over any of these other motions.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. I ask the previous question on my motion.

Mr. WILLIS. I submit to the gentleman from Massachusetts that his motion will not accomplish probably the object which he is seeking. He asks now that the House further insist; and if it does so, it non-concurs——

Mr. REED, of Maine. It non-concurs as to the Mississippi River now.

Mr. WILLIS. I am speaking of this particular point.

Mr. LONG. The House has already non-concurred.

Mr. WILLIS. I submit that, if the gentleman from Massachusetts wants to get an affirmative expression of the wish of the House, he should move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, or should move that the House recede.

The SPEAKER. There are two motions, as the Chair has stated, which, under the practice, have preference over the motion made by the gentleman from Kentucky. One of these, which has precedence over all other motions, is that the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment and agree to the same. The other is that the House insist upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask a further conference. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the motion which the Chair has last stated.

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. And on that motion I call the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion of Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts, that the House insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask a further conference, was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What effect does that have?

The SPEAKER. That has the effect of making it the duty of the Chair to appoint managers to represent the House in the further conference, provided the Senate should agree to the request for such a conference. The Chair appoints as managers on the part of the House the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WILLIS, the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. BLANCHARD, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. HENDERSON.

Mr. WILLIS. I desire to submit a resolution; but before offering it I hope the House will indulge me one moment.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Let us hear it first.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read for information.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the House that its conferees on the river and harbor bill should insist on striking out of the Senate amendment the following item, namely: For the purchase of the two improved water ways known as the Portage Lake and River Improvement Company Canal and the Lake Superior Ship-canal Railway and Iron Company Canal, $212,500.

Mr. MOFFATT. I raise a point of order on that resolution.

Mr. WILLIS. Before demanding the previous question I will say I think the House understands——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MOFFATT] makes the point of order that the resolution is not now in order. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] desires unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIS. Very briefly I desire to say that there were six matters which, when the river and harbor bill reached the Senate, were ingrafted upon it as amendments. Those six matters have never been discussed or voted upon in this House. The other day when the motion for a conference was pending, several members claimed that they would not have an opportunity to vote upon those six matters; and acting then, as I thought, for the very best, in the interest of the bill, I consented that a vote should be taken upon these six propositions. Thereupon objections were withdrawn; and the bill went into conference. Subsequently there was a meeting of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and by a majority of that committee I was requested, as a matter of practical parliamentary experience, to test the sense of the House upon these six propositions, the object being to find out what the House wanted in regard to them. That is the whole object of the propositions I have submitted. We do not want to do anything that the House does not want us to do.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope the gentleman will bear that in mind in regard to the Mississippi River Commission. The House has pronounced against it, and I hope the conferees will stand by the action the House.

Mr. WILLIS. I will say to my friend from Mississippi, or rather from Maine——

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is a very great difference. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman was speaking about the Mississippi at the time. I will say to my friend from Maine that when the subject of the Mississippi River was up, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], as will be recollected, requested that that also be voted on in the House; and I said to him I did not feel authorized to go to that extent as to the Mississippi River, for the reason that we were then proposing to non-concur in the Senate amendments as to the Mississippi; and that question had been fully discussed before the House. It stood in a different relation to the House from what these six other amendments did. For that reason only as to the Mississippi River proposition I was not willing to request a vote of the House to be taken, and that is the only reason why it was not included with the six other amendments.

Mr. ROWELL. Have all these propositions been insisted upon?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I should like to have a report on that river commission from some one who is not interested in its continuance.

Mr. WILLIS. None of the propositions which the Committee on Rivers and Harbors suggest I should ask the House to vote on have been voted on by the House.

Mr. ROWELL. Or in committee.

Mr. WILLIS. Neither in committee nor out of committee as a matter of courtesy and legislative propriety. These being important amendments, we felt it was right we should ask the House to instruct us what to do. That is the whole of it. If the House is willing in the exercise of its judgment to leave the whole matter with the conferees, very well. We will do our duty to the best of our ability; but we prefer the House should not abdicate its privilege, but in these responsible matters we should like to have the opinion of the House in order we may know what to do. In that hope I represent the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. LONG. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan has raised the point of order the resolution can not be acted on, because the subject is not before the House. The House having disposed of it by further insisting upon its disagreement to the Senate amendment and requesting a conference and the managers of the conference having been appointed on the part of the House, theoretically of course the matter has gone to the Senate, and is not in the House.

Mr. WILLIS. I will say to my friend in all candor it is in the direction of accomplishing what he wants, and I ask unanimous consent after that statement we may take a vote on these propositions.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If it is in the direction of what my friend asks, then I object. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIS. I take it that the gentleman wants action on this subject.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has not the gentleman from Kentucky the right to submit a motion to the House to test the sense of the House on all these matters?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so when the matter is before the House. Now the amendments of the Senate have been disposed of and gone to the committee of conference again.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. And that carried the amendments with it.

The SPEAKER. It did.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced the passage of a joint resolution (H. Res. 54) to credit Lieuts. Giles B. Harber and William H. Schuetze with sea-duty and sea-pay while engaged in the search for Lieutenant Chipp and party, and also for the time employed in bringing home the remains of Lieutenant-Commander De Long and party.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERBERT. I present the following privileged report:

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8975) "making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 6, 20, 55, and 56.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 7, 8, 10, 12, 13, 16, 17, 19, 21, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 30, 31, 33, 35, 36, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 63, 64, 65, 66, and 67; and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the total sum proposed insert "$7,000,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "And other necessary incidental expenses, two hundred and twenty-five thousand;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Substitute for the matter stricken out by said amendment the following: "And for publishing the same;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore of the matter stricken out by said amendment the following words: "Procuring, producing;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the amended paragraph a new paragraph, as follows:

"One or more rifled cannon of each type constructed at the cost of the United States for the Navy shall be publicly subjected to the proper test for endurance, including such rapid firing as a like gun would be subjected to in battle. This test shall be under the direction and to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy, and if such guns do not prove satisfactory the type they represent shall not be put in use in the naval service."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 14 and 15, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the amended paragraph insert the following:

"For new ferry launch in place of the one now in use, which shall be sold, and building fuse-room and coal-shed, $8,500."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "foreign," proposed to be inserted by said amendment, and insert after the word "postage," in line 23, page 6 of the bill, the following: "On letters sent abroad;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$170,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 29, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "absolutely;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 32, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "And the sum of $260,000 of the amount now standing to the credit of the clothing fund, and the further sum of $75,000 of the amount now standing to the credit of the small stores fund of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, shall be forthwith covered into the Treasury;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 34, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following: "Other necessary incidental expenses;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 37, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the total sum proposed insert "$900,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 38, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the words stricken out by said amendment, and add at the end of said restored words the following: "But the United States shall be put to no charge or expense, and shall incur no liability in relation to said vessel while the same is in such use," and insert after the word "Provided," where it first occurs in the matter proposed to be inserted by said Senate amendment, the word "further;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 62, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "And other necessary incidental articles;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 68, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"SEC. 2. All balances of moneys appropriated for the pay of the Navy or pay of the Marine Corps for any year existing after the accounts for said year shall have been settled shall be covered into the Treasury."

And the Senate agree to same.

H. A. HERBERT,
JOSEPH D. SAYERS,
A. C. HARMER,
Managers on the part of the House.

EUGENE HALE,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER The Clerk will read the statement accompanying the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Statement to accompany conference report on H. R. 8975.

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to H. R. 8975, "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes," submit the following statement, showing the effect of the action of the conference committee on said amendments and bill, namely:

Amendment numbered 1: Makes the appropriation for pay of the Navy $7,000,000, instead of $7,129,087.26 as proposed by the Senate, and $6,889,087.26 as proposed by the House, which included a reappropriation of the sum of $576,380 of the surplus on hand to the credit of pay of the Navy. The conferees agreed upon a new provision which takes the place of section 2, as proposed by Senate amendment, and provides that "all balances of moneys appropriated for the pay of the Navy or pay of the Marine Corps for any year existing after the accounts for said year shall have been settled shall be covered into the Treasury.

Amendment numbered 2: Strikes out under "Pay Miscellaneous" a specification for the payment of officers in excess of the number of each class provided for and for any increase arising from different duty, which provision was unnecessary.

Amendment numbered 3: Restores the appropriation for Pay Miscellaneous to $225,000, the amount in the House bill. These two appropriations, Pay Miscellaneous and Pay of the Navy, when added together as agreed upon by the conferees, carry $90,780 less than the same items appropriated for under the same heads for last fiscal year. Many items formerly included in Pay Miscellaneous are transferred to Pay of the Navy, where they properly belong.

Amendment numbered 4: Makes the appropriation for the general expenses of the "Bureau of Navigation" $83,500, instead of $87,500.

Amendment numbered 5: Makes provision for publishing the charts of the Mexican coast in lieu of charts of the coast from San Francisco to Panama, and appropriates $7,000, instead of $10,000, as proposed in the House bill, for preparation and publication.

Amendment numbered 6: Leaves the provision substantially as in the House bill.

Amendments 7 and 8: Correct clerical error.

Amendments numbered 9 and 10: Provide for preserving in addition to procuring, producing, and handling ordnance material as well, as provided for by House bill.

Amendment numbered 11: Makes the appropriation $109,300 instead of $127,500, and adds a provision agreed upon by the conferees for testing one or more rifled cannon of each type constructed at the cost of the United States for the Navy shall be publicly subjected to the proper test for endurance, including such rapid firing as a like gun would be subjected to in battle. This test shall be under the direction and to the satisfaction of the Secretery of the Navy, and if such guns do not prove satisfactory, the type they represent shall not be put in use in the naval service.

Amendments numbered 12 and 13: Strike out words which are unnecessary.

Amendments numbered 14 and 15: The conferees agreed upon an amendment which more effectually carries out the purposes of the House bill.

Amendment numbered 16: Appropriates $91,137 to complete the armament of the three steam cruisers, the Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta, and the dispatch-boat Dolphin.

Amendment numbered 17: Reduces the amount appropriated for under the head of "Equipment of Vessels" from $90,000 to $82,200.

Amendments numbered 18, 19, and 20 are verbal amendments and unimportant.

Amendment numbered 21: Strikes out the rent of officers' quarters at Washington.

Amendments numbered 22: Appropriates $170,000 instead of $190,000 as in the House bill.

Amendments numbered 24, 25, and 26: The effect of these amendments was to strike out appropriation for erecting brick kitchen, removing boilers, tubs, and kitchen range, making a reduction from $74,257 to $63,057.

Amendments numbered 27, 28, 29, and 30 are unimportant verbal amendments not affecting the amounts.

Amendment numbered 31: Reduces the appropriation for provisions from $1,081,000 to $1,052,000.

Amendment numbered 32: The conferees agreed to strike out the provision of the House bill transferring from the funds on hand to the credit of the clothing fund and the small-stores fund the sum of $325,000 to the credit of provisions, and instead thereof cover the same into the Treasury. This effects the reform the House intended to accomplish by its original provision, taking away from the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing surplus moneys standing to the credit of these funds which seemed to have been heretofore not only unnecessary but to have operated as a temptation to abuse.

Amendments numbered 33 and 34: Make unimportant amendments.

Amendment numbered 35: The House conferees consented to add the words "preservation of materials," for the purpose for which money is appropriated for the Bureau of Construction and Repair.

Amendment numbered 36: Takes away the power to purchase the rights of patent articles.

Amendment numbered 37: Reduces the appropriation for construction and repair from $957,000, as proposed by the Senate, to $900,000.

Amendment numbered 38: The Senate conferees consented to the provision in the House bill authorizing the Secretary, in his discretion, to furnish a vessel as a nautical school-ship at Philadelphia, Pa., with the proviso that "the United States shall be put to no charge or expense and shall incur no liability in relation to said vessel while the same is in use." And it also adds the usual provision that vessels shall not be repaired when the estimated cost of such repairs shall exceed 20 per cent. of the estimated cost of the vessel.

Amendment numbered 39: Adds to the bill $95,861 to complete the construction of the three steel cruisers, the Chicago, Boston, and Atlanta, and to pay the amount due on the dispatch-boat Dolphin, in accordance with the agreement of compromise entered into between the Secretary of the Navy and the assignees of John Roach.

Amendment numbered 40: Is a verbal amendment.

Amendment numbered 41: Puts in the words "and perservation."

Amendment numbered 42: Authorizes the purchase of pneumatic steerers.

Amendment numbered 43: Adds the words "and other steam auxiliaries."

Amendments numbered 44, 45, and 46: Are verbal amendments striking out the words "and so forth."

Amendment numbered 47: Reduces the appropriation for Bureau of Steam-Engineering from $780,000 to $763,000.

Amendment numbered 48: Provides that engines and machinery shall not be repaired where the cost of repairs shall exceed 20 per cent. of the estimated cost of new engines.

Amendments numbered 49 and 50: Are verbal amendments and unimportant.

Amendments numbered 51 and 52: Operate to add one professor of English studies, history, and law at the Naval Academy.

Amendments numbered 53 and 54: Raise the wages of the attendants at recitation-rooms from $240 to $300 each.

Amendment numbered 55: Strikes out the word "abroad" and leaves the appropriation as in the House bill for special course of study and training of naval cadets, as authorized by act of Congress, approved August 5, 1882.

Amendment numbered 56: The Senate receded from its objection to appropriation for the new Naval Observatory.

Amendments numbered 57, 58, 59, and 60 altogether have the effect to cover into the Treasury the sum of $200,000 of the surplus fund now standing to the credit of the pay of the Marine Corps and appropriating the said sum directly instead of reappropriating it.

Amendment numbered 61: Has the effect to limit the commutation of quarters for officers on duty where there are no public quarters instead of where they are serving without troops, as in the House bill.

Amendment numbered 62: Substitutes the words "other necessary incidental articles" for the words "and so forth."

Amendment numbered 63: Strikes out the words "appropriation to be immediately available;" which are now unnecessary, as the new fiscal year has begun.

Amendments 64 and 65: Add the word "and" and strike out the words "and so forth."

Amendments numbered 66 and 67: Limit the appropriation for hire of quarters for officers to places where there are no public quarters.

Amendment numbered 68: Has already been explained.

Mr. HERBERT. I move the adoption of the report, and upon that demand the previous question.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to inquire of the gentleman how much this increases the bill as it left the House?

The SPEAKER. If the previous question is ordered there will be thirty minutes for debate.

Mr. BURROWS. I know, but I do not care to debate it; I only ask this for information.

Mr. HERBERT. I have not figured the exact amount, but I do not think there is any material increase. It is about the same. There have been some reductions and some increases by the amendments, which I think nearly balance.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no increase but what is perfectly proper.

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir. There is an increase in two items amounting to about $194,000, but the decrease will about offset that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is there any appropriation to complete the monitors?

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir. We have that in the bill which we hope to get up to-morrow, and the gentleman can help us on that occasion.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question, the Speaker decided that the ayes seemed to prevail.

Mr. STRAIT. I ask a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 109, noes 6.

Mr. STRAIT. No quorum.

Mr. HERBERT. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TAULBEE. Before the roll-call is begun I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the evening session for to-night.

Mr. GROSVENOR, Mr. SAWYER, Mr. BRADY, and others objected.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 231, nays none, not voting 91; as follows:

So the report was adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. STRAIT. I object.

The Clerk recapitulated the names of those voting.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, with Mr. LOUTTIT, on this vote.

Mr. BARRY with Mr. BINGHAM, for the remainder of the day.

Mr. BENNETT with Mr. WAIT, for this day.

Mr. WILLIS with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois, for the remainder of this day.

Mr PIDCOCK with Mr. RYAN, for to-day.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STRAIT. I move that the House now take a recess until half past 7 o'clock.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I want to introduce a bill, if the gentleman will withdraw that a moment, for reference.

Several MEMBERS. Make the motion until 8 o'clock.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. STRAIT; and there were ayes 30.

Before the negative note was taken,

Mr. LONG. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota modifies his motion so as to make the recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But the House is dividing. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Still if the gentleman made the motion under a misapprehension as to the order of the House the Chair thinks he should have the privilege of correcting it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. But that was his own mistake.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. What effect will an affirmative decision have upon the order of the House for this evening's business?

The SPEAKER. None whatever. The motion is to take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. STRAIT. I have asked for a division on the motion.

The SPEAKER. But that was a different proposition.

Mr. STRAIT. No, sir; my proposition was submitted to the House and the question was being taken upon it. I have not modified it. The vote has not been taken on the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to move that the House take a recess until half past 7?

Mr. STRAIT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. And after the Chair had commenced taking the vote the Chair distinctly understood the gentleman to modify that motion so as to take the recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. STRAIT. No, sir; the gentleman from Massachusetts was mistaken. I did not modify it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought the gentleman himself had modified it, as he was standing close by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. STRAIT. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then those opposed to a recess until half past 7 o'clock will rise, the affirmative vote having been taken.

The negative vote on a division was announced as 69.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. STRAIT. I now move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That has just been voted down.

The SPEAKER. It has not been voted down. The motion of the gentleman originally was to take a recess until half past 7, which the Chair thought had been modified; but the gentleman stated he had not modified it, and a vote was taken on that motion, which was rejected.

The question now is on the motion to take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. STRAIT. And on that I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 22, noes 70.

Mr. STRAIT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STRAIT] and the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY].

Before the count was completed,

Mr. HENLEY said: I have agreed, inasmuch as it is obvious we can not reach the object we have in view before 5 o'clock, and there are several gentlemen who have reports to present to which there will be no objection—I have agreed not to insist on making the report from the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. COBB. I hope the gentleman from California will insist.

The SPEAKER. Unless the motion to take a recess is withdrawn any gentleman has a right to insist that the vote by tellers shall be taken.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate further insisted on its amendment to the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, agreed to the further conference asked by the House, and had appointed Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. CONGER, and Mr. RANSOM the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The tellers report ayes 10, noes 55. A quorum has not voted; but the hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, the House under its former order takes a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

Mr. MCMILLIN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore and directed the reading of the following letter from the Speaker:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 23, 1886.

I hereby designate Hon. BENTON MCMILLIN to preside as Speaker pro tempore of the House of Representatives this evening.

JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask before the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar we take up and dispose of the bills reported by the Committee of the Whole House last Friday evening and still undisposed of.

There was no objection.

BILLS PASSED.

The bill (S. 1421) granting a pension to William H. Weaver, reported without amendment, was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Bills of the following titles were reported with amendments. The amendments were adopted, the bills as amended were ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 8310) granting a pension to Cyra L. Weston;

A bill (H. R. 6314) to increase the pension of James Carlin; and

A bill (H. R. 8474) granting a pension to James McGlynn; the title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to James McGlenn."

The bill (H. R. 8296) to remove the political disabilities of Duff Green Reed, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed—two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

The bill (S. 1492) for the relief of Ellen Sadler, sister of John Sadler, was reported from the Committee of the Whole House with an amendment. The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the several votes by which the bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

STEPHEN SAUER.

The bill (H. R. 5038) for the relief of Stephen Sauer was reported with a recommendation that the House agree in the Senate amendments.

The amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

EMILY J. STANNARD.

Mr. MORRILL. Before we go into Committee of the Whole, as a courtesy to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 2609) granting a pension to Emily J. Stannard, widow of General Stannard, who was doorkeeper of the House for the last two or three sessions, and who was also a clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. He distinguished himself at Gettysburg and on other fields. The committee ask, as a special courtesy to them, that the House take up this bill and pass it before going into Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily C. Stannard, widow of the late George J. Stannard, brevet major-general of volunteers, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $100 per month, from and after June 1, 1886.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommend the following amendment:

In line 6 strike out "C." and insert "J."
In line 8 strike out "$100" and insert "$50."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALLACE. I ask to have the report read, reserving the right to object.

Mr. MORRILL. The report is very long. If the gentleman will allow an explanation to be made it will save time.

Mr. GROUT. I think if the first portion of the report is read, extending only to the beginning of the second page, it will satisfy the gentleman. The rest of the report consists mainly of affidavits.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not desire that the whole report should be read if some gentleman will make a statement in explanation of the bill.

Mr. GROUT. I would like to have the report read as far as I have indicated, and I think then everybody will be satisfied.

Mr. DOCKERY. Some gentleman has suggested that this bill embraces the idea of arrears. Is that correct?

Mr. CUTCHEON. Oh, no; General Stannard only died two months ago.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report.

Before the reading of the report was concluded,

Mr. WINANS said: I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES), without the affidavits, is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill (S. 2609) granting a pension to Emily J. Stannard, submits the following report:

This committee adopts the report of the Senate committee, which is hereto appended, and recommends the passage of the bill, with the following amendment:

In line 8, strike out the words "one hundred" and insert the word "fifty."

The claimant, Emily J. Stannard, is the widow of the late George J. Stannard, brevet major-general of volunteers, who entered the service of the United States as a volunteer April 14, 1861, and was mustered out June 27, 1866.

The following is an abstract of his military record:

"Tendered services as a volunteer to Governor Fairbanks, April 14, 1861; commissioned lieutenant-colonel, Second Vermont Volunteers, June 6, 1861; distinguished himself in the battles of Bull Run, July 21, 1861; Lee's Mills, April 16, 1862; Yorktown, May 3, 1862; Williamsburg, May 5, 1862; Golding's Farm, June 26, 1862; Harper's Ferry, September 13 and 15, 1862; [prisoner of war, September 15, 1862; exchanged January 9, 1863;] appointed brigadier-general United States volunteers March 11, 1863; Gettysburg (wounded), July 3, 1863; Bermuda Hundred, June 2, 1864; Drury's Bluff, June 15, 1864; Cold Harbor (wounded twice), June 3, 1864; Petersburg (wounded), June 15, 1864; the Petersburg Mine, July 30, 1864; Chapin's Farm (wounded and lost right arm), September 30, 1864; mustered out of United States service June 27, 1866."

General Stannard died at Washington, D. C., June 1, 1886, in consequence of wounds received in line of duty, and debility of physical constitution the result of those wounds and of hardship and exposure in the service. His last sickness was brief, commencing with an ordinary cold, which, fastening upon a body worn out and exhausted with sufferings prolonged through the long period elapsing since his discharge from the service, terminated his valuable life, with hardly an effort of nature to resist the attack of what otherwise would have been a trifling malady.

Maj. Gen. George J. Stannard was one of the most able and brilliant military officers which our country has produced. He conceived and executed with the troops of his own command the decisive movement at the decisive moment in the great battle of Gettysburg universally admitted to have been the turning point of the struggle for the preservation of the Union, and a contest of arms which in generalship, bravery, and glory, in the consequences involved, and in everything which contributes to historical interest was inferior to no other in the annals of the race.

This country is under greater obligation to none of her martial heroes than to this modest volunteer officer, who in his lifetime earned everything while he claimed nothing, but whose greatness of soul was recognized by those who knew him, and whose name is sure of that immortality which belongs to conspicuous deeds done in the cause of mankind and to a noble personal character.

The widow of General Stannard has been for more than twelve years utterly unable to wait upon herself by reason of paralysis, unable to raise either hand from her side, both arms being paralyzed. She is entirely dependent upon others for every want. She is also entirely destitute, and has no friends able to support her and no means or source of income.

Besides, there are two unmarried daughters wholly unprovided for, whose services are constantly required by the unfortunate condition of the widowed mother.

The committee recommend the passage of the bill, feeling that a grateful country will never consent to a less generous provision for the helpless and destitute widow of Maj. Gen. George E. Stannard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] that this bill be taken up and considered now?

There was no objection.

Mr. PRICE. I move to amend by striking out "$50" and inserting "$25."

Mr. LONG. The husband had $37.50.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the amendment to strike out "$50" and insert "$25."

Mr. GROUT. I want to say a word. It is this. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"] Then I will not say a word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. PRICE. Gentlemen around me tell me that this applicant is entirely paralyzed and helpless. That fact does not appear from the report so far as it was read, but being assured that such is the fact, I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. It is stated in the report that this lady is unable to wait on herself by reason of paralysis.

Mr. GROUT. That is what I wanted to state. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLANCHARD. I understand this bill carries a pension from a certain day fixed in the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. From the 1st day of June.

Mr. MORRILL. The day on which General Stannard died.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move to strike out that provision and to insert "the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the amendment of the committee to strike out "$100" and insert "$50."

The amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is next on the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] to strike out "June 1, 1886," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the passage of this act."

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit some general observations upon the subject of pensions, and I do so because in my judgment the people of the country misapprehend the situation of affairs touching this most interesting and important question.

It is customary throughout the country to charge that the soldiers of the Army are being pensioned to an extravagant degree, in a manner more than adequate to their just deserts, and in a manner indicative of the purpose of the friends of pensions to lavish the income of the Government regardless of the merit of the applicant or the aggregate amount of the appropriations. I think there is more misinformation, perhaps, upon this question than almost any one of present public concern. I undertake to say, Mr. Speaker, that while it is true that the Government has paid out and is paying out very large sums of money upon the pension-roll of the country, the sums expended in individual cases are smaller than the most penurious citizen would be willing to indorse as satisfactory in amount.

In the first place, however, before proceeding to this branch of the subject I desire to especially refer to some of the arguments with which we have been furnished during the current session of Congress upon this subject. Whenever a Republican has ventured to complain of the pension system as inadequate, cumbersome, and inefficient, and that the Government has been illiberal in detail and not overgenerous in the aggregate; and when we have seen fit to criticise the existing legislation upon this subject, we have been reminded that these pension laws were all passed by Republican Congresses, and that if they are defective and deficient now that it is the fault of the Republican party.

I desire to say that if this be true it is no answer to the just complaints of the soldiers of the country. Nor is it any defense to the majority in Congress if it be true that they have been negligent and derelict in passing suitable pension legislation. The soldiers of the country are not so much interested at this time in ascertaining who is to blame for past failures of duty as they are in seeking a remedy for existing evils.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another and better answer. This legislation was passed nearly a quarter of a century ago—or the most of it. The things which we now complain of were reasonable and just at that time. It was a reasonable regulation to compel the soldier applying for a pension in 1864, and for many years after, to prove by proper evidence that he entered the service a sound man and that the disability of which he complains was caused by his service in the Army, There was no difficulty about complying with that regulation then. His comrades were living. The surgeons and assistant surgeons of his regiment in most cases were living. The friends who knew him before he went into the Army were living.

The officers of the provost-marshal's department which had mustered him, the medical examiner who examined him, the officer who enlisted him were living, in most instances, and it was by no means an unreasonable requirement that he should bring the proof specified in the law. But lapse of time has changed all this. Lapse of time has produced the result of obliteration of this evidence. Twenty-odd years in this country has made a terrible inroad upon the soldiers of the grand army of 1861–'65. The men who enlisted the soldiers are dead; the men who examined the recruits and certified to their soundness are dead; the surgeons of the regiment in which the soldier served are largely dead; and the comrades who stood around the soldier, who saw him fall or heard his complaints and witnessed his sufferings, are largely dead; and the great majority are on the other side of the water.

On fame's eternal camping-ground
Their silent tents are spread.

And the waters of oblivion have washed away the sands upon the seashore in which was written the evidence that testified to their valor and devotion. Every intelligent man knows this; and every man who stands insisting that the present statutes shall remain upon the statute-books, the present regulations of the Pension Department shall be maintained, that the present restrictions upon the character of proof shall be upheld, does it knowingly and with his eyes wide open, and with intent, necessarily inferable, that he does it to hinder, delay, and prevent the soldier from securing his just deserts.

Read the pitiful responses to the inquiries of Congressmen sent to the Pension Office that come daily thronging our Department mails, informing the applicants, whose cases have often been pending from five to ten and fifteen years, that they must produce the evidence of the physicians who treated them in the Army, or an officer who knew that at a certain time and a certain place the soldier was stricken by sun-stroke or some deadly disease that broke him down and made him a helpless man, depending upon the public for support. Where is the propriety in adhering to this pod-auger system of pensions? It is equivalent to a refusal, and it is a practical refusal to substantially all the soldiers of the Army.

I want to point out some hardships of the present pension system. We profess to grant pensions to dependent parents because of the loss of their children in the service of the country. Let us see how we administer that duty. The mother of a promising boy in 1861 was in affluent circumstances—able to take care of her only son and to educate him. She was not dependent upon him, but he was dependent upon her; and she was looking forward to the time when, in the days of his manhood and her declining years, he would be the staff upon whom she could lean. The country called for soldiers. The boy, with his heart swelling with patriotism, offered to volunteer, and went to his mother for permission. The call of the country was to him and to her. His patriotism inspired him to offer his services. Her patriotism inspired her to consent.

With a bleeding heart and tear-washed face she laid the dearest offering that life had given her upon the altar of her country's demand. The boy goes forth to battle, and amid the iron hail of war he surrenders up his life upon the battlefield, and the mother's heart lies bleeding and torn. Years elapse. Her property is swept away by the mutations of business. She has no means of support. Age is coming on. She remembers her dead boy, and in her extremity appeals to the country for whose salvation she gave him up. And that country, proud and rich and prosperous, turns upon her and says, "As a condition precedent to our bounty you must prove that at the date of the enlistment of your son you were dependent upon him for bread and clothes and shelter." She can not, for the fact was not so.

In her agony she cries out, "I did not depend upon him, for then I was blessed with property;" and the Government says, "We will conclusively hold, as against your appeal for aid, that had your son lived until now he would have been recreant to his duty, and would not have supported you." And the American mother, the mother of a dead Union soldier, the mother who clasped to her breast the brave soldier boy of 1861 and sent him forth with the Spartan mother's injunction, "My son, come back with your shield or on it," that mother turns from the cold repulse of the Government that her son died to save and takes up her place in the poor-house!

And that occurrence is going on day by day. To-day, Mr. Speaker, there are in the poor-houses of this country more than seven thousand men who wore the blue and bore the musket and carried the knapsack amid wintry snows and summer heats in the long, perilous marches, in the deadly battle, in the lonely bivouac, to save the nation that to-day turns them over to indigence, to poverty, and the potter's field.

We asked at the hands of this Congress a change of the law in regard to dependent mothers and we were refused. Later on I shall call attention to the manner in which it was done.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me reply to the assumption so often and so recklessly made that we have been lavish in the bestowal of pensions upon the soldiers of the late war. I have here, sir, a table which I have clipped from the official report of the Pension Office for the year ending June 30, 1885, which is the latest report which has been placed within my reach, and is very interesting as reflecting upon this claim of munificent generosity. From that table, sir, it appears that at the date aforesaid there were upon the pension-rolls of the country 244,201 persons; and during that year there had been dropped from the rolls and officially reported to the Pension Office 15,223, or an average of 1,269 per month.

It is fair to assume that there were two thousand or more dead, married, or otherwise removed from the pension-rolls which had not been reported to the Department, for these reports can not reach the Department instantaneously.

Now, sir, the average annual value of pensions paid to this great body of pensioners was how much, do you think? How much, you holder of the Government bonds in Wall street, who through your organs, through your paid agents, sneer constantly at the patriotic efforts of the friends of the soldier to save from misery and want these brave men; how much do you think, you men rolling in sordid wealth which you have extracted from the misfortunes of the Government; how much per annum per capita do you imagine these pensions amount to? I will tell you. They amounted to the munificent sum of $110.36! That was the average. Nine dollars and sixteen cents per month; 30½ cents per day. That, Mr. Speaker, is the average pension paid by this munificent Government of ours to the men who saved the Union.

We hear it said sometimes that the Mexican war soldiers ought to be pensioned because as the result of their patriotism, their courage, their soldierly endurance a vast empire within an empire was gained to this Government. I agree, Mr. Speaker, that there is great force in the suggestion. We measure our rewards by the good accomplished by those upon whom we bestow rewards. That is correct. It ought to be so; and I begrudge not the survivors of the Mexican war if they shall become the beneficiaries of the Government's bounty. They deserve it. They deserve it not only because of the munificent wealth which they poured into the lap of this Government, but because of the greater and better proposition that the Government of this country ought never to permit the soldiers of the volunteer army at least to suffer for shelter, for clothing, nor for food.

But, sir, if that is to be the criterion of rewards for our soldiers, if that is to be the standard of measurement, what is to be given to these men who saved the Union—the Union of these States, "the union of lakes, the union of lands, the union of hearts, the union of hands?" How much is it worth to the capitalists of Wall street that they have a Union, saved by the sacrifice of these men to protect them? How much is it worth in prospective, looking down the years, that we have one flag, one harmonious Union, one God in a political sense, as compared with the prospects and the possibilities—ay, the probabilities, when three-fourths of my comrades went forth to rescue the country? How much is it worth to the holders of $1,500,000,000 of Government bonds to-day that they have a Government Treasury to go to to get their interest from, instead of a broken country and a broken treasury? How much is it worth to the railroads of the country that they are able to carry on their traffic in a united land? How much is it worth to the commercial interests of this country to-day—to the manufacturing interests of this country, to the agricultural interests of this country, to all the interests of this country—that we have a mighty empire which has sprung up into existence out of the blows of war that were delivered by these brave men? How much is it worth that out of the conflict of arms there sprang up an impetus of improvement, of material growth, that made it possible for this nation to pay the interest on its public debt, to redeem its "greenbacks" in gold, and to carry its empire into new States and new Territories? How much is it worth to the creditor classes of this country and the laboring classes of this country that the line of the nation's improvement has been taken up from the Missouri River and carried across the great plains of the West, over the Rocky Mountains, over Wyoming, Dakota, and Montana, and Idaho, out to the blooming Territory of Washington; out upon the banks of the Columbia, down upon the coast of the Pacific Ocean, down to the arid but auriferous plains of Arizona and New Mexico?

How much is it worth, Mr. Speaker, to this generation and to the generations which are to come that loyalty is at a premium in this country and disloyalty at a discount? How much is it worth that civil and religious liberty are guaranteed, and that the education of the masses of the people has become the fundamental idea of political parties and statesmanship? How much is it worth that social and political and public virtue are things to be sought after and patronized and upbuilded by the general sense of the Government, instead of anarchy, debauchery, crime, licentiousness, fraud, corruption, dismembered nationality, a broken-up Constitution, and a disfigured and ruined public conscience?

I do not say that the soldiers have done all this development, but I do say that the saving of the Union, the restoration of the Constitution, the rehabilitation of the public judgment of the country made all this development possible; and I do say, and I challenge successful contradiction, that without a restored Union, without a rehabilitated Constitution there could have been no such growth.

And to the men who have done all this the country pays, when they are disabled, mark you—when they are sick from the effect of their service in the Army, when they are shattered and maimed by the bullet on the battlefield—in this case, and in this case only, this great Government, with its $300,000,000 of surplus that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] talked about on his famous "march to the sea," as it has been well called by my colleague from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY], gives to the soldier 30½ cents per day!

But we used to talk about protecting the children of the dead soldier from the contamination of the poor-house. The immortal Lincoln, standing in the presence of the whole nation, said:

> Let us strive on to finish the work we are in, * * * to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphans.

How have we fulfilled this sacred promise? We give to the soldier's orphan, in lieu of our promise, in false redemption of our promise, 6½ cents per day! Think of it. The soldier's child; heir of his father's rich crown of patriotism—his only patrimony—left to the cold charities of the creditor class of this country, to stand between him and the vice of the poor-house and the horrors of the orphan asylum, this Government, for the salvation of which this child's father died or ruined his health—this Government gives this child 6½ cents a day! It is a shame and an outrage. I care not who did it. I am not here to divide responsibility; I am here to condemn the parsimonious spirit that thus gives out the bounty of the Government in sums so small as to make it valueless and defeat the purpose for which it was inaugurated as a fraud, a crime, and a shame.

Such an appropriation when the country was poor and when our credit was low was one thing. To maintain such a rate now with an overflowing Treasury is quite another thing.

And so all along the line of these pensions. I append here, Mr. Speaker, a table showing the rates upon which these men are pensioned, and I hope that the Eastern press—the men who daily and hourly, in the interest of their friends, cry out against the pension system of the country—will read this. It is not new. It is a tale that has been told, but it can not be told too often. Here is the table, Mr. Speaker:

It will be seen that 26,132 of the grand total whose names appeared upon the pension-roll at the close of the fiscal year about which we are talking received the munificent sum of $2 per month, or 6½ cents a day. These are the shattered heroes of the Wilderness. These are the men who protected Washington city from Lee's army. These are the men who stood at Nashville and hurled back the columns of Hood in his march upon Louisville and Cincinnati. These are the men who "bore the heat and burden of the day." Each one of them has to prove that out of this service has come to him more or less disability; and he is receiving 6½ cents a day from this glorious Government, this munificent Government!

But, sir, there are 60,268 more of them who are receiving the glorious, magnificent, luxurious appropriation of $4 a month, or 13 cents a day; and the Eastern press of the country and some from other sections shriek out in condemnation and the President of the United States dares to put it by insinuation into a message and hurl it in the face of Congress that the men who denounce these things and claim something better for the soldiers of the country are demagogues, and are not the true friends of the soldier. But, sir, there are 34,639 more—more seriously disabled; their health more terribly impaired; and they receive $6 a month—19½ cents a day.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are upon these rolls other classes who are drawing $1.87, $2.12, $2.25, $3, $3.75, $5, and $5 and fractions, and so on, various sums, all at $6 a month or under; and the total number who receive $6 or less is 128,907, leaving but 115,294 who get above that sum. Then, Mr. Speaker, they run along at $8, $9; and at $10 a month we find but 9,277; and at $11 a month we find but 67; and at $12 a month we find but 15,480; and, Mr. Speaker, when we get above $14 a month and begin to approach 50 cents a day we find the numbers growing smaller and smaller; 4,000 and a fraction at $16, 2,000 at $17, 1,500 at $18, 1,300 at $20, 14,000 at $24. These are the legless men or the armless men; the helpless cripples of the war. At $30 a month there are but 7,800. These are the men totally disabled by the war and compelled to be helped at all times. And then above that class we find less than 2,000 men. These figures are absolutely startling, and show that the munificence of the Government, which has been boasted about, is in the imagination of the men who constitute themselves critics.

Let us go to another class of individuals, Mr. Speaker. But before going there I would say that since the war we have paid for pensions $765,092,640.18.

But this large sum includes the expense of the Pension Department, which has grown into an enormous sum, and which amounted in the single matter of fees for examining surgeons alone, in the year 1885, to $592,822.01. I have not before me the exact total of expenditures for carrying on the pension service, but it is very large, and amounts to somewhere in the neighborhood of $3,250,000 per annum. I estimate, and I can not be far from right, that the expense of administering the Pension Department has amounted to $25,000,000, which would leave the sum actually paid to pensioners $740,000,000. This looks like a large sum. I read here a table of certain annual expenses of the Pension Office:

But let me speak of what we have paid to another class of people. I append a table showing the amount of interest paid upon the national debt, and the amount of pensions paid every year, beginning with 1862 and ending with 1885.

Total	765,092,640 18	2,205,019,419 19

The amount that it appears we have paid to pensioners and on account of pensions, as before stated, is $765,092,640.18, and we have paid as interest upon the public debt $2,205,019,419.19; excess of interest paid to the bondholder above the total expenditures on account of pensions, $1,439,926,779.01. I do not put these figures in juxtaposition, Mr. Speaker, as reflecting upon the propriety of the payment of the national debt. I believe in paying every dollar of it. I believe in paying the interest on the bonds just as stipulated in the contract. I belong to the party which upholds the Government faith and considers it the very ark of our national safety.

But, sir, when these men, holding this enormous debt, are clipping their coupons semi-annually and taking the gold, I protest that they shall do it reverently and thankfully; and that when a Wall-street bondholder draws his gold interest upon his gold interest-bearing bond and meets one of my maimed comrades upon the street, I protest that he shall not sneer because the poor fellow has $2 a month in his pocket or $4 or $10 or $30, but, figuratively, he shall take off his hat and bow to the man who made it possible that the Government can pay her debt. I do not object that the creditors shall enjoy wealth, I do not object that they shall live in fine houses. I believe in it. I wish I had one of my own. I do not object that their children shall be educated, that they shall travel in Europe and all over the world and become great and good citizens. I do not object that they shall fill their palatial houses with works of art, that they shall foster everything which makes life beautiful in this country. But I demand that they shall, while thus enjoying the benefits of a great Government, cease to begrudge my comrades of the battlefield the miserable pittance which the Government gives out to them.

What I object to, Mr. Speaker, in addition to the foregoing, is the impossibilities which are surrounding the large majority of the applicants for pensions. I do not desire to criticise the administration of the Pension Office, and I will not. I do not complain of the administration of General Black, and I will not. I do not complain that he stands on this roll which I have appended here—this roll of honor, the pensioners of the country—as the one man at the foot of the table drawing $100 a month. I would not suffer what Black has suffered for one year—no, Mr. Speaker, for one month, nor for one day, nor for one hour—for all that Black has drawn as a pension, for all he ever will draw as a pension, nor for all the wealth in the Treasury of the United States.

Whether or not his selection was a wise one it is not for me to say. That he has brought to the discharge of his duty all the physical and mental ability he had I doubt not. That he has met with a measure of success I do not deny; and I would speak in equally strong words of praise of the distinguished, patriotic, and good man, the deputy commissioner.

I care not that Colonel McLean is a Wabash Democrat. I care not that his appointment was recommended by the "Tall Sycamore of the Wabash," if it was, and if it was conferred as a favor to him. It was little reward and little recognition enough for the gallant man who diverged from the line of his party in the Senate of the United States and made a magnificent and eloquent appeal for the soldiers, as he did some years ago. But, sir, the regulations of the Pension Department and the laws of the country are a substantial barrier against the allowance of pension claims; and to-day, while it is true that large numbers of pensions are being allowed, it is equally true that a startling number are being refused; and the day following the receipt of the ultimate rejection the trustees of the townships are taking charge of the soldiers of the Union, their widows and their orphans.

Here is a table showing the facts as to the feature of the subject:

The greatest number of cases settled was in 1883, when General Dudley was Commissioner.

It has been said that the present administration is doing wonders in granting pensions.

I append a table throwing light upon that. It is not strange that as the years go along some of the claims filed each year are at last worked through.

The table follows.

Army invalid claims allowed each year since July 1, 1861, showing in each year's allowance the number of those which were filed each year and allowed in the report years, giving also the percentage of the number which have been allowed out of those filed each year.

Years in which the claims were filed.	The several years in which the claims were allowed and the number allowed each year.																								Per cent. of claims allowed of each year's filing.

What do you say, Mr. Speaker, at this late day in the country's history to a communication like this: "You are called upon to furnish the evidence of a commissioned officer or two comrades who can testify to your injuries received in line of duty, and medical evidence is required as to your treatment in the Army and each year since the war." That is a beautiful prospect before the face of a man starving, whose wife is hungry and whose children are crying with cold. It is a mockery. It is holding out to the starving man the grapes and the viands of the feast while an insurmountable barrier holds him back. His sufferings are augmented by the hope of relief, while his way is obstructed until relief is made impossible of attainment.

It is not worth while, Mr. Speaker, to flatter ourselves that we are doing justice by the soldiers of the Army. It is false. It is a false proposition. It is untrue, and everybody knows it. They are dying. They are falling as the leaves fall; falling with hope lost, and with the last thought of earth as they go to the great majority the failure of their Government to redeem its pledges and make good its duty.

Time would fail me to speak of the embarrassments that hedge in the way of the soldier seeking for relief. And so it has come about, Mr. Speaker, that intelligent men have long ago demanded of Congress that relief shall be granted. The men who know all about the troubles of the soldier, the impediments lying in his pathway, have from time to time come here to Congress with plain, simple, easy solutions, and have been met with failure. At the session of Congress in the winter of 1883–'84 the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic submitted the following proposition as embodying the sort of relief which they believed desirable:

Memorial of the committee on pensions of the Grand Army of the Republic.

To the honorable the Senators and Representatives in Congress:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned beg leave to respectfully represent to you—

That they comprise the committee on pensions of the national body of the Grand Army of the Republic, and that this committee was instituted for the express purpose of having some recognized medium through which the Grand Army could officially address the Congress of the United States.

This committee, therefore, represents a constituency of upward of two hundred and twenty thousand veteran soldiers and sailors. We desire to give whatever weight we may have as a body or as individuals in favor of such measures as we deem just which may now or hereafter be before you. We likewise desire to protest against and condemn certain propositions which are now on your files, ostensibly in the interest of the old soldier or sailor, but which seem to us to be inconsiderate and calculated to bring into disrepute the general standing of the saviors of the nation.

We are unqualifiedly opposed to the proposition to distribute land warrants to veterans without regard to whether they occupy the land or not.

We are also opposed to the proposition to pay to the soldier or sailor to-day the difference in value of the greenback when we received it in payment for our military services and the value of gold on the same date.

We are also opposed to the bill or bills proposing to grant pensions at the present time to all survivors of the war, regardless of whether they were wounded or became disabled in the service or are needy.

We are in favor of a bill granting pensions to survivors of rebel prisons who are suffering from disability, without compelling them to prove that such disability arose from said imprisonment.

We are in favor of the extension of the arrears limit to January 1, 1885.

We are in favor of giving widows of veterans the increase from eight to twelve dollars per month. We would cheerfully recommend an even greater increase if we thought you would grant it.

We are in favor of the bill which provides that the fact, as shown by the record of the acceptance and muster-in of the soldier and sailor, shall be received by the pension authorities as prima facie evidence that he was sound at that time—the Government not to be debarred from proving that he was unsound at date of enlistment, but the onus of the proof to be on the Government.

We are in favor of a bill to give the men who lost both eyes or arms or legs, or an arm and a leg, or disability equivalent thereto, $100 per month.

We are in favor of increasing the additional pension for minor children from $2 per month to $5 per month, and extending the limit for minors from the age of sixteen years to eighteen years; and in case said minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless, that there be no limit. Think of your own children living on 7 cents per day!

We are in favor of the following amount of pensions for the hereinafter specified rates of disability:

For amputation at the hip or shoulder joint, or so near thereto as to prevent wearing an artificial limb, $50 per month.

For amputation of leg or arm at or above the knee or elbow, or in case of amputation so near the knee or elbow joint as to render the joint useless, $40 per month.

For amputation below the knee or elbow, $30 per month.

We also favor the continuance of a soldier's pension to his widow or his dependent relatives, regardless of whether he dies from the effects of wounds or disease resulting from service or not.

We also favor giving pensions to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and are dependent upon their own labor for support and are sixty-five years of age, without compelling them to prove at this date that such disability actually arose from the service.

We believe that a present condition of physical inability and dependence upon others than those legally bound therefor for support, and the fact that the soldier or sailor left no widow or minor child, should alone be required to be shown by competent evidence to entitle the names of dependent parents to be placed on the pension-roll, and no proof of dependence at date of death of the soldier should be required or necessary, and that such pension should commence at the date of and continue during such dependence.

We trust also that this session of Congress will not be allowed to expire without the passage of a law fixing the qualification and status of claimants and their agents or attorneys, remedial of the present existing anomalous condition thereof.

We are in favor of the passage of a bill for a just and equitable equalization of the bounties paid to soldiers by the General Government.

In conclusion, we beg leave to respectfully submit, that if any one thinks the foregoing carefully considered requests make too large drafts on the resources of the country, that we represent a body of men on whom in the hour of its direst extremity the country made drafts of blood, of limbs, of suffering and of life, and the nation's draft never went to protest.

No relief was granted by Congress in response to this appeal. Certain amendments were placed upon the Mexican pension bill by a Republican Senate which would have afforded almost complete and perfect relief. But in the House of Representatives, in a Democratic House of Representatives, the bill was defeated, and the soldiers suffer on. A year later the same committee again made its appearance in Congress, and again respectfully urged the enactment of the same measures; and they were again refused relief. During the current session of Congress this same committee again made its appearance and submitted the following memorial:

To the honorable the Senators and Representatives in Congress:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned respectfully represent that they are "The committee on pensions" of the national body of the Grand Army of the Republic, and that this committee was instituted for the purpose of having a recognized medium through which the Grand Army of the Republic can officially address the Congress of the United States.

This committee represents a constituency of upward of three hundred thousand veteran soldiers and sailors. We desire to give whatever weight we may have, as a body or as individuals, in favor of such measures as we deem just which may now or hereafter be before you.

We favor legislation by which the record of the acceptance and muster-in of the soldier and sailor shall be prima facie evidence that he was sound at that time—the Government not to be debarred from proving that he was unsound at date of enlistment, but the onus of the proof to be on the Government.

We favor giving widows the increase from eight to twelve dollars per month.

We favor the continuance of a pension to the widow or dependent relatives, whether the pensioner dies from the effects of wounds or disease resulting from service or not.

We favor increasing the pension paid on account of minor children from $2 to $5 per month, and of extending the limit for minors from the age of sixteen to eighteen years; and in case said minor child is insane, idiotic, or otherwise helpless, that the pension shall continue during the life of said child.

We favor the extension of the arrears limit to January 1, 1888.

We favor legislation providing that if the pensioner left neither widow nor minor child, the name of the dependent parent to be placed on the pension-roll from the date of actual dependence of such parent.

We favor granting pensions to survivors of rebel prisons who are suffering from disability, without requiring them to prove that such disability arose from said imprisonment.

We favor the following pensions:

To the men who lost both eyes or arms or legs, or an arm and a leg, or disability equivalent thereto, $100 per month.

For amputation at the hip or shoulder joint, or so near thereto as to prevent wearing an artificial limb, $50 per month.

For amputation of leg or arm above the knee or elbow, or amputation so near the knee or elbow joint as to render the joint useless, $40 per month.

For amputation below the knee or elbow, $30 per month.

We favor pensions to all honorably discharged soldiers and sailors now disabled or dependent upon their own labor for support, or who are sixty-five years of age, without compelling them to prove at this date that such disability arose from the service.

We favor a just and equitable equalization of the bounties paid by the General Government.

Let the country study these propositions, and let the holders of the Government bonds and the beneficiaries of the soldier's patriotism and blood say, with their hands upon their hearts, that these propositions are unjust and unfair if they can.

But what has been the result in this Congress? I shall have something further to say about this matter later on. I wish to turn aside now and speak of a few of the arguments which have been hurled in our faces here when we have pressed the interests of the soldier in this Congress. There are certain stock matters which certain gentlemen have committed to memory and which they reel off with the fluency of experts in the vindication of the refusal of this House to do anything for the interest of the soldier. They tell us that General Grant vetoed the equalization-of-bounty bill. I state, Mr. Speaker, from the best information I have, there is no truth in the statement. I have it from high sources of information—none higher about this Capitol—that there can not be found in the United States the original or a copy of any veto of that bill ever issued by General Grant or ever communicated by General Grant to Congress. Vetoes are not usually hard to find.

It is not very hard to find the vetoes of the present Executive. They fall as the leaves fall. "They come as the waves come when navies are stranded;" and you can find them. They are gracing, or otherwise, all the records of this Congress. We are full of them. We can furnish them by the dozen or by the hundred. They are on record. The Journals of both Houses show their receipt and the action taken upon them. What Journal of what House of Congress shows the veto by Grant of the equalization-of-bounty bill? It can not be found. The bill failed either between the two Houses or in one of the Houses by other causes, and not by the veto of Grant.

But, it is said, you have been in power here, why didn't you correct these evils? Let me reiterate: These evils did not grow up just after the war. Let me tell my Democratic friends that they have been in power substantially ever since a few Congresses after the war. Who has been Speaker of this House since the war? Colfax, four years; Blaine, six years; Kerr, one term; RANDALL, two terms; Keifer, one term; CARLISLE, two terms. Ten years since the war has the House of Representatives been governed by a Democratic majority. Twelve years has the Committee on Invalid Pensions been the choice of a Democratic Speaker. And during several of the other Congresses when the Republicans had a majority in the House of Representatives the Democrats controlled the Senate. So this argument falls to the ground for that reason; and it falls to the ground for a better reason. The necessity for this improved legislation has not manifested itself until within a recent date. But, Mr. Speaker, I answer the whole of it by saying that I care not who has been derelict in the past.

I care not who has been strongest for the soldier at one time or at another time. I know that the votes which have passed the measures have been to a very large extent the votes of Republicans. I know that the votes that have been given against the relief of soldiers have been almost exclusively the votes of Democrats. I do not pause to note the singular feature of the vote here last winter upon the widows' pension bill. I do not wish to disturb the equanimity or happiness of the friends on the other side of this House. I have no word to say against the honest confederate soldier. I do not wonder that they do not feel the zeal in this behalf that we do. I say, Mr. Speaker, that these confederate generals and colonels and majors and captains and statesmen have been vastly out of proportion in their liberality as compared with the Northern Democrats. The men who in this Congress have hedged the way to the relief of the soldier have not been the confederate gentlemen, but have been the Democratic members from the North, as I will proceed to show you.

I do not wonder, Mr. Speaker, that our Southern brethren—our erring Southern brethren—our returned brethren—the men who boast that they are "in their father's house," and have "come to stay"—I do not wonder that they have feeling upon this question. The brave men of the South who, at the call of what they believed to be patriotism—mistaken, and horrible though the mistake was—are suffering as our men are suffering, and barred from participation in these bounties by constitutional provision, barred by public sentiment, and yet no constitution, no public sentiment can bar humanity. You may pile constitutions as high as mountains between the vote of an ex-confederate Congressman and a suffering and dying comrade of his own command, and you can not strangle humanity; you can not stifle that feeling of comradeship which is as strong between the men of the South as between the men of the North. I hope it may never die. It ought to live. I say when we come to think of the sufferings of our men it is not strange that the men of the South halt and hesitate, and it is not strange that they show irritation when strong words are hurled at them from our side of the Chamber. But they must bear in mind that the stake that they fought for was lost, and the stake that we fought for was won; and the ignis fatuus of the confederacy went down with all its hopes and possibilities "in one red burial blent."

But, sir, we came into this Congress with bright hopes for the soldiers. The campaign of 1884 in the North witnessed protestations on the stump of friendship to the soldier from all sorts of candidates; the men of the North were confident that relief was at hand. Both parties joined in the protestations, and everywhere these candidates for Congress asserted their love of the soldier; and in many of the districts of the North they were elected solely because of these assurances, and could not have been without. How have they kept the faith? Bills have been introduced into this Congress for the relief of the soldiers. At an early day I had the honor to introduce one myself. It is as follows:

A bill to remove the limitations in pension cases, to increase certain pensions, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all pensions which have been, or which may hereafter be, granted in consequence of death occurring from a cause which originated in the service since the 4th day of March, 1861, or in consequence of wounds or injuries received or diseases contracted since that date, shall commence from the death or discharge of the person on whose account the claim has been or is hereafter granted, if the disability occurred prior to discharge; and if such disability occurred after discharge, then from the date of actual disability, or from the termination of the right of the party having prior title to such pension.

SEC. 2. That every person specified in the several classes enumerated in section 4693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the amendments thereto, who served in the military or naval service, as mentioned in said section, for the period of three months during the war of the rebellion, and has an honorable discharge therefrom, and who is or shall become disabled from any cause not the result of his own gross carelessness, disreputable conduct, or vicious habits, and who is dependent upon his own labor for support, shall, upon making due proof of the facts, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the proper authority, be placed upon the list of pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive a pension, during the continuance of such disability, at a rate proportionate to the degree thereof; and such pension shall commence at the date of the passage of this act. The highest rate of pension granted under this section, which shall be for total incapacity to perform any manual labor, shall be $24 per month, which is hereby made divisible upon that basis for any less degree of disability: Provided, That no person entitled to or receiving an invalid pension under any existing laws, or such as may be hereafter enacted, granting pensions for disabilities contracted in the military or naval service of the United States, and in line of duty, greater than that provided for herein, shall receive the benefits of this act; but any applicant for such invalid pension having an application therefor pending, or who shall hereafter file his application for such pension, may, by a declaration over his own signature, at any time, elect to prosecute his said claim under this act or under the general laws; but nothing herein contained shall deprive any pensioner of the right to complete his claim under the general pension laws, and to be pensioned thereunder, deducting all payments made under the provisions of this section.

SEC. 3. That the pensions of all widows, dependent mothers, and fathers who are now drawing $8 per month shall be increased to $12 per month, and the said rate of $12 per month shall hereafter be paid as pension to the widow, mother, or father of the soldier, sailor, or marine whose death is or was due to a cause which originated in the line of duty in the military or naval service of the United States; and said increased rate shall commence only from and after the date of the passage of this act: Provided, That in considering the claims of dependent parents the fact and cause of death, and the fact that the soldier left no widow or minor children, having been shown as required by law, it shall be necessary only to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such dependent parent is without other present means of comfortable support than his or her own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound for his or her support.

SEC. 4. That if any invalid pensioner pensioned for a disability contracted in the military or naval service of the United States, and in the line of duty, has died, or shall hereafter die, leaving a widow or minor child under sixteen years of age, or both, at the date of the death of such pensioner, his widow and minor children shall be entitled, in the order of succession named, to an original pension in their own right, under existing laws, without being required to prove that the death of such pensioner was due to his military or naval service of the United States, and shall receive the rates now allowed by law, except that such as may be found to be entitled to $8 per month under existing laws shall receive in lieu thereof $12 per month.

SEC. 5. That the pensions of minor children shall be increased from $2 to $5 per month, and shall be paid in the same manner as is now provided by existing laws.

SEC. 6. That all pensions hereafter granted on account of minor children shall be continued without limit as to age whenever it shall appear that such minors are of unsound mind or physically helpless, so as to render them incapable of earning a subsistence; and in case of the death or remarriage of the widow having such minors in her care at the date when her pension ceases by law, her pension and the additional pension shall be continued to them in their own right, without limit as to age, during the continuance of such disability, payable to a duly constituted guardian.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the names of such officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines who, while in the service of the United States and while in the line of their duty, were captured and held as prisoners of war, and as such confined in any so-called confederate prison or prison camp, between the 1st day of May, 1861, and the 1st day of May, 1865, and who are now disabled from earning a support by manual labor by reason of disability originating during said confinement as prisoners of war: Provided, That pensions under this act shall be rated in accordance with the actual degree of disability existing, the same as is now provided for pensions under the laws pertaining to pensions for disability originating during the war of the rebellion: And provided further, That the disability in each case shall be presumed to have originated in and during the confinement of such officers, soldiers, sailors, and marines, without requiring them to prove the origin or continuance of said disabilities since discharge from service: And provided further, That the Government shall not be debarred from establishing the fact in any case that the disability or disabilities did not originate by reason of such confinement as a prisoner of war, in which event no pension shall be paid under the provisions of this section: And provided further, That such pensions as are provided for in this section shall commence from the date of discharge of the person entitled to such pension, and shall continue during the period of actual disability: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to entitle any person to receive more than one pension, but that such survivors of the so-called confederate prisons who are now on the pension-roll for disability contracted in the line of duty in the military or naval service shall be entitled to such increase of pension as their disabilities may entitle them under the provisions of this section.

SEC. 8. That in case a dependent mother who has applied for pension and has died, or shall hereafter die, before her pension shall have been allowed or paid, leaving a husband who is the father of the soldier, said father shall have the right to complete the said pension claim of the mother, and shall be entitled to receive all the pension found due the mother.

SEC. 9. That the rate of $13 per month now provided by law as pension for total loss of hearing of both ears be, and the same is hereby, increased to $30 per month for said disability; and for inferior degrees of deafness of either or both ears the said rate of $30 may be proportionately divided according to the degree of disability shown to exist therefrom.

SEC. 10. That the act of Congress approved June 16, 1880, increasing the pensions for total helplessness be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to allow the sum of $72 per month to all those pensioners who would have been entitled to said sum had they been on the pension-roll at $50 per month on the 16th day of June, 1880: And provided further, That all pensioners whose pensions shall be increased by the provisions of this section from fifty to seventy-two dollars per month shall be paid the difference between said sums monthly from the date when they became entitled to $50 under the provisions of the act approved June 18, 1874, to the date of the passage of this act, and such pensioners shall hereafter receive in lieu of all other pensions paid them the sum of $72 per month.

SEC. 11. That the act of Congress approved March 3, 1879, increasing the pensions of certain persons who have lost a leg at the hip-joint, and the act of Congress approved March 3, 1885, increasing the pensions of certain persons who have lost an arm at the shoulder-joint, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to hereafter entitle to $37.50 per month all those who are now receiving $30 for loss of leg or for loss of arm, or for an amputation performed within 6 inches of the hip-joint or within 6 inches of the shoulder-joint, and in such other cases where, in the opinion of the Commissioner of Pensions, the loss of the limb or the existence of a disability in addition to the loss of the limb renders the degree of disability equivalent to the loss of an arm at the shoulder-joint or the loss of a leg at the hip-joint.

SEC. 12. That in all cases where invalid pensions are paid for specific disabilities at a less rate than $50 per month, and it shall be found that there are additional disabilities, proved to have been contracted in the service and in line of duty, such additional disabilities shall be rated in accordance with the degree of disability therefrom, without regard to the amount of pension that the pensioner may be receiving in any case for other disabilities: Provided, That no greater pension than $50 per month shall be paid under the provisions of this section.

SEC. 13. That all acts or parts of acts so far as they may conflict with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

And there were introduced from time to time other bills, bills for all sorts of relief for all the suffering soldiers and their widows and orphans.

Furthermore, I had the honor to introduce the following bill. This bill provides for the enactment of just such a law as nearly all the Northern Democrats had declared they were in favor of. The bill reads:

A bill to equalize the bounties paid by the United States to the volunteer soldiers and sailors of the late war of the rebellion.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be allowed and paid to each and every non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, and private soldier, sailor, and marine who faithfully served as such in the military or naval service of the United States and who has been honorably discharged from such service the sum of eight and one-third dollars a month, including all amounts heretofore paid to each person as a bounty for all the time, including one or more enlistments under which such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, and private soldier, sailor, and marine may have actually served between the 12th day of April, 1861, and the final discharge of such non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, and private soldier, sailor, and marine by the United States if so discharged prior to July 1, 1866; and the provisions of this act shall extend to all soldiers and sailors who were mustered into the service of the United States, to any person who was duly enlisted and mustered as a member of the militia of any State during the time such person was acting with the volunteer forces of the United States or of the regular Army or Navy under the orders of any military or naval officer, and to any person who was duly enrolled in any regularly organized volunteer military or naval force of the United States and who from any cause failed to be mustered, if such person faithfully served out the time for which he enlisted, or if such person was prevented from completing such term for which he enlisted by reason of wounds received or disease contracted while performing the duties of a soldier or sailor, or if such person was otherwise honorably released from such enlistment, then and in that case for the time actually served; but in all cases where there was no muster of the person claiming or of the person on whose account a bounty is claimed under the provisions of this act, the burden of proving such service shall be upon the person claiming: Provided, That in all applications for bounty under the provisions of this act where there was no muster of the person claiming, or if the person on whose account such bounty is claimed, after giving thirty days' notice, in writing, to the claimant, of the time and place, the Government shall have the right to prove that the failure to be regularly mustered was the fault of the person not so mustered, and when such proof establishes that fact it shall be a bar to such claim for bounty, but such fact must be determined from all the evidence filed in the case.

SEC. 2. That in case of the death of any person specified in the several classes enumerated in section 1 of this act, either before or after the passage of the same, the allowance and payment of the bounty herein provided for shall be made, first, to his widow, if she has not remarried, or if there be no widow, or if she has remarried, then to the minor child or children of such person, through their duly appointed guardian; or if there be no minor child or children, then to any child or children of such person; or if there be no child or children, then to the mother of such person; or if there be no mother, then to the father of such person; and in all cases coming within the provisions of this section the burden of proving title to such bounty shall be upon the person claiming.

SEC. 3 That applications for bounty under the provisions of this act shall be made to the Second Auditor of the United States Treasury, and the applicant shall set forth and state specifically the name of each company, regiment, or organization in which service was rendered by the person claiming, or by the person on whose account a claim for bounty is made, together with the date of enlistment into and of the discharge, release, or muster-out from such company, regiment, or organization, and every fact necessary to show a clear title in such applicant to such bounty; and such applicant shall further state, as near as it can be done, the amount of bounty that has been paid, under the provisions of any United States law or laws, to the non-commissioned officer, musician, artificer, wagoner, or private soldier, sailor, marine, or other person specified in section 1 of this act, by whom or on whose account the claim for bounty is made.

SEC. 4. That it shall be the duty of the Second Auditor of the Treasury, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe, to compute and ascertain the amount of bounty that has heretofore been paid under any law or laws of the United States to the person claiming, or to the person on whose account a bounty is claimed under the provisions of this act, and the amount so ascertained to have been paid shall be deducted from the whole amount that would be due if no such payment had ever been made; and in all cases where a balance is found to be due the claimant, payment thereof shall be made under the law, rules, and usages now in force governing such cases.

SEC. 5. That in any case where a person entitled to receive payment of bounty under the provisions of this act shall make application therefor, or where such application shall be made by the proper representative of such person, being deceased, and the discharge of such person has been lost, it shall be competent for the accounting officers to receive, in lieu of the actual production of such discharge, proof of the actual loss of the same and secondary proof of its issue and contents, together with proof of the identity of the claimant or person deceased, under such rules defining the character and form of the evidence as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. And in all cases where there was no muster-in of the person claiming, or of the person on whose account a bounty is claimed, proof of service must be made by comrades or officers, or both, who were actually present when such service was rendered, and the kind of service performed must be specifically set out.

SEC. 6. That declarations for bounty under the provisions of this act, and all affidavits of witnesses, may be verified before any officer duly authorized to administer oaths for general purposes; and if the officer who administers the oath or affirmation has an official seal, then his signature to the jurat thereto attached, together with an impression of his official seal, shall be sufficient; but if the officer administering the oath or affirmation has no seal of office, then and in such case his official character and signature must be duly certified by the proper officer of a court of record, under the seal of such court. All allegations of a claimant and statements of witnesses shall be made under oath or affirmation and under the pains and penalties of perjury; and it shall be the duty of every officer who administers an oath or affirmation to a claimant or witness in any case to carefully read over and fully explain to such claimant or witness the contents of the declaration or affidavit, including interlineations and erasures, before such claimant or witness has signed or is sworn or affirmed to the same; and each witness must state that he or she has no interest, direct or indirect, in such claim, and give their post-office address; and the officer must certify that he did carefully read over and fully explain the contents of such declaration or affidavit to the person who signed and who was sworn or affirmed to the same, including all additions or erasures, and that he has no interest, direct or indirect, in such claim for bounty. But in no case shall any declaration or affidavit be made before any officer who is or who may become the agent or attorney of record in such case; and every person who shall purposely and willfully swear or affirm to a statement knowing it to be false, or if any officer shall make a false certificate in any case, upon conviction thereof such persons shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $500, to which may be added imprisonment for not more than one year.

SEC. 7. That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any person who served as a substitute in the Army or Navy, nor to any person who was discharged at the request of parents or guardians on account of minority, nor shall any assignment, sale, or transfer of a right to bounty under the provisions of this act be valid or of any effect whatsoever.

SEC. 8. That any agent or attorney who shall receive from any claimant a sum greater than $10 for the prosecution of any claim under the provisions of this act, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in any sum not to exceed $100, to which may be added imprisonment for a term not less than one year.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to prescribe such regulations as are necessary to give force and effect to this act; and when the right of any claimant to the bounty herein provided for has been determined, such claimant shall be notified of the result, which notice shall include a complete statement of the amount of bounty heretofore paid to the claimant, or to the person on whose account the claim is made, showing the date and amount of each payment.

That bill died in the hands of the committee. Gone where Democratic promises to the soldier generally go!

The Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House of Representatives has done faithful work in many respects. It has reported a vast number of private pension bills, a few of which have become laws, and many of which have been vetoed by the President, and some of which have fallen between the two Houses. And they have reported back general legislation enough to satisfy the strongest reasonable friend of the soldier, with recommendations that it pass.

What else have they done? On the 10th day of June last I had the honor to call upon the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, Hon. COURTLAND C. MATSON, of Indiana, in the House of Representatives, in the following manner:

Mr. GROSVENOR rose.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Ohio rise?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to move an amendment to this paragraph of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I move to strike out in line 247 the words "clerk to the Committee on Invalid Pensions."

Mr. Chairman, there is no committee of this House which in my judgment has performed more arduous labor than the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and yet, sir, as I look upon the probabilities ahead of us I deem it a waste of public money to continue the employment of that officer.

We came here with the demand upon us, which was responded to and had been responded to by both political parties in this country, that there should be radical changes made in the matter of the general pension legislation; and a large number of bills were presented which voiced and echoed the sentiment of the people and of the political conventions of both parties, as well as the promises of gentlemen who had been candidates for Congress in more than two-thirds of the Congressional districts of the country—sentiments which had been echoed and reiterated upon platforms of both political parties, both State and national. The bills embodying these views found their way into the hands of this industrious and patriotic committee, accompanied as they were by a number of petitions, and special bills granting special pensions were introduced in large numbers.

That committee has reported a number of bills which are in keeping with the sentiment to which I have alluded. They reported, for instance, House bill 4915, amending paragraph 3 of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes; they have reported House bill 7640, to increase pensions in certain cases; House bill 3238, to amend section 4700 of the Revised Statutes relating to invalid pensions; House bill 8098, for pensioning prisoners of war; House bill 2653, for the relief of West Virginia troops, &c.; House bill 1578, relating to claims for pensions by dependent parents, and House bill 663, to repeal the limitation upon the pension act known as the arrears of pensions. All of these bills are upon the Calendar of the House. This House, acting through its majority, has assigned a day to the consideration of nearly every other class of business which has been brought before it by the reports of its committees.

It has assigned days to the consideration of the Banking and Currency Committee's reports; to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; to the Committee on Agriculture; the Committee on the Judiciary; the Committee on American Shipping; in fact, to every committee on everything else in the world except the demands of the Union soldiers of the country. It assigned a day to the consideration of the Mexican pension bill and passed it, and I may not stop here to give my judgment of what the principal consideration that induced that action was. During all this long session of Congress, while members on both sides of the House have been besieged to give attention to these other matters of interest to the Union soldiers of the country, I have not heard that this House has assigned a day to the consideration of these bills. We have not only the bills to which I have referred and others I might name, but we have also Senate bill 1886; and there is not a member here, from any Northern State certainly, if not from the South, who within the last four days has not found his mail burdened by appeals from army posts and everybody else throughout the country asking that action may not be deferred on that bill. These appeals come from all quarters, and yet no day has been assigned its consideration. I do not mean, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, was recognized.

Mr. MATSON rose.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If the gentleman the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions desires now to speak, if the Chair will recognize me next, I will yield the floor to him at this time.

Mr. MATSON. Does the gentleman desire to reply to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I want to add a word in reference to this same section of the bill, but yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will allow me to finish the sentence that I was on.

Mr. MATSON. Certainly.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That it was entirely outside of any intention on my part to charge the Committee on Invalid Pensions with any negligence.

Mr. MATSON. I think the gentleman from Ohio has made the motion facetiously. I am sure he does not intend to insist upon it; and when he comes to discuss the action of the House in reference to the general policy of legislation with regard to pension bills I will have something to say to him in reply.

Upon this question and at this time I want to say only this in reply to his remark in reference to fixing a time for the consideration of general bills covering pension matters, that the Committee on Invalid Pensions have reported to the House a resolution, and if he looks upon the House Calendar, page 29, he will find it favorably reported, asking the House to fix a day for the consideration of that class of business.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes, several bills were favorably reported; but what I complain of is that no day has been assigned for their consideration.

Mr. MATSON. Now, I want to know from the gentleman from Ohio what that has to do with the dereliction of the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions or why this motion should obtain on that account? The gentleman has moved to strike out from this bill the money allowed to the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, while he has admitted that that committee has more work than it possibly can do, having already four thousand bills and three thousand petitions in its hands. He wants to strip that committee of its clerk so that it can not do anything.

What we have been able to do we have only been able to do by help of the clerk; not because the clerks write our reports, but because it keeps them busy to keep the run of the bills. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio is an unfriendly motion to the pensioners of this country. It can not be any other than an unfriendly one, and I think, therefore, as I have suggested, it must have been made facetiously and not in earnest.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. MCCOMAS. I move to strike out the first word, and I yield my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I suppose there is no gentleman on this floor who understands better than the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] that my motion to strike out the appropriation for the payment of the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions was made for the sole purpose of presenting my views very briefly upon the prospect of any future or further pension legislation, and not out of any unfriendly feeling toward that committee, which has so faithfully discharged its labors.

But, Mr. Chairman, what I was saying was that when the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], the leader of one branch of the sentiment of this House, the antagonistic branch to the majority branch of the Democratic branch of this House [laughter]—the gentleman upon whom we on this side of the House rely to prevent the other side from committing any mischief in this country [laughter]—when that distinguished gentleman called forth from the Pension Office the statement that the bill to repeal the arrears act would cost $200,000,000 per annum, I made up my mind that none of this general pension legislation was to pass this House. Therefore it is that I have been watching the progress of events with a feeling of the deepest interest, not that it might not be done, but that it might be done. I am exceedingly anxious that a bill for the relief of dependent parents should be passed, and I care not whose bill is reported or who shall get the credit for it.

I am exceedingly anxious that the bill which has come from the Senate which gives a pension to every disabled soldier who is dependent upon his labor for support shall pass; I am anxious that all these great reforms in this system of legislation shall be enacted by this House, but I have been jealous of the interests of those concerned and even fearful that we should have no such legislation in this Congress. The chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions says that that committee has reported a resolution asking for a day. It is enough for my purpose to know that no day has been assigned. I have been hearing continually for some time that this session is to adjourn somewhere from the 8th to the 15th of July. I know nothing about that; I am not consulted upon the subject [laughter]; but I am now pressing upon the consideration of the other side of the House the proposition that, while every other interest here has been assigned time and a generous allowance of time, this great pension interest (which I concede is as near to the heart of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] as it is to mine) has had no opportunity to be heard upon any pension bill, except the general appropriation bill and the bill to increase the pensions of widows. I now withdraw my proposition to strike out the appropriation for the payment of the clerk of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

I was trying to urge it upon the Invalid Pension Committee that a day be set apart for consideration of these bills. That gentleman made the foregoing reply, and thus promised by fair implication that a request should be made for a day to consider the legislation reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The answer of the honorable chairman was then satisfactory. That was a splendid answer, was it not? It gave the soldiers of the country assurance that he had been ordered by the committee of which he was chairman to ask that a day be set apart for the consideration of pension legislation. Did he ask for a day? If so, when?

On what page of the RECORD of Congress does the application for a day to consider these bills stand? When did he get up and meet the demands of this committee and say to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, "Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that such a day may be set apart for the consideration of the demands of the soldiers of the country?" On what day did he introduce a resolution like this: "Resolved by the House of Representatives that the —— day of —— be set apart for the consideration of bills from the Committee on Invalid Pensions," and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules that they might report it back fixing a day? What day did he do that? When has he opened his mouth since that day upon this important subject? I will answer you. Never! No, never!! The promise that he made or the implied promise that he made when he answered me that he had been instructed to call for a day has not been fulfilled, and no day has been assigned. No day will be assigned. No general legislation, in my humble judgment, is possible. I will gladly join in it if it is possible.

But that is not all of it, Mr. Speaker. The Senate of the United States—the Republican Senate—passed the following bill:

A bill for the relief of soldiers of the late war, honorably discharged after three months' service, who are disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support, and of dependent parents of soldiers who died in the service or from disabilities contracted therein.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That every person specified in the several classes enumerated in section 4693 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and the amendments thereto, who served in the military or naval service, as mentioned in said section, for the period of three months during the war of the rebellion, and has an honorable discharge therefrom, and who is or shall become disabled from any cause not the result of his own fault, and shall also be dependent upon his own exertions for support, or upon the contributions of others not legally bound thereto, shall, upon making due proof of the facts, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the proper authority, be placed upon the list of pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive a pension during the continuance of such disability and dependence at a rate proportionate to the degree of such disability; and such pension shall commence at the date of filing an application therefor. The highest rate of pension granted under this section, which shall be for total incapacity to perform any manual labor, shall be $24 per month, which is hereby made divisible upon that basis for any less degree of disability: Provided, That no person entitled to or receiving an invalid pension under existing laws, or such as may be hereafter enacted, granting pensions for disabilities contracted in the military or naval service of the United States, and in line of duty, greater than that provided for herein, shall receive the benefits of this act; but any applicant for such invalid pension having an application therefor pending, or who shall hereafter file his application for such pension, may, by a declaration over his own signature, at any time, elect to prosecute his said claim under this act or under the general laws, and his pension, when allowed, if prosecuted under this act, shall commence from the date of such election: Provided further, That no pension paid under any law hereafter shall be rated at less than $4 per month.

SEC. 2. That in considering the claims of dependent parents, the fact and cause of death, and the fact that the soldier left no widow or minor children having been shown as required by law, it shall be necessary only to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such dependent parent is without other present means of comfortable support than his or her own manual labor, or the contributions of others not legally bound for his or her support; and such as may be found to be entitled to $8 a month under existing laws, as modified by this section, shall receive in lieu thereof $12 a month from and after the approval of this act.

SEC. 3. That in all applications under the general pension laws, including this act, where it appears by record evidence that the applicant was regularly enlisted and mustered into the service, that fact shall be conclusive evidence of soundness at the time of his enlistment, except in case of fraud.

SEC. 4. That no person shall be entitled to more than one pension at the same time under any or all laws of the United States, whether such pension shall have been already obtained or shall be hereafter obtained, unless the act under which such pension is claimed shall specially so declare.

It was passed by the following yea-and-nay vote (Republicans in Roman, Democrats in Italics):

YEAS—33.

Aldrich,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Allison,	Hale,	Manderson,	Sherman,
Blair,	Hampton,	Miller,	Van Wyck,

All Democrats.

Thus it will be seen that 25 Republicans voted for this bill and 8 Democrats voted for it; no Republicans voted against it and 14 Democrats voted against it. There is the record. And the bill came over here and was sent to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and was brought back and put on the Calendar of the House with the following substitute:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States in the war for the suppression of the rebellion, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, which incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their daily labor for support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide in pursuance of this act, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive, for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor, $12 per month; and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, upon proof that the disability then existed, and continue during the existence of the same in the degree herein provided: Provided, That persons who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Pension Office, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such forms as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to allow more than one pension at the same time to the same person; and rank in the service shall not be considered in applications under this act.

SEC. 2. That no agent, attorney, or other person instrumental in the presentation and prosecution of a claim under this act shall demand or receive for his services or instrumentality in presenting and prosecuting such a claim a sum greater than $5, payable only upon the order of the Commissioner of Pensions, by the pension agent making payment of the pension allowed, except in cases heretofore prosecuted before the Pension Office, when, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions, a fee of $10 may be allowed in like manner to the agent or attorney of record in the case at the date of the passage of this act; and any agent, attorney, or other person instrumental in the prosecution of a claim under this act who shall demand or receive a sum greater than that herein provided for, for his services in the prosecution of the claim, shall be subject to the same penalties as prescribed in section 4 of the act of July 4, 1884, entitled "An act making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1885, and for other purposes."

It is not half so good a bill as the Senate bill, but that is not the worst of it. It has slept "the sleep that appears to know no waking" from the time it came from the committee until now.

I may be mistaken, Mr. Speaker. I would intentionally misrepresent no one. I would make an assault upon no candidate for Congress here, but it is my firm belief that this was a systematic thing; it is my firm belief that it was never intended from the beginning that any considerable amount of general legislation should be had in this House on this subject. Very early in the session, Mr. Speaker, the honorable chairman of the Appropriations Committee [Mr. RANDALL] sent to the Commissioner of Pensions a letter inquiring of him three several matters: First, how much has it cost the Government to date as the result of the repeal of the limitations by the acts of January 25 and March 3, 1879? And he asked him in that connection, "What will be the probable expenditure by reason of said act without regard to the second proposition?" Second, what will be the probable cost if Congress repeal the limitations imposed by said acts of January 25 and March 3, 1879? Third, what will be the additional value of the pension-roll should a pending bill (H. R. 545) become a law, which proposes to increase to $12 the monthly rate of widows, minors, and dependent relatives?"

In answer to this the honorable Commissioner of Pensions figured out a sum so enormous that it paralyzed patriotism in Congress and turned loose the Jew's-harps, the Æolian harps, and the French-harps all over the country to denounce and condemn the struggle for the increase of pension facilities. I do not stop here to criticise the letter of the Commissioner. That has been sufficiently done by other and abler men; and it has been shown that his figures are totally wrong, that the estimates were enormously overstated, and that no satisfactory result could grow out of his figures.

But it had its effect. Whether it had the effect that it was designed to have by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I know not. He was criticised by the Republicans in this House for having interfered with something that he had no business to interfere with; but I do say that if he intended by his letter to lay the foundation to defeat all pension legislation in this Congress—if that was his motive, he could not have more ingeniously gone about his work. Nothing that he could have done would have been more effective. No scheme that his brilliant mind could have conceived could by any possibily have better subserved his purpose. Grand as he is in strategy, incomparable in finesse, unflagging in perseverance, he can never achieve more significant results by any device that he can be capable of putting in motion than he has on this occasion.

But, Mr. Speaker, if he will listen properly he can hear the crash of broken hopes, the clanking of the iron chains of poverty, the sobs of starving orphans, the groans of dying men, the struggles of children and women in the grasp of poverty, as the music that resounds to the ingenious contrivance which he put in motion. The spirit of his side of the House perished under the withering blast of this report. Its patriotism dried up, shriveled, went out; and the evils which we came here to try to remedy are just as bad as they were, and worse, indeed, because of lapse of time.

Days have been assigned to the consideration of revenue measures. Days have been assigned to the improvement of rivers and harbors. Days have been assigned by special order of the House for the consideration of banking and currency questions—questions affecting the national debt, questions affecting the value of the bonds held by the bondholders, questions affecting every class of people who have asked for it. There have been days lavished on interstate commerce; days lavished on oleomargarine; days lavished on fraudulent attempts to build a navy—fraudulent in the sense that there was no real purpose to build a real navy. Refusals have stared nobody in the face except the suffering soldiers of the country, their widows, and their orphans. They have been refused, or that which was equivalent to it.

To the proposition of certain Democrats to add a revenue measure to each pension bill I put up the answer of the committee on pensions of the Grand Army of the Republic made to Congress this year. It is as follows:

BOSTON, MASS., July 1, 1886.

SAMUEL S. BURDETT,
Commander-in-chief Grand Army of the Republic:

The committee on pensions, appointed under resolution of the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, and authorized to speak therefor, feel impelled, through you, in the name and behalf of three hundred and twenty-five thousand veterans, to enter an emphatic protest against the proposition now pending in Congress to attach to all pension bills—and pension bills only—a measure of special taxation to provide for the payment thereof.

This proposition is not to increase the revenues of the Government for general purposes by new taxation, but in effect a declaration that while all other expenditures of the General Government, for salaries, public buildings, river and harbor improvements, and the like, shall continue to be paid from existing sources of revenue, the debt due to the soldiers and sailors of the Republic, for which the most solemn faith of the nation has been plighted, the pensions to the men who gave sight and hearing, limbs and health, and who offered their lives in defense of the nation, shall mercilessly stand aside, unless subjected to the invidious distinction of a special method of taxation.

That every other obligation of the National Government shall be met from the usual and ordinary revenues, but the obligation to the soldier be singled out and alone made to bear the burden of a new and special tax.

That in the payment of pensions, and pensions alone, one class of the people shall be arrayed against another—the tax-payer against the beneficiary—by providing as to pensions, and for no other form of indebtedness, a particular tax for a specified purpose.

Speaking in behalf of our comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, we protest against this measure as the most iniquitous possible, and which the Union veterans of the country will resent and repudiate.

Respectfully yours,

G. S. MERRILL,
JAMES TANNER,
JOHN C. LINEHAN,
JOHN S. KOUNTZ,
Committee on Pensions.

No such condition was attached to the Fitz-John Porter bill. Nor yet to the bills giving great pensions to certain persons. Nor yet the bills to pay any of the other claims of the United States.

The common soldier and the widow and orphans were selected to try this new experiment upon, and we on this side spurn the offer and denounce it.

They have been turned away from this Congress, and I want to say one word to them: What good does it do you to elect a Democrat in the North, pledged, honestly pledged, if you please, to subserve the best interests of the soldier—what good does that do? If you thereby elect a majority of Democrats to the Congress of the United States you thereby elect a Democratic Speaker; and thereby a Democratic Committee on Invalid Pensions, which will repeat the refusal of 1886 in all coming years until you are starved to death. No matter that 49 per cent. of the Democratic side of this House are in favor of you. The 51 per cent. controls the action of the caucus. The 51 per cent. creates the Speaker; the 51 per cent. creates the Committee on Invalid Pensions; the 51 per cent. forbears to give you the day; the 51 per cent. controls the 49 per cent.; and the 100 per cent. strangles you to death.

Mr. Speaker, I would pass into law the suggestions of the pension committee of the national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic. They embrace the best judgment of the best study of this question. It is my opinion, and I give it to you for what it is worth, that the enactment into law of the second section of the bill which I had the honor to introduce, and which has its equivalent in many bills introduced by other members of the House, would not result in an enormous drain upon the Treasury. The principle of that proposition is to simply grant to each soldier and sailor who served honorably for a period of at least three months and was honorably discharged a pension based on the degree of his disability, provided he is indigent and dependent upon his own labor for support. This provision would terminate further prosecution of a very large proportion of the pending claims for arrears. It would give to the suffering soldier something now, and in a large per cent. of cases it is my judgment he would abandon the hopeless task of proving his arrears. It would cut off one-half of the expense of the Pension Office. That is a low estimate. It would stop the demand for perjury in the country. It would be beneficent in its results in every direction.

I have not time to go into detail upon this legislation, thus requested by the Pension Committee. Their recommendations are wise and just. Their adoption by Congress would relieve Congress of the constant cry for aid. The presence in Congress of this vast number of private bills does not signify fraud. The President of the United States is mistaken about that, honestly mistaken, I doubt not; patriotic in the opinion, I doubt not; but erroneously of the opinion I know. The presence of this vast number of bills simply signifies that the general legislation upon the subject of pensions has become defective and worthless, and in their agony these claimants cry out to Congress for relief.

The passage of my bill would relieve all this, and open the door for immediate relief. Would the country be worsted, would the country be injured? I say no. There is no money paid out in this country that is as valuable to the country as money paid the pensioners of this country. It goes to the country as blood goes through the veins and arteries. It goes to the cabins of the starving poor; it returns on the pathway of commerce, into the stores, and into the workshops; and it draws out the vast accumulation of money in the public Treasury and sends it over the land; and in return trade springs up, and commerce grows. I deny that the country is impoverished by the payment of pensions. I believe that a constant payment of $100,000,000 per annum to the worthy pensioners of the country would make this country rich more rapidly than any other plan that has been devised by man.

The country owes it to its honor; the country owes it to its history, that these men should be protected. Other nations have done it. The French veterans of Waterloo, the survivors of the battalions of Napoleon found a home in the great hotel, Des Invalides of Paris; and the British Government sees to it with a jealous eye that no man who was ever decorated with the cross of honor for service to the flag of England shall perish in the poor-houses of the country. No soldier of England wears a decoration to-day that is as honorable as the decoration of the American soldier. The British soldier fights for empire and a crown. The American soldier fought for liberty and the Union. The kingly government cherishes the one as the jewels of its crown. A republican government is willing that these jewels shall die in the poor-houses of the country!

I appeal for these men. I have no interest to subserve but the interests of these comrades of ours. I stand here simply to represent them. I appeal for them. I do not appeal as a creditor to the Government, literally; but I appeal on behalf of the men who saved the Government; and I ask that this great nation, blessed of God with a fruitage of patriotism such as has blessed no other nation in former history, shall see to it that that blessing shall not be turned into a reproach by the failure of the nation to protect him who "bore the burden and heat of the day."

The bill was then passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINANS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order. The Clerk will report the next bill.

WILLIAM J. OWINGS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4097) for the relief of William J. Owings.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that that bill be passed over informally.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

SECTIONS 4756 AND 4757 REVISED STATUTES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4702) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, that bill is not properly before the House this evening, and I ask that it be passed over.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that members present be allowed to call up such bills as they desire.

Mr. GUENTHER, Mr. LAWLER, and others objected.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the bills in their order.

JACOB S. BIDDLE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4712) to place the name of Jacob S. Biddle on the pension-roll.

Mr. LONG. I ask that that bill be passed over.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MRS. JANE R. M'QUAIDE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1852) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane R. McQuaide.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Jane R. McQuaide, mother of F. G. McQuaide, deceased, late a private in Company C, Ninth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred Senate bill 1852, have considered the same, and report:

This bill is for the relief of a dependent mother. The merit of the case is fully set forth in the Senate report appended hereto.

Your committee therefore adopt the same as their own, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The petitioner is the mother of F. G. McQuaide, deceased, late a private in Company C, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. The application was rejected on the ground that the claimant was not dependent on the soldier at the date of his death.

The evidence shows that the father and mother were living on a farm at the time of the son's enlistment, prior to which he had contributed by his labor to their support; that he sent them a portion of his monthly pay; that he died shortly after his discharge from disease contracted in the service; that his father owned a farm, but it was heavily mortgaged, and that the dockets contained innumerable judgments against him; that he died poor, leaving his widow in destitute circumstances; that she is still very needy.

The committee report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on laying this bill aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I think that is a bill that was objected to on a previous occasion, and I ask that it be passed over. The cause of death is not shown.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana that this bill be passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar?

Mr. CONGER. For what reason does the gentleman make that request?

Mr. WALLACE. This bill was taken up about two weeks ago, and was laid aside. The reasons were then very plainly stated, and I think the gentleman who called it up asked that it be laid aside. I have no objection to its coming to a vote, but for the sake of other bills that follow it on the Calendar I would rather that it should be laid aside now, because I shall object to it.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a brief statement, and I think the gentleman will then withhold his objection. It was at my suggestion that this bill was laid aside on the former occasion. I had made the report in the case myself, but it was so long ago that I had forgotten some of the details. I have since taken occasion to get the papers from the Department, and from them it appears that this soldier was discharged from the service on the 22d of June, 1862, for chronic bronchitis and general debility, and that he was sick continuously from that time until the time of his death, which resulted from the same disease.

So that he did not die in the service, but he came home sick and continued sick until he died of the same disease. The application was rejected at the Pension Office because, at the time it was made, the parent was not dependent upon the son. It is also in proof that the son sent home to his father and mother nearly every dollar of his pay, and that the mother is at this time in hopeless poverty. The case is on a par with many others that we have been passing here, and the President has signed several just such bills. I asked that the bill be passed over on a former occasion because I was unable to tell from memory the disease of which the soldier died, but I have since ascertained it from the papers, and it is as I have stated. I trust that this statement will be satisfactory to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Chairman, I can not really say that the statement of the gentleman makes the case any clearer than it was before. I do not see that there is any evidence that the disease was contracted in the service, nor do I think that the report in any way enlightens us as to the cause of the bronchitis, and I think that if such cases are to be pensioned here it will open up a broad avenue leading to an enormous number of cases that are not entitled to pension. I do not think that this is a bill that ought to pass this House.

Mr. CONGER. Why, as to the disease being incurred in the service, the soldier was discharged from the service for bronchitis.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana that the bill be passed over and retain its place on the Calendar.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. CONGER. I object to this bill being passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The question then recurs on the request that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The question was taken; and the chairman stated that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 62, noes 3.

Mr. WALLACE. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. WALLACE, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. CONGER.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the previous question be ordered upon this bill and that it then be laid aside to be reported to the House and that a vote be taken upon it there. That is certainly a fair proposition, because it gives an opportunity for a vote upon the bill when a quorum is present, and all that the gentleman from Louisiana asks is that there shall be a quorum present to pass upon the bill.

Mr. WALLACE. At this late stage of the session it seems to me not quite proper, when we have set aside a special night for pensions and occupy that whole session with nothing but pension business, to take up the time of the House during the day with these questions when there are matters of greater importance to be attended to. For that reason I think the proposition of the gentleman is not fair to the House or to members.

Mr. MORRILL. It will occupy but a few moments to take a vote on the bill. This thing has been done repeatedly.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOCKERY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes; I object to it.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WALLACE and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

Before the tellers had reported,

Mr. MORRILL said: It is agreed that the bill shall go to a full House with the previous question ordered and be submitted to a vote of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. That agreement of course can be made informally——

Mr. MORRILL. We can recommend that course to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of "no quorum" is withdrawn; and the Chair understands the agreement to be that this bill be reported to the House favorably, and that when we get into the House the previous question be ordered and a vote be taken to-morrow when there is a quorum. Is that the agreement?

Mr. RANDALL. I make objection to an order which will require a vote in the House to-morrow on this question.

Mr. MORRILL. Let Monday be named.

Several MEMBERS. Next Friday.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, as the Chair understands, the agreement is modified so that a vote be taken in the House next Friday. At what time?

Mr. CONGER. Immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the order will be understood as applying to next Friday instead of to-morrow.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that when bills are reached on the Calendar——

Mr. GUENTHER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that the House will have adjourned by next Friday.

The CHAIRMAN. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry, but a matter of fact. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] will proceed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that when bills are reached to-night in their order on the Calendar they be passed over informally, retaining their place, unless some gentleman rises and asks for the consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that as bills are called in their regular order on the Calendar each bill as reached be passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar, unless some gentleman rises and asks the consideration of the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CATHARINE LANIGAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar (called up by Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, and Mr. RANDALL) was the bill (S. 2349) granting a pension to Catharine Lanigan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Catharine Lanigan, mother of John Lanigan, late of Company K, Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers, in the late war, at the rate of $50 per month, from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. WALLACE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill S. 2349, submit the following report:

The Senate Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 776) granting arrears of pension to Catharine Lanigan, reported as follows:

"That Catharine Lanigan was pensioned at the rate of $15 per month from March 18, 1882, as dependent mother of John Lanigan, who served as second lieutenant of Company I, Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers, and who died September 11, 1881. A very thorough examination of this claim was made by the Pension Office, and the fact that the soldier died from causes originating in the service was medically established. The dependence of the mother upon the son during his life is shown, and it also appears that she has been bedridden for years. Mrs. Lanigan is now eighty-one years of age, has long been a helpless invalid, and is dependent for support upon the pension allowed her and the exertions of her two daughters. Her title to a pension having been satisfactorily established before the Pension Office, and the rating allowed under the general laws being insufficient for her maintenance in her helpless condition, the committee consider this an exceptional case, which justifies special action and the allowance of a higher pension to Mrs. Lanigan during the brief time that she can receive any benefit from the bounty of Congress.

"We therefore recommend that the original bill (S. 776) be indefinitely postponed, and the passage of the accompanying substitute bill, granting Mrs. Lanigan a pension at the rate of $50 per month."

Your committee find, on thorough examination of the papers in the case, the facts to be substantially as above set forth, to which we desire, however, to add that the proofs show Major Lanigan to have been a most gallant soldier, who, though a great sufferer from disease contracted while in the Army, never during his lifetime sought any relief from the Government. Indeed, your committee are advised that but for physical disabilities incurred during four years' service as a volunteer in the war of the rebellion Major Lanigan might now be holding high rank in the regular Army, a captain's commission having been offered him immediately after the war in appreciation of his gallant conduct, which he declined for the reason that his health was already so far impaired by the disease from which he finally died as to render him unfit for active military duty.

He was practically the only support of his aged, widowed, and helpless mother, who, in the opinion of your committee, is clearly entitled to a pension adequate to her comfortable support during the, at most, very few years she may reasonably be expected to survive.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. WALLACE. I move to amend the bill so as to make the pension $25 instead of $50.

Mr. SKINNER. I desire to ask what amount of pension the Senate bill carried.

The CHAIRMAN. Fifty dollars.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, on last Friday night the friends of the unfortunate woman who is to be the beneficiary of this bill agreed (so as not to interfere with other business) that we would try to reach some compromise upon this case. We have looked over the situation, and we find that this unfortunate bedridden lady is now about eighty-two years of age; and the pension which it is proposed to grant her will cease at her death. There are several members of this House who were well acquainted with Major Lanigan, whose widow this lady is. He was a brave soldier, and was too proud ever to ask anything in the way of pension at the hands of the Government. We now ask that this aged woman be allowed a small pension, barely sufficient to maintain her and her crippled daughter until the mother passes away. I hope the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] will consent to modify his motion so as to make this pension $40. The committee were unanimous in their report in favor of $50. Senators CULLOM and LOGAN, both of whom knew Major Lanigan personally, have interested themselves earnestly in this bill, have interceded in person in behalf of this lady.

Mr. BAYNE. What was the rank of her husband?

Mr. LAWLER. He was a major.

Mr. SKINNER. I desire to ask what amount of pension the original Senate bill carried.

Mr. LAWLER. Fifty dollars.

Mr. SKINNER. If the original Senate bill carried $50, why was a substitute put in?

Mr. LAWLER. There was no substitute; this is the Senate bill.

Mr. SKINNER. The Senate report recommends as a substitute for the original bill a bill granting Mrs. Lanigan a pension at the rate of $50 a month.

Mr. LAWLER. The bill as passed by the Senate proposes to pay this lady a pension of $50 a month; and the House committee has unanimously recommended concurrence in the Senate bill.

Mr. SKINNER. Then it is not a substitute bill?

Mr. LONG. The report of the Senate committee, which has been read, shows that there was a substitute bill which was adopted by that committee in place of the original bill referred to them.

Mr. WALLACE. I think from what General BEAGG said the other night that it was very clear this case was not entitled to so large a pension. I am perfectly willing to make it $30 a month if the gentleman will accept that.

Mr. LAWLER. I will state that the gentleman from Louisiana agrees to make this $30 and we will agree to accept that.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. The gentleman can not accept it. That is for the committee.

Mr. SKINNER. I think $50 is little enough.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from North Carolina offer an amendment?

Mr. SKINNER. No, sir; I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands, then, that there is but one amendment offered, to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I move to amend by making it thirty-five.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I do not desire to detain the committee, but simply want to say that this old lady, eighty-two years of age, has no one to support her except one daughter; and she has another daughter who is an invalid, who is also supported by her sister who is not an invalid. I hope that $30 will be the amount fixed.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment submitted by Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, it was not agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. LAWLER. That is the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Louisiana which I said I was willing to accept.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JOSEPH S. MOODY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 948) granting a pension to Joseph S. Moody.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri. I ask consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph S. Moody, late a private in Company B, Fourth Regiment United States Artillery.

Mr. WALLACE. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 948) granting a pension to Joseph Moody, have examined the same. They adopt the report of the Senate committee, and recommend the passage of the bill.

[Senate Report No. 455, Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 948) granting a pension to Joseph S. Moody, have examined the same, and report:

The petitioner enlisted in Company B, Fourth United States Infantry, October 20, 1845, and was discharged October 20, 1850. He alleges that his disability is the result of measles and a wound received in the battle of Molino del Rey, Mexico. In his advanced years he finds himself broken in health and poor.

The committee report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GENERAL BENJAMIN F. KELLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 838) granting an increase of pension to General Benjamin F. Kelley.

Mr. GOFF. I ask consideration of that bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin F. Kelley, late a brigadier-general in the Army of the United States, at the rate of $100 per month, said pension to be in lieu of that which he now receives.

Mr. WALLACE. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR) is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 838) granting an increase of pension to General Benjamin F. Kelley, have examined the papers in the case, and have adopted the Senate report on said bill as their report, as follows:

It appears from the record that B. F. Kelley was commissioned colonel of the First Virginia Regiment, United States Army, May 25, 1861, and was mustered into the service.

That on August 6, 1861, he was commissioned as brigadier-general of volunteers, to rank as such from May 17, 1861; and that he resigned June 1, 1865.

At the battle of Philippi, the first fought during the war, he was severely wounded and permanently injured by a gunshot wound fracturing the bones of the breast and shoulder, and injuring his lungs. The following extracts from his military history furnish information in regard to his service:

General B. F. Kelley, of West Virginia, raised the very first regiment of loyal troops south of Mason and Dixon's line during the late war, and was commissioned colonel of the regiment May 25, 1861, and mustered into the service of the United States.

By order of General McClellan, then commanding the Department of the Ohio, Colonel Kelley was directed to assume command of all the loyal troops then in Virginia, and all other troops that had been ordered to report to him.

On the 27th of May, 1861, Colonel Kelley left Wheeling with his regiment for Grafton, on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, followed the next day by the Sixteenth Ohio and the Ninth Indiana.

Grafton at that time was held by a confederate force under command of Colonel Porterfield.

On June 1, 1861, Kelley's forces reached Grafton and occupied the place, Colonel Porterfield having retreated to Philippi on the approach of the Union forces.

On the afternoon of the 2d of June, Kelley moved on to Philippi, marching all night through a drenching rain, and attacked the enemy at 4 o'clock on the morning of the 3d.

The enemy was completely taken by surprise and routed; some were killed and many captured. A large amount of stores, arms and ammunition, horses, wagons, &c., fell into the hands of the Union forces.

Colonel Kelley, commanding, was severely, and at first thought to be mortally, wounded, having been shot, while making the charge, through the right breast and the upper part of the lung.

As an evidence of the high appreciation of his conduct, attention is called to the following telegrams from Generals McClellan and Morris:

CINCINNATI, June 3, 1861.

To General T. A. MORRIS:

Say to Colonel Kelley that I can not yet believe it possible that one who has opened his career so brilliantly can be mortally wounded. In the name of the country I thank him for his conduct, which has been the most brilliant episode of the war thus far. If it can cheer him in his last moments, tell him I can not repair his loss, and that I only regret that I can not be by his side in person.

God bless him.

GEORGE B. McCLELLAN.

GRAFTON, June 3, 1861.

SIR: I am extremely pleased and greatly gratified at your gallant and soldierly conduct in the expedition which owes its success to your gallant conduct. I feel that your country owes you a deep debt of gratitude for your services on the occasion, and a grateful people can not but render to you that honor you so richly deserve.

T. A. MORRIS, Brigadier-General.

To Colonel KELLEY:

[Extract from General Morris's report.]

"I am extremely sorry to report that the gallant Colonel Kelley, of the First Virginia Regiment, while leading the attack of his column, fell severely wounded by a shot in the breast. The wound, at first supposed to be mortal, I am glad to know will only deprive us of his valuable counsels and assistance for a few weeks. Much of the success of our attack is due to him. His thorough knowledge of the country, his skill in rendering that knowledge available, his cool and unflinching courage, will deprive us for the time of a great support."

[Extract from General McClellan's report.]

"Colonel Kelley, who conducted the movement on Philippi with marked ability and zeal, received a severe wound early in the action, which at the time was supposed to be mortal, but I am now happy to say he is considered out of danger.

"From the moment he received my orders at Wheeling to move on Grafton up to the time he was wounded, he has exhibited in an eminent degree the qualities of an efficient commander, and I take this opportunity of renewing my recommendation for his promotion to the rank of brigadier-general."

It will be observed that General Kelley not only organized the first loyal regiment in the entire south, but that he fought and won the first victory achieved on Southern soil, in which he was severely wounded. The war record shows an unbroken series of brilliant achievements by him during the whole war.

General Kelley is now in his seventy-ninth year, and for the want of means necessary to the support of himself and family, he has been forced to seek and accept a subordinate position in the Pension Office, where he is subject to all the rigid rules and exactions incident to the conduct of that Department.

He is frequently disabled for duty in consequence of an almost constant cough and other effects of his wound, which necessarily involves loss of time and pay; and in the course of nature he will soon be totally disabled for clerical duty.

Your committee, in view of the marked and peculiar services rendered by General Kelley, which makes his case an exceptional one—considering the fact that he raised the first Union regiment south of Mason and Dixon's line, fought the first battle, and was the first officer wounded in the war, and that after recovering he continued in the service with marked ability to the close of the war, receiving many testimonials of approbation from his commanding officers and the Government, and considering his age and necessities—your committee are of the opinion that, now in his advanced age and still suffering from the effects of his wound, he should be relieved from the necessity of daily physical labor for his support.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask the gentleman who reports this bill a question: What amount is General Kelley now receiving?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Twenty-two dollars and a half a month.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This seems to be a large increase.

Mr. WALLACE. I would like to ask why it is that this report comes from the Committee on Pensions? The Committee on Invalid Pensions considered this bill and an adverse report has been made. I should be glad, therefore, to hear from some gentleman on that committee why they made an adverse report. The case was not passed through that committee, and it is rather peculiar that it should pass through the House under the circumstances. I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] made the adverse report, and I should be glad if he would give the reasons before the vote is taken.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I do not know, Mr. Chairman; but will yield the floor to the gentleman from Kentucky, who will perhaps explain it.

Mr. TAULBEE. As well as I remember about this case it was reported adversely, and the reasons were stated in the report, which I think I submitted in the case.

This is a bill which was brought to my notice by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF]. I called his attention to the report submitted by the committee, and perhaps at my request, in the House on his motion, the bill was placed upon the Calendar with the adverse report. My recollection is that the reasons assigned for the adverse report were that the beneficiary in this bill was an employé in the Pension Office, therefore having access to the medical board for examination, giving him every facility to procure under the general law the pension to which his disability entitled him. I am not sure that the reason was stated in the report, but it had something to do with the case, that General Kelley was borne on the soldier's roll of the Pension Office at $100 a month. These matters induced the committee to report adversely, and that is all I remember about the case. From the evidence, as borne in the record and before our committee, General Kelley had a most excellent record as a soldier.

Mr. DORSEY. The gentleman from Kentucky is correct in his recollection as to the grounds stated in the report on which they rejected this case, that he was employed in the Pension Office, and having that position was not entitled to a pension.

Mr. TAULBEE. Lest the remark might be misunderstood I wish to say that the fact of his being employed in the Pension Office, considered in the abstract, was not the cause of the adverse report. But being employed in the Pension Office, in the opinion of our committee, gave him every facility to avail himself of the general pension laws by the action of the medical board of examiners in the office, coupled with the further fact that in consequence of his gallant service as a soldier and his injury received in the Army he was borne on the soldiers' roll of the Pension Office at a large salary.

These two facts considered together were sufficient to induce the Committee on Invalid Pensions to recommend that the bill do lie on the table.

Mr. GOFF. The gentleman from Kentucky is mistaken in one respect, and yet in another respect he is correct. The bill that the gentleman from Kentucky alludes to was introduced by me in this House and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Previous to the time that that committee considered the bill a bill was introduced in the Senate, passed the Senate, was received by the House and referred to the Committee on Pensions. The Committee on Pensions considered the case fully. Such evidence as I had I submitted to that committee, as they had the matter under consideration. They made a favorable report to this House unanimously. The report has been read by the Clerk to-night.

When the gentleman from Kentucky, as a subcommittee, came to consider this bill he did it without any evidence before him, because the evidence in the case had already been submitted to the Commtitee on Pensions, and without evidence he nevertheless, with this magnificent record staring him in the face that the gentleman has alluded to, and owing to the fact that this old man was in the service of the Government when this report was made, submitted an unfavorable report. I submit to the gentleman he would not have made that report nor would a member of the committee have acquiesced if the evidence which was laid before the Committee on Pensions had been considered by the Committee on Invalid Pensions. And most undoubtedly it was not necessary to submit that evidence to the committee of which he was a member when another committee had already taken jurisdiction of this case and had reported it favorably to the House. I ask that this House will pass this bill according to the unanimous report of the Committee on Pensions. There has not been a more meritorious measure submitted to the consideration of the Congress of the United States. The case of this old man is as full of merit as he was of loyalty in the hour when the country needed loyal men.

This is not an unusual thing. The amount recommended here is not unusual. It is the same amount that the Congress of the United States voted to General Black, the present Commissioner of Pensions. It is the same amount that the Congress of the United States voted to that gallant old soldier of more than one war, General Shields. It is the amount that the Congress of the United States in the days gone by, when committees recommended $50 a month as they did in General Shields's case, intervened, and struck out $50 and inserted $100; as they did in General Black's case, when the $50 recommended was stricken out in the Senate of the United States and $100 inserted. It is not unusual; and if members of this House were as familiar with the facts in this case as I am I do not believe there is one who would hesitate to vote in favor of this measure.

I have known this applicant. He is not asking for charity. He is asking for justice. He is asking the American Congress to do naught but justice to one of the gallant soldiers of the American war for the Union. I met this man twenty and odd years ago when he was in the flush of his manhood and I of my boyhood. I met him west of the Alleghanies when he was carrying the first banner of the Union Army that floated in the breeze there, around which the young men of that country rallied. When the President of this Republic called for troops to sustain it in the hour of our direst necessity he was the first man that unfurled that banner west of the Alleghanies, in a land, it is true, Mr. Chairman, where others who differed with him raised another banner. But all who believed as he and I did rushed forward under the standard that he bore. He fought the first battle of the war of the rebellion. He was the first soldier that fell on any field pierced with an enemy's bullet. You see that from the dispatch sent to him by General McClellan, then commanding in West Virginia.

It surely can not be brought against him to-night that he is upon the soldiers' roll of the Government. He is doing to-night as he has done from his boyhood, earning an honest living not only for himself, but he is earning an honest living for the orphan children of his dead son, who went down to death in order that his country's flag might float. And that old man, burdened with his fourscore years, for he is eighty years old, gentlemen, will not long receive your bounty if you give it to him. He has been struggling these twenty-odd years for a living for himself and his wife and the children of his dead son. Without crossing a "t" or dotting an "i" I ask the American Congress to be just to this brave old soldier.

Mr. TAULBEE. I presume every member present understands I have an aversion to consuming the time of the House on Friday nights or at any other time when the occupancy of the floor by myself or any other member interferes with the progress of business, and I did not think my remarks could have been construed as offering any objection to the passage of this bill. I was called upon by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WALLACE] to state why it was that our committee had reported this case adversely, and I tried briefly to state the reason. I regret that the remarks of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] make it necessary, as I believe, in order to prove my vindication and the vindication of my committee, that I should now state some of the objections we had to reporting this case favorably. The gentleman endeavors to impress the Committee of the Whole with the belief that I, as a subcommittee, and the Committee on Invalid Pensions acted on this case without the evidence. In that he is altogether mistaken. We had the evidence before our committee.

We called upon the Pension Office for the record of the case of General Kelley; I investigated it diligently and carefully, and I understood fully the evidence in the case before I submitted my report to the committee. The gentleman says that the Committee on Invalid Pensions would not have reported the case adversely had we had the evidence before us that was before the Committee on Pensions. If there was any evidence submitted to that committee without having come from the Pension Office, I confess that we did not have it, but that was not our fault; it was the fault of the gentleman who was looking after this case that that evidence, if any such is in existence, was not submitted to our committee.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is another question involved. After this case was submitted to our committee and it became known to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] that our committee would not recommend the passage of the bill, the Senate bill was referred to the Committee on Pensions, when, under the rule, it should have been referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that reference was no doubt made for the reason that the gentleman having the bill in charge could not hope for a favorable report from the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GOFF. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. TAULBEE. Certainly.

Mr. GOFF. The gentleman will find, from the records of the House, that the Senate bill passed and was referred here long before he made his report.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Yes; the gentleman from Kentucky is entirely in error on that point.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, as to the time when this bill came from the Senate of course I do not know, but I presume that it was after it was known to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] that a favorable report could not be had from the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. GOFF. Not at all.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Not at all.

Mr. TAULBEE. For, Mr. Chairman, I could not and I can not understand why it is that after this bill was passed by the Senate and brought to this House and referred to the Committee on Pensions, a new bill covering the same matter should have been introduced and referred to a different committee.

Mr. GOFF. The gentleman well knows that it is very common for bills to be introduced in both Houses at the same time and in relation to the same matters.

Mr. TAULBEE. Was that this case?

Mr. GOFF. That was the case here.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then, Mr. Chairman, what I said is correct.

Mr. GOFF. But the bill had passed the Senate and came to this House before you made your report at all.

Mr. TAULBEE. If the bill had passed the Senate and had come to this House before the introduction of the bill on which our committee acted, then I am correct and the gentleman from West Virginia is wrong.

Mr. GILFILLAN. The gentleman from West Virginia did not say that.

Mr. TAULBEE. Even, Mr. Chairman, if the bill came from the Senate before the report from our committee was submitted, that does not argue in favor of the position of the gentleman from West Virginia, for the gentleman well knows that long before the report from our committee was submitted I told him the action of that committee, and informed him that a favorable report could not be had.

Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to grant a pension of $100 a month. It is known to this House that it is the well-established rule of the Committee on Invalid Pensions not to recommend the granting of pensions of $100 a month. Our committee has taken the position that the private legislation that is had at these Friday evening sessions should be for the relief of suffering soldiers; that the money that we vote away here in pensions should be for the relief of actual want. Therefore, where the Government is undertaking to provide for a soldier, and provides as well for him as it does for General Kelley, who now receives for his services and by way of pension $122.50 a month, we do not consider that to increase the pension is just to the other soldiers of the country, many of whom, with meritorious claims, are to-day without any pension at all. Our efforts have been directed toward aiding those who need relief, who are actually in suffering or destitute circumstances. Upon that principle our committee has acted, and I believe that has been the general course of the House at its Friday evening sessions for the consideration of pension bills.

Mr. CUTCHEON. May I ask the gentleman what he means when he speaks of a pension of $122.50 a month?

Mr. TAULBEE. I did not say anything of the kind. The gentleman misunderstood me.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I thought you did not mean it; but I understood you to say so.

Mr. TAULBEE. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BRADY. You said that.

Mr. TAULBEE. I beg pardon, but I did not say it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. TAULBEE. If the gentleman will allow me, this is what I said: That when the Government undertook to provide for a soldier, as it did in the case of General Kelley, who was now receiving for his services and by way of pension $122.50 a month, we did not think it proper to increase the pension in this way. That is what I said.

Mr. MORRILL. One hundred dollars for his services, and $22.50 a month as a pension.

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, as I reported this bill I should like to say a word or two in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] who has just taken his seat. I did not know that the Committee on Invalid Pensions had in its charge any bill for the relief of General Kelley when this bill was referred to our committee. Hence it was not with any object of taking jurisdiction away from the Committee on Invalid Pensions——

Mr. MORRILL. Will you allow me to ask a question?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Certainly.

Mr. MORRILL. Did you not know when you considered this bill that it had been improperly referred to your committee? Did not the very face of the bill show that fact?

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I really never thought about it at all. If anybody is to blame for the erroneous reference of this bill it is the House or the Speaker or the clerks—not our committee. We did not think about that question at all. The House referred the bill to our committee. When we have discovered that bills of this kind have been improperly referred to us we have reported them back in order that they might receive correct reference.

I wish to explain my connection with this bill. I have been as careful and scrupulous about reporting any bill for an increase of pension as any man, either on our own committee or on the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and I believe I can say I have opposed in the Committee on Pensions more bills for the increase of pensions than any other member of that committee. I did not know anything about the Committee on Invalid Pensions having this bill.

Now, as to the merits of this case. This gentleman is nearly eighty-one years old——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Seventy-nine.

Mr. ZACK. TAYLOR. He is very feeble. He was shot through the lungs during the war; and if members of this House really knew the circumstances of this case, I do not think any one would have the parsimony to vote against giving him this increase of pension. He deserves it as much as any soldier ever did. I feel that I am only discharging a public duty in voting for the passage of this bill.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, so far as concerns any conflict of jurisdiction between committees of the House in reference to this bill, I have heard that question raised for the first time to-night. After this bill had passed the Senate, as I felt a great deal of interest in securing its favorable consideration, I inquired which committee of the House had it in charge, and was directed to the Committee on Pensions. I was not aware that any bill on this subject was before the Committee on Invalid Pensions; and I of course took it for granted that the reference to the Committee on Pensions was a proper one in accordance with the distribution of committee work in this House. I went before the Committee on Pensions, and called attention as best I could to the facts upon which, as it seemed to me, this application might justly rest; and I am glad to say this committee promptly reported the Senate bill to the House with a unanimous recommendation that it receive favorable action. That report I find was made on the 3d day of June. The report made by the gentleman from Kentucky from the Committee on Invalid Pensions was made on the 22d day of June, nearly three weeks thereafter.

Now, I am sure the Committee of the Whole is not going to allow this bill to be prejudiced because of any conflict of jurisdiction between the committees that have considered it. I desire to occupy only a few moments in calling attention to the facts which give this bill its peculiar merit, and which in my judgment make it one which this House without question ought to pass just as it came from the Senate.

General Kelley is a West Virginian—not from my district, but from the district represented by my colleague [Mr. GOFF]. It is not contended by those who champion General Kelley's cause here that he was one of the great commanders of the late war; that he ever gained a great and imposing victory or ever commanded a large army in a conspicuous field. But it is contended, and it is proved by the report in this case, and by the records of the war, that his services were of so useful a character as to have been more effective for good and to have contributed more to the substantial results of the war than the services of some men who did command great armies, who figured in the bulletins and histories of the war and in the newspapers.

This report shows that early in May, 1861, before the State of Virginia had adopted her ordinance of secession, although she had her armed forces in the field, General Kelley was commissioned to raise the first regiment raised in any Southern State; that without a moment's hesitation, while all around him were wavering, and while in the northwestern section of Virginia there was such diversity and conflict of opinion that few men could tell whether they would stand by the Union or follow the mandate of the State; under these circumstances, when to decide and act promptly was of more consequence than much greater achievements at any later stage of the war, General Kelley promptly raised his regiment, marched against the opposing forces, fought the first fight, and gained the first victory of the civil war. Very few of us remember anything of that fight at Philippi, a village in my own Congressional district; but those who can go back in memory to that date will recollect what was the effect from one end of this country to the other—the moral effect both North and South—of the brilliant little skirmish fought by General Kelley in that town of Philippi, a skirmish in which he received those fearful wounds he bears upon him to-day, bringing him pain and suffering and disabling him in his old age from any work by which he can support his family.

Mr. Chairman, all of General Kelley's operations, so far as I am informed, were in the section of country which I have the honor to represent on this floor. He fought his first fight there. I represent here many of the soldiers who fought under General Kelley, and I represent a still larger number of the soldiers who fought against him. Gentlemen who live in the Northern States and gentlemen who live in the Southern States do not realize what it was to live in a border community where sentiment was divided, where, when the war came, men from the same household buckled on their armor and went into opposing armies. It was in just such territory as this, where neighborhood was divided against neighborhood, county against county, family against family, and often members of the same family arrayed against each other, that General Kelley conducted his operations during the war. And it gives me pleasure on this floor to-night to say—having differed with my colleague on the other side, as he, a school-boy, went in one direction and I went in the other—it gives me pleasure on this floor to-night to testify on behalf of the soldiers I represent, both those who fought against General Kelley and those who fought with him, that no act this committee could pass could give them greater pleasure than to grant this old veteran this substantial pension for the few remaining months of his life. [Applause.]

Those who fought under him know he was skillful and prompt and courageous. Those who fought against him testify to that; and they further testify that in just such a community as I have described, where brother was arrayed against brother, where the horrors of war were aggravated by rapine, by plunder, and by oppression which other communities escaped, General Kelley never struck a foul blow and never failed to put forth his arm, and to put it forth vigorously and promptly for the protection of defenseless non-combatants. I say this, sir, in justice to the man. [Applause.]

Now, as to the principle involved in this pension, I know we are trying to place this old veteran in a very small and select list. There are but two, not more than two soldiers of the war who are receiving as much as $100 a month. General Shields had such a pension voted to him. General Black, I believe, has such a pension voted to him. Some colonel from Pennsylvania whose name I do not remember, but General Osborne championed his bill on this floor, has had a like pension granted to him by a yea-and-nay vote in this House. We present this old veteran, seventy-nine when the bill was introduced, eighty now; in the course of nature having but a few months more, or, at most a few years more, to live—bearing, I say, these honorable wounds received in the first skirmish of the war, one whose services by reason of their promptness, of their decision, of the time he struck, and the circumstances under which he struck were so valuable and useful to this country and contributed so much to the subsequent current of events in the section in which his military operations occurred; and it seems to me when we state these facts we do make out that exceptional case which entitles him to the favorable consideration of the House and of the country for the pension which his friends request.

It is true that General Kelley, under the stress of poverty—and poverty when it is accompanied with extreme old age is a fearful pressure to be under—under the stress of poverty has accepted a clerkship in the Pension Office, subject to the discipline the other clerks there are subject to, compelled to sit at his desk and comply with the rules that young and vigorous men are compelled to comply with, suffering with his wounds, with weakness and decrepitude; but to-day he is not there except under dire necessity of poverty, and it is to relieve him of this pressure and to enable him, as I said before, in the few months, or as we hope in the remaining years of his life, to have some of the repose and freedom from anxiety to which he is justly entitled, that I, speaking, I say, for both sides, for those who fought under him and those who fought against him, appeal to this House to pass this bill as it came to us from the Senate. [Applause.]

Mr. PRICE was recognized.

Mr. WILSON. I yield to my friend from Kentucky such time as he may desire.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin, but will afterward recognize the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to move that the bill be amended by striking out the sum fixed, namely, $100 per month, and inserting in lieu thereof the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. MORRILL. That is what he gets now.

Mr. PRICE. I am informed by those who know the facts that he gets a pension of $22.50 a month; but I am told also by men skilled in military affairs, and especially in the pension laws, that the rank he held would entitle him under these laws to a pension of $30. He does not therefore receive, according to that statement, what he is entitled to under the law. But it does not matter to me, Mr. Chairman, whether he gets 30 cents or $300 a month. I want the broad, general, comprehensive rule established and enforced and made applicable in this and similar cases that you apply to all other American soldiers; and I want the same rule you enforce with reference to them applied to this man—gallant, self-sacrificing, and skillful though he may have been.

If I could be seduced from the path of duty I do not doubt but that it would be by the eloquence and fervid utterances of my friend from West Virginia who has just taken his seat. If I could be governed by my sentiments instead of my honest convictions of what I believe to be a spirit of justice to all of our soldiers, I would vote for the passage of this bill.

But yet, Mr. Chairman, you must not forget the fact that he alone, gallant as he was, did not do all the fighting and did not win the victories. You must not forget the important fact that when he carried the starry banner into the enemy's country, as stated so eloquently by the gentleman, and won the first fight, that there were other men with him who did the fighting, who did the hard, stern duty of war, on the march, in the camps, and on the field, and that he alone should not be accredited with all the honor of the victory.

If we had a pension of $100 a month for all of our disabled soldiers who won victory in the face of danger and death, I would most cheerfully vote for it in this case. But I protest in the name of justice to all our American soldiers against the unequal and discriminating policy of giving a large sum to one and a slender pittance to the other. I would have all of them placed upon an equal footing and treated alike. Why should they not be?

My experience and observation in this world, Mr. Chairman, lead me to the conclusion that there were men in the ranks who were just as gallant, just as brave and as self-sacrificing; men who loved the flag as well, in whose veins the patriotic blood flowed just as warmly and tingled with just as much ardor and enthusiasm as in the case of the commanders; and it is not right, in common justice to these men, to permit sentiment to control our action in such a case as this, deserving as this man may be, and lead us to forget the fact that we have not $100 a month for all.

It is in conflict with every principle of justice; it is opposed to every consideration of right; and when the time shall come, if it ever does come, which God forbid, that we shall need our gallant soldiery to unfurl that banner in an enemy's country, your policy, this policy that gentlemen are pursuing here, will enable you to get men, too many of which we had before as simple commanders, but not enough men to create the great rank and file without which it would be impossible to win victories or prevent disaster.

I have no desire to make further speeches. I have no wish to consume the time of the committee. I know what I want to do. I know what you will do. I know if you start a proposition here with a brigadier-general behind it, and invoke the fervid eloquence of my friend from West Virginia and of some gentleman on this side of the House, you will carry it through with a rush, following blindly the path that is marked for you in a manner which does credit to your hearts but does little honor to your brains.

My friend on the right here tells me to shut up. [Laughter.] Well, perhaps I ought to. I know I can not make as good a speech as he does. He relies on his heart for his inspiration, and I on mine tempered somewhat with such little brains as I may possess.

I therefore, sir, move you, as I said, to strike out $100 where it occurs in this bill and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," which will give him, as I understand, $30 a month.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now recognize the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I suppose it is really unnecessary to say a word in support of this case, and yet it presents an aspect which renders it pleasant for me to ask your indulgence for a few moments upon it.

I know better than the gentlemen who represent the extreme Northern or Southern States the condition of things in the border States during the spring of 1861. It was a condition of affairs that probably had no parallel in history, and has not had justice done to it in the lives of the men who claimed power, which was somewhat obscure but extraordinarily important, if not vital. There were in these States, especially in the mountain regions, such as in West Virginia, parts of Tennessee, and parts of Kentucky, as well as portions of North Carolina, a certain number of men who, it is not too much to say, perhaps saved the Federal Union.

I do not mean to say, Mr. Chairman, that it might not have had the same result if there had been no division, because it is impossible for human intelligence to say that the result would have been different; but I do mean to express my own opinion that if in the month of April, when Sumter fell, there had been that unanimous impulse that carried certain States out in those mountain regions, so that West Virginia, Tennessee, and Kentucky had gone with enthusiasm and all their vigor, it is not at all unlikely that the result would have been very different from what it was.

I know something of that period. I was so peculiarly situated that I happened to have somewhat of the confidence of men who were on extreme sides; and I know that the efforts of a few resolute, determined, and heroic men gave the necessary breathing time to organize the Union sentiment of the border land. I can afford to say this, although I disagreed toto cœlo with those men. I can speak from personal knowledge of one of them who is here to-night. There were in the State of Kentucky three distinct parties of three distinct modes of thought—the men who believed in going South, the men who believed in fighing for the Union, and the men who were not quite sure which side they would take. And we men who were for going South waited, hoping we could get that middle element. But such men as General Wolford and Bramlett and Rousseau in Kentucky put arms into their hands, and into the hands of a few men; and that gave to the Federal administration the opportunity to organize in the State of Kentucky and carry Kentucky away from us and make it give seventy-five thousand soldiers to the Federal Government.

In the State of Tennessee there was a similar manifestation. In East Tennessee and in Virginia there was a similar body of men, mostly residing in West Virginia. I speak of things which may have been forgotten, but which I know to be true.

Another thing I wish to speak of, Mr. Chairman. Those men during the war when they could be harsh were kind; when they could be oppressive were generous; when they could be dishonest had clean hands. It was not by that class of men that the rapine and plunder and the oppression of which my friend from West Virginia speaks was countenanced nor was it from them it came. Those men who with simple fidelity at the beginning of the war stood by their conviction were of the class of whom we are told that—

> The loving are the daring
> And the gentle are the brave.

They were the men that gave to us confederates when we returned our rights and our privileges, for having fought like heroes they were willing to forgive like gentlemen.

Now, sir, to that class of men this applicant belongs. I never saw him; I do not know that I ever will see him; but I know the type of man to which he belongs—prompt to do what he thinks is right, with the convictions that lead him in the line of duty, and with the courage to stand by his convictions; brave in the discharge of any duty, but discharging it with kindness, with liberality, and with magnanimity. Now wounded and aged, he comes to the country,that he helped in the time of her peril and asks for a mere support.

Mr. Chairman, I am not much given to voting pensions, because I reserve the right as a Representative to select out of the cases such as seem to me to be proper; but when it is a proper case to give a pension I do not want to dole it out, counting the nickels as I dole them; but I want to give it with a generosity that shall be somewhat commensurate with the generosity with which the blood was given by the applicant for the pension. [Applause.] And whenever another war comes you need not tell me privates will not volunteer because they do not get pensions. It was not the pension-seeking soldier that saved the Federal Union. It was not your bounty-men who saved it. It was the volunteer that went in early. It was the man that did it out of a sense of duty. It was the soldier who felt he was under the star-spangled banner of his country fighting for what he believed to be the right, fighting as he believed to save his country. They are the men who are going to save it again. [Applause.]

All this idea that there was a merchandise in blood and that a man sold his services for so many pieces of silver is not a just tribute to our brethren who fought in that glorious, even if it was a sad and disastrous, war. For myself, sir, I feel they were my brethren although I fought against them. In some homes there are crossed swords, one of which was held by a grandfather that fought on one side and another by a grandfather that fought on another. In many an English home there are such relics of the past; and the sons that inherit the commingled blood of the men that fought in the wars of the Roses or as Cavalier and Roundhead look back to the days when their ancestors fought, not with carping criticism as to the side, but with tender and grateful memories of the courage and heroism displayed. And I do not hesitate to predict in this Hall of the American Congress that the day will come when the memories of our soldiers, ay, sir, I repeat, our soldiers, whether they wore the blue or wore the gray, now buried in indistinguishable graves will be indistinguishable in their memory and the grateful recollection of our posterity. That day has not come now, but it will come; it will come because in your great war those soldiers were exemplars of manhood, of heroism, of devotion, of courage; and standing in my place to-night I want to hurry on the dawn of that day by giving to this old soldier the meed of my praise, the tribute of my admiration, the humble obeisance of my respect accompanying it. We ought to vote not for him only, but for every gallant soldier who through conviction did honestly do his duty. God bless them where they live. Upon their graves I have naught but a wreath of flowers to lay. [Great applause.]

Mr. CUTCHEON. I can say in one minute or less all that I desire to say on this case. We are told that this old man is at work in the Pension Office as a common clerk, and that is urged here as a reason why his pension should not be made larger. I desire simply to say that this Government ought not to allow this old man to work another day—this man, eighty years old, who gave his young life and his young blood to his country. I think this Republic is great enough and rich enough to take that burden off his shoulders and give him whatever is necessary for his comfortable support during the remainder of his days. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, after the sentiment of the House has became so apparent under the eloquent appeals of the friends of this bill, I do not know that it is necessary, or even proper, that I should say another word, but, while I agree with every sentiment of admiration expressed here for the patriotism and the courage and the devotion of this soldier, as well of the other soldiers who fought for the Republic, I wish to call the attention of the House and of the country to the fact that there are hundreds and thousands of soldiers throughout this land who fought as gallantly for the flag that we all love as did this man, who received wounds in the service rendering them unable to procure a livelihood by their labor, and who are drawing pensions ranging from two to eight dollars per month.

It is in the name of the soldiers who followed, not those who led, the soldiers who bore the muskets and knapsacks that I appeal to you as the American Congress, feeling that I am backed by the men to whose muscle and courage and blood is due the safety of this Government which guarantees to us and to our constituents the privileges which we enjoy. Go, Mr. Chairman, to the humble homes of these private soldiers of the mountain region of which my colleague has spoken so eloquently; go into my own district, if you please, where we are not blessed with great men [laughter], but where the private soldiers rushed to the rescue of their country at the first tap of the drum; go to their humble homes as I have gone, sit down by their firesides, look at the evidences of poverty, dejection, and want; see those soldiers with their wounds yet open, look at the evidences of distress as you read in their pale faces the story of their sufferings during the war and since. I appeal to my colleague to turn his eloquence in the direction of benefiting those to whom the most honor is due and to whom pensions would bring relief from actual suffering and want.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Will my colleague allow me to say that he has never reported a bill that I have had a chance to vote for that I have not voted for it, just in blind faith, asking no questions, being willing to follow him in any kind act that his sense of duty prompted?

Mr. TAULBEE. I am very much obliged to my colleague, but, Mr. Chairman, I was laboring under a mistake—I did not think that my colleague had voted for the widows' increase bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Ah, that was not reported by you as an individual case.

Mr. TAULBEE. Perhaps I did not make the report, but I advocated the bill, and that is the kind of bill, Mr. Chairman, that I shall always be found ready to advocate, a bill that goes out and ramifies through the different sections of our country and seeks out the suffering soldiers and their widows and gives them relief.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. TAULBEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Why did not you report Senate bill 1886, to pension all the disabled soldiers?

Mr. MORRILL. We did.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. You did, but you cut it all to pieces. You cut the heart out of it.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the gentleman understands just what we did in that particular. We did report a bill that proposed to relieve those suffering men, the soldiers of the Union, who were in needy circumstances and unable to procure a living by their labor, regardless of how their disability was incurred, whether before or during or since the war. I voted in favor of that bill in committee. I have urged it upon this House, and I am ready to-night, to-morrow, or at any other time, as long as I have a seat upon this floor, to vote for that and all similar bills.

But, Mr. Chairman, this bill is different. I agree that such men as General Kelley rendered gallant service to the Union cause, and that to such men as General Kelley is due the Union of the States to-day. But shall we say that all the honor is due to one man or one set of men? Shall we say that the victory of the Union arms was won by the officers or by a few? I enter my protest against such assertions. I say that it was the hard-handed private soldier who bared his bosom to the storm of shot and shell and stood to his flag on every battlefield that saved the Union, and that to him is due the praise and the gratitude of this and all future generations.

Mr. NEECE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out "$100" and inserting "$50," so as to make this pension $50 a month.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE] what family General Kelley has.

Mr. TAULBEE. I do not know; perhaps the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] may be able to tell us.

Mr. GOFF. He has a wife and two grandchildren.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. An aged wife and two grandchildren dependent upon him?

Mr. GOFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. WINANS. What is the age of the grandchildren?

Mr. GOFF. I do not know exactly; but they are along in their teens.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Are they still at an age when they require to be educated?

Mr. GOFF. Yes, sir.

A MEMBER. What are their ages?

Mr. GOFF. I do not remember—some fourteen or fifteen years.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, after the forcible arguments and eloquent appeals made to this House I think there is not any substantial ground for difference of opinion upon the points which have been considered. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. TAULBEE], a member of one of the committees, opposes this bill and does so upon a principle which is well worthy of consideration, but I take it that the bill is advocated in strict observance of just that principle. When a soldier of the Union Army has been badly wounded and has reached the age of seventy-nine or eighty years, when the infirmities of great age, which are not due to service in the war and in the line of duty but which come in the course of nature, are superadded to the wounds or disabilities caused by military service—when a man of that class applies for an increase of pension, being thus totally disabled, he is very apt to get it. Why, sir, we are advocating a pension bill for soldiers of the Mexican war, a bill predicated upon military service and the accumulation of age alone, and that is the argument in this case independently of the conspicuous personal service rendered by General Kelley. Total disability from wounds alone, requiring care and attention, as the very aged do, now secures for a private soldier under the general law $75 a month. That is practically this old officer's condition, now in his eighty-first year, as stated, and shot through and through, and he has three dependent ones with him. He would really be getting only $25 a month more than a private with no dependent ones. For whom do we do less?

We must consider each case in connection with the dependents upon the applicant. Why, sir, when we grant a pension to a private soldier we take into consideration the mother and the children or other dependent ones associated with him. I do not believe there is in the history of the country that agrarian sentiment, that objectionable spirit which it would be difficult to characterize, which would make pensions uniform throughout the country without any regard to the actual necessities of the applicant, as created by education and the nature of the service rendered to the country. I do not believe there was a gallant soldier on either side during the war who begrudged to his general officer a single dollar of the salary which he received; and the same sentiment would cause every private soldier to acquiesce in a certain degree in the higher grades of pensions which are given to officers as compared with privates.

I do not consider that the amount of pension recommended by the committee which reported this bill is at all out of proportion to the real necessities of this applicant or inconsistent with the consideration which is given to other applicants in similar circumstances, taking into view the dependents upon them and the actual measure of that dependence. I do not think that principle is violated in this application. I think the facts show, as I have tried to recount them. View this case in as cool, just, and businesslike a way as we can, apart from all sentiment, however noble and commanding, yet the facts show that this bill hardly brings this old general up to an equality with what we do for many private soldiers, instead, as claimed, making an invidious distinction.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to detain the committee, and am somewhat diffident in addressing it at all after the eloquent speech of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], to whom I always listen with very great pleasure. In a worthy cause he always moves me; and in one that does not meet my approval he is so plausible, so eloquent, and so forcible that I am moved even then.

But there is a class of men throughout the length and breadth of this country who I think deserve our consideration, men who served their country in the field, and who, now that age is coming on, find themselves disabled either by wounds or by disease contracted in the war, and who are not upon the pension-roll—can not be under existing law—men who send their petitions and prayers to this Congress asking for legislation which will give them, weak, disabled, and poverty-stricken as they are, some slight assistance for their support. It was of this class that I thought while the gentleman was talking so eloquently about this case, which I have no doubt is as worthy a case as he says it is; and I certainly have it not in my heart to vote against the bill after it has passed the Senate, has been favorably reported upon here, and is so eloquently advocated. This is the case of one claimant, while they number many thousands.

I did not rise to oppose this bill; but I did wish, while the gentleman was presenting this case so strongly, that it were possible to call up as a matter of privilege a case which I was not and am not now familiar with, except as I gathered the circumstances the other day from a message of the Chief Executive of the country. The case, as I understand it, was something like this, and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], who I believe made the report, will correct me if I misstate it:

A man in the prime of early manhood entered the Army and served his country well. After twenty-five months of service he was discharged on account of disease of the heart—valvular disease of the heart I believe it is called in the message of the Executive. He was a sound man when he entered the service, but when discharged was unable to work. Poverty-stricken, with a family dependent upon him, he was thrown out of his home, and went off alone to hunt some shelter for himself and his wife and small children. He was never again seen alive; but six months afterward his skeleton was found in a byway. It did occur to me that in such a case as this humanity would justify the presumption that the man died from valvular disease of the heart contracted in the military service. But the President thought otherwise, and returned the bill here with his veto, although the pension proposed to be granted to his widow was, I believe, only $12 a month.

Mr. HILL. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILL. Is it in order for the gentleman from Illinois to discuss a Presidential veto when a private pension bill is under consideration?

Mr. CANNON. I am only illustrating the point I make. I will observe the rules of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is familiar with the rules of the House.

Mr. CANNON. I did wish when I heard the gentleman from Kentucky that he had heretofore, or would now, or will hereafter rise in his place and help two-thirds of the members of the House on both sides to consider and pass that bill and give that widow a pension of $12 a month.

One step further. There is in every neighborhood throughout the length and breadth of the Northland and in the border States and in many of the Southern States men who served their country well in the late war who can not make the technical proof under the law to entitle them to go upon the pension-rolls, but who are disabled and dependent upon their labor for support, men who are standing advertisements to all their fellows who were in the Army and out of the Army that justice is not being done to them. They have knocked at the doors of Congress year after year.

The Senate has passed a bill to pension them months ago. Oh, I wish the gentleman from Kentucky, with that eloquent voice of his, and with his magnetic power, would advocate even-handed justice to this class of people and help the men on that side of the House and on this side of the House to give not $100 a month, but $8 or $12 a month to these worthy men, men who entered the Army not as officers—and I have nothing to say against the officers, for God knows you can not have an army without officers, and you want able men—men who did not occupy as important positions, yet who made part and parcel of that magnificent Army to which the gentleman and all of us owe a debt of gratitude which can not be paid. [Applause.]

I only want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that there is some danger we may pick out the case of a man in the border land he speaks of or elsewhere eighty years old and give him $100 a month, and with the eloquent speeches and high-sounding phrases we may feel our duty is done, when there are thousands of humble men who had the sentiment of patriotism in their hearts, and who offered all they had, and no man could give more, in the defense of the flag of their country—there is some danger, I say, these men may not receive evenhanded justice and the pittance which the country demands and the Senate has given and now awaits the action of this House.

I beg the gentleman from Kentucky, not for political effect—gentlemen will bear me out I have borne myself modestly touching these matters, but I beg for my constituents, and the constituents of us all, that these men, before this Congress shall adjourn, shall have this general bill passed for their relief. I feel called upon to say that, not by way of criticism, not to find fault, but to give warning that we do not set up one case or two cases as beacons, and in the light of those cases let the humble men of the country who deserve well of the Republic go without the simple mite which is due to them from the Treasury of the country they helped to save. [Great applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the speech which we have just listened to had been made by some other gentleman it would have excited no surprise; but when a gentleman so able, whose seat in Congress is so certain, whose necessities for calling upon what is supposed to be the help of the brave soldier are so entirely small, follows the speeches made this evening, the speech we have just heard does cause surprise.

I take it for granted the meaning of it is this: First, it attacks in a covert way the bill; and second, it is a covert attack on myself. So far as the bill is concerned I leave that to gentlemen on the other side, knowing the gentlemen on this side who intend to vote for it will not be driven off from that purpose by the temper and tone and criticism of the speech just made. So far as it is a criticism on what I have had the honor to submit to the House, I have no other answer to make to it than this: In each case whenever it shall arise I shall give to that case the best thought I can, and will vote what I think my duty and convictions require me to vote.

I shall do that as I have been in the habit of doing it, not deterred by any criticism the gentleman may choose to make upon me.

No man goes further than I in true admiration of the private soldier wherever he may have fought, if he did his duty. No man has more contempt for any form of demogogy to attract the vote of the private soldier than I. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Wherever a private soldier fought and fought well, he deserves praise, but it is the merest—I will not use the word I intended to—it is utterly obliterative of all the distinctions of both war and peace that does not recognize the distinction of position.

You give the salary of a Chief-Justice to a retired Chief-Justice; you give the salary of a district judge to a retired district judge, and so on in all positions in civil service in everything; that is, you recognize the position of the person upon whom you are conferring the favor or to whom you are giving the benefit.

I know nothing of the case to which the gentleman has referred; and yet when we shall be called to take a vote upon it I shall endeavor to vote in such manner as to satisfy my own conscience.

It seemed to me, Mr. Chairman, that it was not improper in me to have said this much, while perhaps it would have been improper to have passed unnoticed and in silence the speech of the gentleman in reference to myself.

Mr. CANNON. A single word.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has promised to recognize the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois; but not until after I have yielded, as promised, to the gentleman from Kentucky, my colleague [Mr. WOLFORD].

Mr. CANNON. Just a single word in response.

I must confess to very great surprise at the remarks just made by the gentleman from Kentucky. It was not in my heart to criticise him personally or to antagonize this case; and notwithstanding the statement he makes that my remarks savored of demagogy and were made for a selfish purpose, I must say to him and to the committee I am not aware that there has been anything in my service in this House that would lay me open to that insinuation or imputation.

I certainly did not in my remarks seek to array prejudice against this measure nor against those who held position in the Army. On the contrary I stated that no army could exist without its generals, its captains, its officers.

I certainly would not detract anything from any of them. I simply aimed to say, and thought I did say, that in representing my constituency—and here all the country are my constituency as well as the constituents of every other member of Congress—that I believed justice was not being done to a great many soldiers of this land, not as to the rate of pension they were getting, but as to the fact that they were getting no pension at all, no matter how much entitled to it. My remark was in good faith. I state it again, repeating what I said; and having stated this much, if my remarks lay me open to the accusation of demagogy, then I am glad to be a demagogue, and shall so continue one of the chief of demagogues to the end of my service in this Congress, or until by apt and proper general legislation justice is done to these men. [Applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have but this to say: So far as my observation of the gentleman's service in the House was concerned it was such that his speech filled me with surprise. I made that statement and I repeat it: his speech filled me with surprise. We were engaged in a case without a single criticism that entered the domain of partisan warfare, and without any excuse that I could see the gentleman made a sneering partisan speech.

I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CANNON. Yield to me before you do that. You can not afford to make a remark of that kind and do me such injustice as to prevent a reply. I did not mention party. I did not intimate that there was party in the question. On the contrary, I was speaking of these men without regard to party. Many of them are Democrats, but all, without reference to party, who performed their duty and are disabled and dependent on their labor are entitled to relief.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman made a distinct assault upon the President and a violent assault upon the majority of this House.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, if it is a crime to criticise and condemn the vetoes of the President, then I am guilty of flagrant crime, for I feel like assaulting them now and to the end.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no answer to make to the gentleman as to his attack upon the vetoes of the President. I am not engaged in that now. When the time shall come, if it be necessary or it shall fall upon me to do so, I will try to make fitting answer.

But the point I made, and the gentleman repeated the offense, was that at a time when the House was engaged in all honesty in an endeavor to do a generous act and a just act, the gentleman injected a bitter and unnecessary partisan speech.

I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WOLFORD].

Mr. CANNON. I am the judge of the propriety of my action here, and am willing to let the country judge who is the partisan, the gentleman from Kentucky or myself.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Undoubtedly the gentleman is judge of his conduct, but I am judge of the answer to make to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky on the right [Mr. WOLFORD] has been recognized by the Chair, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WOLFORD. I hope nothing will transpire coming from the mouth of any gentleman for any purpose, partisan or otherwise, that will keep a gallant officer that did his duty to his country in trying moments from having justice at the hands of this Congress.

I want in my way—and I make no effort at eloquence, I shall attempt to make none—I want in my plain way to talk about this question as it ought to be talked about, according to my judgment. In the first place there was a difference between the gallant and the brave men that went to fight for their country in a trying time, in an hour that tried men's souls. There was a difference then and there is a difference now, and will be while God Almighty continues to rule the universe, between the power of intellect, the power of mind, the power of decision, the great heart and soul that come to a great cause; and there never was a greater cause than the cause of this Union and of the flag of this country.

It required a great heart and a great soul for a man to stand up for that great cause in a trying time when he was surrounded by men who disagreed with him, who thought the country ought to be divided and the Union destroyed, that we ought to have two governments where one existed. That feeling was strong and powerful, and mighty men, men of eloquent tongue, men of powerful hearts, men of powerful souls, all over the country were pledged to that view. Just at such a time as that this gallant man in Virginia, right in the very heart of those who said that the country ought to be divided, declared with a manliness, with a nobleness that will always be remembered by every patriot and every lover of his country: "We go for the flag of our country, for the land of Washington; we go for its unity, its integrity of territory." It required no little power of mind, no little power of resolution, no little soul, no little heart to make and stand by such a declaration as that under those circumstances.

Will gentlemen tell me it is doing injustice to the private soldiers when you vote to pay this man? No, sir; you can not pay him; money will not pay him; it is impossible to pay him. But you vote to honor yourselves, and to honor your children, and to honor your country by voting him such a pension as will put him above want. Will my eloquent colleague from Kentucky tell me that is doing injustice to the private soldier? Stop and think for a moment how that is doing any injustice to the private soldier.

No man will go further than I will to pension every private soldier. And let me here, before I forget, digress a little. We are making a mistake in this Congress, and it will be seen by our children and those who follow us. There are other men besides the men that were wounded that got sick and that became disabled; there are other men that require and demand for their services recognition for going in winter's cold and summer's heat in the face of the enemy, in the face of those that defied their country, for going and fighting three and four years. They were the men that bore your flag on many a field; sometimes it trailed in the dust when they were hard pressed; sometimes they gained a glorious victory. But through trouble, through tribulation they went onward and onward till the glorious victory was gained of which everybody is proud, even the men who fought on the other side now thank God that victory was gained.

There are other soldiers besides those that get wounded. That poor fellow that went for years through the fight for his country that never was wounded but suffered all the hardships of the war—is he entitled to no credit? Will not gentlemen enlarge their souls and their sympathies when they think of him and will they not say that gallant soldier who fought so long and so bravely for his country, though he might not be wounded, deserves a recognition at the hands of his rich country? For, Mr. Chairman, we are rich. No one can say that America is poor and poverty-stricken. Day after day we are getting richer and richer. We are abundantly able to pay a pension to every soldier of our war.

But I am not going to digress on such a subject to-night. When gentlemen talk about doing injustice to private soldiers, they ought to think they are doing injustice by withholding their voice and their votes from pensioning every private soldier in the country. They ought all to be pensioned. That is what ought to be done, and what you will yet do. I will not be in Congress to see it; but those who come after me will see I was right in my view. They ought to be pensioned. And I will repeat again that every confederate soldier from whom we took an arm or leg should have one given him by the Government. You will come to that, too. That is my prediction. I am old and will not be in Congress again. I have declined to run again. But the time is coming when you will remember my prediction.

Harmony will be restored. The people of this country will come back to their original patriotism, to their original love of country, that deep, abiding love that fired the Union heart during the war. That feeling will come like the spirit of the eternal God into the hearts of the people, and they will love all the brave and gallant men who fought either with us or against us.

Before I sit down I want to talk just a minute about another point.

Gentlemen speak about our doing injustice to the private soldier. My answer to those gentlemen is, I am ready to do him justice; are you? That is the question I put to them.

Gentlemen admit, my gallant friend from Illinois [Mr. NEECE] admits, that we ought to pension men according to their merits. We all honor General Washington more than we do any private soldier. We voted large annuities to General Grant, and to his widow, because he did more than any private soldier could do. That spirit has always operated in the history of mankind and it will operate while we have a history. The rule is that he who does much shall receive much, and he that does little shall receive little. No private soldier ought to demand for a moment the pension that should be granted to a gallant officer who had the mind and the heart and the soul to take the lead in a great crisis, to be true to his manhood, true to his honor, true to his flag, and to influence others to follow him.

This was such a man. He never trampled upon a fallen foe. That is the history that is given of him by the men that vote against him. He was always kind to his adversaries, always anxious to see justice done them. There will come a time when you will be willing to vote all these soldiers pensions, and there will come a time when everybody will admit that it is right and proper to give a higher pension to an officer than to a private soldier.

One word more, Mr. Chairman. I do hope that no jealousy between the Committee on Pensions and the Committee on Invalid Pensions as to which of them should have jurisdiction of this case will keep a just and righteous Congress from doing justice to a brave man.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. NEECE] to strike out $100 and insert $50.

Mr. NEECE. I hope the friends of this bill will accept that amendment.

Several MEMBERS. No, no!

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about this bill. I will detain the committee only a few minutes. I am acquainted with the gentleman for whose benefit this bill has been reported. During the last Congress we boarded at the same hotel and our rooms were on the same floor, and I speak of my own knowledge, outside of the report of the committee, when I say that he is in a condition that entitles him to receive the pension provided in this bill because of his disabilities incurred in the service of the country, and because of the further fact that he can have but a few more years in this world. I know that during the whole of the last Congress he was an invalid to such an extent that he ought not to have been required to take a clerkship in a Department in order to earn his living.

This man went into the service in 1861 as a colonel and served until 1865, when he was mustered out as a brigadier-general. He was wounded very early in the war, but did not cease his service until the close of the war. General McClellan wrote when he heard that General Kelley was wounded, "In the name of the country, I thank him for his conduct, which has been the most brilliant episode of the war thus far." General Morris said, "I feel that your country owes you a deep debt of gratitude for your services on the occasion, and a grateful people can not but render to you that honor you so richly deserve." Now is the time when the American people can respond to that promise of General Morris, and I hope it will be done by voting down all these amendments and passing this bill.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. NEECE, there were—ayes 19, noes 41.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. PRICE to strike out "at the rate of $100 per month, said pension to be in lieu of that which he now receives," and insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws," it was not agreed to.

The question being taken on laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass, there were—ayes 47, noes 13.

Mr. WINANS. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] will withhold that motion for a moment. I ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WINANS] to consent that this bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that the previous question be ordered, and that a vote be taken in the House when a quorum is present.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Taken when?

Several MEMBERS. Next Friday.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks that it be agreed by unanimous consent that this bill be reported to the House with a recommendation that the previous question be ordered on it, and that a vote be taken upon it on Friday next.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, and others. A yea-and-nay vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I now renew the motion that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry pension bills with various recommendations.

CATHARINE LANIGAN.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 2349) granting a pension to Catharine Lanigan, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with an amendment striking out "fifty" and inserting "thirty."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. JANE R. M'QUAIDE.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole House was the bill (S. 1852) granting a pension to Mrs. Jane R. McQuaide.

Mr. CONGER. There was an agreement in Committee of the Whole that this bill be passed over to be voted on by a full House next Friday, immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

The question being on the passage of the bill, the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By an agreement in Committee of the Whole, as the Chair is informed——

Mr. CONGER. The bill was to be laid over till next Friday morning, to be voted on immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question having been ordered, the bill goes over under the agreement.

JOSEPH S. MOODY.

The House next proceeded to consider the bill (S. 948) granting a pension to Joseph S. Moody; which was reported from the Committee of the Whole House with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GENERAL BENJAMIN F. KELLY.

The House next proceeded to consider the bill (S. 838) granting an increase of pension to General Benjamin F. Kelly.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Under the aggreement which was made, I now ask the previous question upon that bill with the view that it may go over till next Friday to be voted on in a full House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will be considered as read a third time and the previous question ordered upon its passage; and the bill will go over to be voted upon in pursuance of the agreement stated by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. NEECE. I ask that the yeas and nays be ordered now, in accordance with what I understand to have been the agreement.

A MEMBER. They can not be ordered now.

Mr. WINANS. It was understood that the question should be taken by yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The RECORD will show what was the understanding.

Mr. WINANS moved to reconsider the several votes by which bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House had been passed this evening; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LIFURS ROBERSON.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3167) to restore the name of Lifurs Roberson to the pension-roll.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that the bill is not at the desk.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. I have a copy of the bill here.

although it does not show the amendment recommended by the Committee on Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to restore the name of Lifurs Roberson, late of the First North Carolina Regiment, Mexican war, to the pension-roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. The committee recommend an amendment, to strike out "First North Carolina Regiment" and insert "Fifth Tennessee Cavalry."

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to inquire why the name of this man was stricken from the pension-roll.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. It was upon the allegation that he was disloyal; but he proved his loyalty by showing that he was twice conscripted into the confederate army and twice deserted from it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Can he not prove his loyalty to the satisfaction of the Pension Office?

Mr. JOHNSTON, of North Carolina. He has not been able to do it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I think that, after the particularity which has been observed with reference to other pension bills, this bill had better go over.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I will not consent to the passage of this bill at this time and upon our present information.

Mr. WINANS. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 10 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BELMONT: Petition of John White, of Lawrence Station, L. I., for increase of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 24, 1886.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Attorney-General relative to compensation to H. L. Warren and N. C. Collier for defending a Zuni Indian under a charge of murder in the second judicial district of New Mexico; which was read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and printed.

Mr. DAWES. Perhaps it had better go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought to go to the Committee on the Judiciary first, without printing, and I will look at it and try to report an amendment.

Mr. DAWES. And then referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, and without printing, so that I can have it to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary without printing.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8310) granting a pension to Cyra L. Weston was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BOTTLERS' PROTECTIVE ASSOCIATION EXPOSITION.

The bill (H. R. 9208) to permit the entry free of duty of foreign goods for exhibition at the fourth biennial exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association was read twice by its title.

Mr. HOAR. That bill is in the ordinary form of similar bills, to allow to come in free of duty, subject to the Treasury regulations, articles for an international exposition. It is for the American Bottlers' Association, which is composed of some six thousand firms in this country, who employ about fifty thousand persons; and it is quite important that it should be passed promptly, because they are making arrangements already for the exposition.

I ask, therefore, that the bill may be passed. It has been shown to every member of the Finance Committee, I think, without an exception, and every member of the Finance Committee without exception authorizes me to say he has no objection to it.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object if it takes no time. If it leads to the slightest debate, I shall object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That all articles which shall be imported for the sole purpose of exhibition at the fourth biennial exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association, to be held in Boston, Mass., from the 18th to the 23d days of October, 1886, inclusive, shall be admitted without the payment of duties or of customs fees or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles as may be sold in the United States, or withdrawn for consumption therein, at any time after such importation, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon like articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of importation: And provided further, That in case any articles imported under the provisions of this act shall be withdrawn for consumption or shall be sold without payment of duty as required by law, all penalties prescribed by the revenue laws shall be applied and enforced against such articles and against the persons who may be guilty of such withdrawal or sale.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not going to take any time about this, but I should like to have the acting chairman of the Committee on Finance tell me when, pursuant to this proposed law, these articles would have to be withdrawn for consumption or exported out of the United States. There seems to be no limit in point of time.

Mr. HOAR. The Secretary of the Treasury will fix that in his regulations, as I understand it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You think that the provision of their being admitted under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe would warrant him in making a lawful regulation, that being admitted they should be withdrawn within a certain time?

Mr. HOAR. I think that would be a fair condition under the circumstances, and I think that has been the usual form of such bills.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am very much afraid about that. I have an impression that such bills have prescribed a time within which they should run out; but I do not know. It is a pretty dangerous way to pass bills when they first come here; but in this instance I am not going to object.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I ought to say that when I stated that I had shown the bill to every member of the Finance Committee I suppose I was understood as not to include the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], who is absent, and I believe I have not shown it to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES]. But I have shown it to every other member of the committee.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition of merchants, manufacturers, and dealers of Saint Louis, Mo., praying for the passage of what is known as the James bill, providing that—

Residents of each State and Territory may, within the other States and Territories and within the District of Columbia, solicit from dealers or merchants orders for goods and merchandise by sample, catalogue, price-list, description, or other representation, without payment of any license or other mercantile tax.

I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of Hon. Isaac H. Sturgeon, of Saint Louis, Mo., late collector of internal revenue and one of the prominent citizens of Missouri, praying for the establishment by the General Government of national savings-banks. This is a very carefully prepared petition. I move its reference to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I present two petitions of citizens of Colorado, praying for the passage of certain bills in relation to the public lands, Presidential and Congressional elections, and the disbursement of a part of the Treasury surplus. I believe the petitions should lie on the table, for I think most of the bills the passage of which is asked have been reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JACKSONVILLE, FLA.

Mr. MAHONE. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report back the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 453) for the erection of a public building at Jacksonville, Fla. The amendment is an immaterial one, and I am directed to ask the concurrence of the Senate therein.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a report. Let it go on the Calendar and take its fair place with other reports of committees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia desires the action of the Senate.

Mr. MAHONE. I ask concurrence in the amendment of the House. It is a quite immaterial amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont object?

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no objection to anything; only we can do but one thing at a time, and there are a great many things reported days ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection——

Mr. ALLISON. I shall object if it takes a moment's time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the House of Representatives will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "dollars," in line 9, the House of Representatives inserted the words:

Nor shall any site be purchased until estimates for the erection of a building which will furnish sufficient accommodations for the transaction of the public business, and which shall not exceed in cost the balance of the sum herein limited after the site shall have been purchased and paid for, shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Treasury:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment of the House of Representatives.

The amendment was concurred in.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2794) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection and construction of a public building at Oxford, Miss.," approved July 12, 1882, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1847) for the purchase of land for the Federal building in Brooklyn, N. Y., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 246) to provide for the erection of a public building at Charlotte, N. C., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9736) to grant the Maricopa and Phœnix Railway Company, of Arizona, the right of way through the Gila River Indian reservation, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. MILLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Education and Labor to report back House bill 9232 with a recommendation that it pass. I desire to make a statement of half a minute, and then to ask that this bill be put on its passage. It will be remembered——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 9232) to amend an act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

Mr. MILLER. I said I would make a statement of half a minute and then I would ask unanimous consent that the bill be taken up.

It will be remembered that in the last Congress we passed a bill prohibiting the importation of what is known as contract labor. That bill failed to make any proper provision for the enforcement of the law.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I must object. I can not yield for this.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator can not object to my statement, for I have not yet asked unanimous consent. He can not take me off my feet to do that.

Mr. ALLISON. I can object to debate on the bill.

Mr. MILLER. I am not debating the bill yet. I have not asked unanimous consent, and I can make a statement, I think. I shall have to commence over again as I have been interrupted.

Last year Congress passed a bill prohibiting the importation of contract labor. It was a bill demanded by all the labor interests of this country, but——

Mr. ALLISON. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. MILLER. That bill failed——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will suspend. The Senator from Iowa rises to a question of order. He will state his question of order.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the question pending before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York is making a report from a committee, as the Chair understands.

Mr. ALLISON. That report was made, I understand.

Mr. MILLER. It was not made. I said I would make a statement and then I would make a request for the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair receives the statement as part of the report, not otherwise.

Mr. MILLER. I am making a report from a committee, and I have a right to make it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will proceed.

Mr. MILLER. That bill passed, but it failed to make any proper provision for its enforcement. It left it to the free option of any person in the country to make complaint against the importation of contract labor, to bring suit, and to recover damages. It did not instruct the customs officers of the Government to take any action in regard to the matter, but whenever a complaint was made by a private citizen or otherwise the district attorney was instructed to bring suit for damages against the shipmaster or against any other person connected with it. It has been found substantially to be inoperative.

Now, we have upon the statute-book a law forbidding the importation of convicts or paupers, and that law is properly enforced by the Treasury Department, acting through the commissioners of immigration, in the various ports of the country where there are commissioners, and where there are no commissioners then it is enforced by the collector of customs.

The law which we passed last winter, which was so much desired as I say, has proved to be of no substantial benefit except that it has acted as a warning to certain people against bringing in contract labor.

This bill now proposes to empower the Secretary of the Treasury to take such means and actions as will prevent the violation of the original law passed last winter. It enables him to make contracts with the commissioners of immigration, just as we have heretofore done in regard to the importation of convicts or paupers. In the city of New York, or where that whole matter is under the control of a board of commissioners of immigration created by the State of New York, and working under contract with the Secretary of the Treasury, they enter upon all steamships coming into the port to prevent the landing of any convicts or paupers, requiring the steamship companies to take such persons back to the country from which they brought them.

This bill proposes to give the Secretary of the Treasury power to do precisely the same thing in regard to convict labor, and it requires the Secretary of the Treasury to enforce the law instead of leaving it to the voluntary action of private individuals.

Unless this bill can be passed, of course the other law will go on indefinitely without doing any good. Therefore I ask unanimous consent that the bill be put on its passage now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by him.

Mr. ALLISON. I reserve the right——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object, because the bill turns the whole thing of the control of vessels and everything else over to State officers and the power of the Secretary of the Treasury and collectors of customs will be entirely impaired. It is a very unsafe bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, debate is not in order.

Mr. MILLER. When an objection is made, is that to be accompanied with debate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not think anybody heard the debate of the Senator from Vermont. The Chair promptly tried to check the debate.

Mr. MILLER. All right; let it go.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GEORGE. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the petition of Edgar O. Murden, a native of South Carolina, now a citizen of New Jersey, praying for the removal of his disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution, to report it back to the Senate. We find that he was only in the revenue-cutter service of the United States, and not in the Navy, and therefore his disabilities have already been removed. We recommend that the prayer of the petitioner be denied.

The report was agreed to.

TRANSFERS FROM SENATE LIBRARY.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on the Library, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized to transfer to the custody of the Librarian of Congress such volumes and parts of volumes of newspapers in the files of the Senate as are not needed for current use in his office, and the Librarian of the Senate shall also transfer to the Library of Congress the collection of maps now in that Library, the same to be catalogued and to form part of the collections of the Library of Congress.

INTERNATIONAL SHEEP AND WOOL SHOW.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 138) to print 10,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the International Sheep and Wool Show, held in Philadelphia in September, 1880, direct me to report it favorably, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

It directs that there shall be printed 10,000 copies of the Report of the Commissioner of Agriculture on the International Sheep and Wool Show, held in Philadelphia, Pa., September, 1880; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of members of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, and 3,000 copies for the use of the Commissioner of Agriculture; the work to be subject to the approval of the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRIBUTION OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. HAWLEY. I also report favorably from the Committee on Printing the joint resolution (H. Res. 129) directing the Public Printer to forward the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to our legations abroad, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. ALLISON. That will be likely to lead to debate. I ask the Senator to let it go over.

Mr. HAWLEY. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will understand that it is simply to send out 30 or 40 copies of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, one to each of our legations abroad. It passed the House and is recommended by the State Department.

Mr. ALLISON. If it does not lead to debate, I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, &c., That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to forward, free of charge, through the Department of State, one copy of the daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to each of our legations abroad, commencing at the beginning of the present session.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRESIDENTIAL VETOES.

Mr. HAWLEY. My colleague [Mr. PLATT] offered a resolution which was referred to the Committee on Printing providing for the printing of all Presidential vetoes from the organization of Congress to the present time. The committee reports a substitute therefor for which it asks consideration.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution as amended agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Printing, be and hereby is, directed to have prepared a collection of all Presidential vetoes from the organization of Congress to the present time, arranged in chronological order, with explanatory notes and an index; and to report the same in print to the Senate on or before the 10th day of December next. And the expenses for copying and indexing the same, not to exceed $300, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 2873) for the relief of Rachel Walcott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2874) authorizing the Commercial National Bank of Marshalltown, Iowa, to change its location and name; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GORMAN, it was Ordered, That William Talbert have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That Casimir Suffozyuski be permitted to withdraw the papers in his case from the files of the Secretary of the Senate, under the rules.

TREASURY SURPLUS.

Mr. COKE submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be discharged from the further consideration of House joint resolution No. 126, "directing payment of the surplus in the Treasury on the public debt."

Mr. COKE. I ask that the resolution be printed and laid on the table; and I give notice that at the conclusion of the morning business on Monday next I shall call it up and ask a vote on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie on the table and be printed.

LOUISIANA PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the following resolution:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby directed to inform the Senate, on or before its next regular session, what progress has been made annually by the surveyor-general of Louisiana in satisfying and adjusting the confirmed and unsatisfied private-land claims in said State, as required by the third section of the act of Congress, approved June 2, 1858, entitled "An act to provide for the location of certain confirmed private land claims in the State of Missouri, and for other purposes."

And especially to inform the Senate—

First. The whole number and aggregate quantity, as near as may be, of said claims in said State wholly or partially unsatisfied at the date of said act, and entitled to relief under its provisions.

Second. The number and aggregate quantity of said claims finally satisfied and adjusted under said act, and the number and aggregate quantity remaining unsatisfied.

Third. What defect, in his opinion, if any, in existing laws, executive regulations and decisions, or otherwise, impedes the adjustment of said claims under said law, and what new legislation and changes in said regulations and decisions, if any, are required, in his opinion, to enable the said surveyor-general to finally adjust and settle said claims.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is an extraordinary resolution, as calling on the head of a Department to recommend legislation to Congress. I think we had better think of that a little. My impression is that there are some later acts on the subject of private land claims in Louisiana which ought to be looked at before we confine ourselves to the act of 1858.

Mr. GIBSON. I have no desire to insist upon that particular feature of the resolution.

Mr. ALLISON. Let it go over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think there should be a reference to some later statutes; I am not sure. If the Senator will allow it to go over, to come up as a matter of course on Monday morning, we can look at it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the resolution goes over.

Mr. GIBSON. I desire to state——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have it printed?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It had better be printed; we can amend it better if it is printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over and will be printed.

ACTS RELATING TO LOANS AND CURRENCY.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of Treasury be directed to transmit to the Senate the compilation of the laws of the United States relating to loans and currency, including the coinage acts, with index recently prepared in the Treasury Department.

DISTRICT STREET-RAILROADS.

Mr. VEST. I offer the following resolution, and I ask for it immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether the chartered rights and powers of the corporations owning and operating street-railroads in the city of Washington, D. C., are such as to prevent appropriate legislation by Congress requiring said corporations to remove or alter the rails now used by them, and the road-beds of said roads as now constructed within said city; and that the committee report in writing to the Senate on the first Monday in December next, or as soon thereafter as practicable.

Mr. INGALLS. Let that lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You mean it is objected to and goes over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is objected to and goes over.

Mr. INGALLS. Until to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Lying on the table is a different thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over and will be printed.

RIGHTS OF AMERICAN VESSELS IN BRITISH WATERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolutions heretofore submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], which come over under objection.

The resolutions submitted by Mr. EDMUNDS July 22 were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and it hereby is, instructed to inquire into the rights of American fishing vessels and merchant vessels within the North American possessions of the Queen of Great Britain, and whether any rights of such vessels have been violated, and, if so, to what extent; that said committee report upon the subject and report whether any and what steps are necessary to be taken by Congress to insure the protection and vindication of the rights of citizens of the United States in the premises; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to employ a stenographer, and to sit during the recess of the Senate, either as a full committee or by any subcommittee thereof, and that any such subcommittee shall for the purposes of such investigation be a committee of the Senate to all intents and purposes.

Resolved, That the necessary expenses of said committee in said investigation be paid out of the appropriation for the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon vouchers to be approved by the chairman thereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolutions.

The resolutions were agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2349) granting a pension to Catharine Lanigan, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 948) granting a pension to Joseph S. Moody.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 6314) to increase the pension of James Carlin;

A bill (H. R. 8296) to remove the political disabilities of Duff Green Reed; and

A bill (H. R. 8474) granting a pension to James McGlen.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 901) to grant the Astoria and Winnemucca Railroad Company the right to construct bridges over navigable water courses; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to go back to page 19 of the bill, to the amendment passed over last night at the request of the Senator from Kentucky.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment on page 19 will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations report, at the beginning of line 435, to strike out "That" and insert "And;" in line 437, after the words "denominations of," to strike out "ones" and insert "one;" in the same line, before the words "and five," to strike out "twos" and insert "two;" after the word "dollars," in the same line, to strike out the words "on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury, in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government. That;" in line 410, before the words "the silver" to insert "and;" after the word "receivable," in line 441, to insert "redeemable;" and after the word "character," in line 446, to strike out the words "and shall be redeemable in standard silver dollars on demand, and when paid into the Treasury shall be reissued, subject to the provisions herein for the redemption of the same," and insert "Provided, That said denominations of one, two, and five dollars may be issued in lieu of silver certificates of larger denominations in the Treasury, and to that extent said certificates of larger denominations shall be canceled and destroyed;" so as to make the clause read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars; and the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable, redeemable, and payable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character:" Provided, That said denominations of one, two, and five dollars may be issued in lieu of silver certificates of larger denominations in the Treasury, and to that extent said certificates of larger denominations shall be canceled and destroyed.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a single amendment, and before proceeding to its consideration I ask unanimous consent that after 2 o'clock the five-minute rule may be applied to the bill and all amendments thereto. I desire very much to get through with the bill by 4 o'clock this afternoon, if possible, and I think we can do so by limiting somewhat the debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that after 2 o'clock to-day all debate on the bill and amendments shall be limited to the five-minute rule. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

Mr. TELLER. I shall object to that, unless the Senator excepts the pending financial amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I mention 2 o'clock, which is two hours and a half nearly from this time.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that I want to say anything on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves——

Mr. HOAR. He asks unanimous consent. It is not a motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that under the rule a majority can at any time pending an appropriation bill make this order.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object, with the understanding indicated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. INGALLS. If this debate begins now—and we are all aware of the gift of the Senator from Kentucky of continuance and his great familiarity with this subject and the profound interest he feels in it—and if he should occupy the time very nearly until 2 o'clock, it would obviously be unjust to apply the five-minute rule at the expiration of his speech. I therefore ask the Senator from Iowa to withhold his request until later, when if it should appear that there is danger of unnecessary or unreasonable delay the rule could be applied.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to say that the Senator from Kentucky informed me that he would occupy about one hour, and that leaves an hour and a half, which I supposed would be ample time in which to reply.

Mr. INGALLS. Then wait until he is through.

Mr. BECK. I rather agree with the Senator from Kansas. While I intend to be as brief as I can, this is a very large subject and the provision of the House is a very radical proposition.

Mr. ALLISON. The difficulty is, if we wait until the Senator from Kentucky gets through then some other gentleman will take the floor, and we shall be obliged to wait until he gets through, and in that way we may run along for a week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the motion of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. HOAR. If that is put as a request for unanimous consent I consent. If it is endeavored to set a precedent of limiting debate by a majority vote in the Senate, I object.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I ask unanimous consent, so that the Senator from Massachusetts will not object.

Mr. HOAR. That is it exactly.

Mr. INGALLS. I trust the Senator from Iowa will withhold his request for unanimous consent until a later hour, when if it becomes necessary I have no doubt everybody will agree to it.

Mr. BECK. I hope that will be done. I do not want to have the floor for an hour or so and have everybody else gagged in advance.

Mr. ALLISON. I will waive my request for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky has the floor.

Mr. BECK. I know this is a very important question——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Kentucky will pause for a moment the Chair will try to get order in the Chamber.

Mr. BECK. I should like that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators will please resume their seats. The Chair noticed a day or two since, during the discussion, that nearly every Senator was engaged in full conversation, quite a number being present, and a very slight whisper under those circumstances is certain to be an embarrassment to the speaker. The rules require that Senators shall refrain from conversation and be in order. The Chair will endeavor to enforce that rule if possible.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Pretident, however reluctant the Senate may be, at this late day of the session, to enter upon the discussion of questions involving radical changes in our financial system, we are compelled, by reason of the action of the House of Representatives, to meet these questions and to decide them on their merits.

In the "sundry civil bill" the House has incorporated the following provisions, the second of which radically changes existing laws and regulations relative to our coin and the paper representatives thereof.

It has been amended by the Appropriation Committee of the Senate.

The parts stricken out and the words in Italics show the difference in the two propositions:

Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes of large denomination in lieu of notes of small denomination canceled or retired.

* * * * * * *

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of [ones] one, [twos] two, and five dollars [on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury, in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government. That]; and the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable, redeemable, and payable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character" [and shall be redeemable in standard silver dollars on demand, and when paid into the Treasury shall be reissued, subject to the provisions herein for the redemption of the same]: Provided, That said denominations of one, two, and five dollars may be issued in lieu of silver certificates of larger denominations in the Treasury, and to that extent said certificates of larger denominations shall be canceled and destroyed.

As the sundry civil bill must pass in some form before we adjourn, because it provides the money for successfully carrying on the various Departments of the Government, and as the House had the undoubted right to make the provisions it has relative to our coinage and currency, a part of it, and as the simple striking out of these provisions will not secure the passage of the bill without them, we are compelled to consider them upon their merits whether we want to or not, making such amendments to them as we think will best promote the public interest.

It was because these questions were before us in that shape that I gave notice the other day of the following amendment which I propose to offer as a substitute for both the House provisions and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate.

There were two or three mistakes in it as originally printed, which I have corrected. It now reads as follows:

Provided, That hereafter no United States note shall be issued of a denomination less than $10 nor more than $500, and the denominations higher than $50 shall not exceed in value one-fourth of the value of the total amount outstanding at any time; and not more than one-fourth in value of the amount of circulation issued to national banks outstanding at any time shall be of a less denomination than $10: Provided further, That in all new issues coin certificates shall be hereafter substituted for silver certificates and gold certificates, wherever either is authorized to be issued under existing laws; and all gold and silver certificates now outstanding shall be retired, if now owned by the United States, or when they are received at the Treasury or any subtreasury, and coin certificates of the denominations hereby provided for issued in their stead; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue coin certificates, in denominations of $1, $2, and $5, on all the surplus coin and gold bullion held at any time by the Treasury as the property of the United States in excess of $100,000,000 of gold and silver coin and gold bullion, and pay out the same in discharge of all the obligations of the United States except such as have been heretofore made payable expressly in coin; and it shall be the duty of the Treasurer of the United States, upon the receipt of an original certificate of deposit issued by the United States assistant treasurer at any United States subtreasury, stating that there has been deposited therein, by any person or corporation, gold coin or standard silver dollars of the United States in the sum of $10 or any multiple thereof, to order payment of a like amount in coin certificates, at the counter of any United States depository designated by the depositor, in such denominations as he may request in writing, at not less than $1 or not more than $500, which shall be redeemable in gold or silver coin, at the option of the United States; and all the certificates hereby authorized, when paid into the Treasury, shall be reissued, or new certificates of the same denomination substituted for such as are returned because of being mutilated or defaced, as now provided by law in regard to the notes of the United States. No coin certificates shall be issued of a denomination greater than $500, and at least two-thirds in value of such certificates outstanding at any time shall be of denominations not exceeding $50.

We can not shut our eyes to the fact that the good of the country requires us to make important changes in existing laws and Treasury regulations in order to prevent ruinous contraction of the currency in consequence of the withdrawal of a large portion of that now in existence, by the reduction of national-bank circulation and by the locking up in the Treasury of the surplus revenue collected under our excessive and onerous system of taxation.

Certain facts are self-evident: First, that Congress is unable or unwilling to reduce taxation. No man regrets that more than I do. Therefore, the $96,000,000 surplus collected during the fiscal year ending June, 30, 1886, will be increased during the present fiscal year, and each succeeding year, unless we make wasteful and extravagent appropriations, so that the annual surplus hereafter will not be less than $100,000,000, no matter what our Treasury officials may say to the contrary. Second, the Treasurer of the United States in his letter to my colleague in the House, Hon. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE, dated July 12, 1886, shows that there is only about one hundred and thirty-six millions of 3 per cent. bonds actually outstanding, and that there is enough idle money now lying in the Treasury to pay them all off and leave a large surplus.

It shows, certainly, that before the close of the present fiscal year they can all be paid, and all the reserve that the most conservative Senator would insist on holding in the Treasury for any purpose will be there from the collections made by our tax-gatherers during this year.

That letter reads as follows:

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES, Washington, July 12, 1886.

SIR: Your letter of the 12th instant is before me, asking—

First. What is the number of 3 per cent. bonds now outstanding, and of this number how many have been called for and not presented?

Second. What number of bonds of each issue of 3 percents, 4½ percents, and 4 percents are deposited by national banks to secure national-bank currency?

Third. What was the total cash in the Treasury July 10, and of what did this cash consist?

Fourth. What have been the daily receipts of the Treasury during the month of July?

To the first question I reply as follows:

Amount of 3 per cent. bonds outstanding, to include July 10, 1886.	$147,831,950
Of this amount bonds of the one hundred and thirty-eighth call not due until August 1, 1886	4,007,700
3 per cent. bonds called and matured not yet presented for payment	7,770,200
	11,777,900
Actually outstanding	136,057,050

To the second:

Currency sixes	3,565,000
Four-and-one-halfs	50,821,700
4 percents	114,212,500
3 percents	106,783,600
Total	275,382,800

To the third:

Total cash in Treasury July 10, 1886:

United States notes	35,998,623
National-bank notes	296,309
Standard silver dollars	180,903,221
Gold coin	189,877,431
Subsidiary silver coin	28,786,635
Gold certificates	52,414,110
Silver certificates	27,529,320
Gold bullion	42,137,404
Silver bullion	3,547,831
Minor coin	360,496
In national-bank depositaries	11,994,308
Total	573,845,688

A copy of this reply has been forwarded to the Secretary of the Treasury.

Very respectfully,

C. N. JORDAN, Treasurer United States.

Hon. WILLIAM P. C. BRECKINRIDGE,
House of Representatives.

Third. It is an undisputed fact that we have so adjusted the public debt that after the 3 per cent. bonds are paid off it is out of our power to pay any more of our interest-bearing obligations as a matter of right until September, 1891, when two hundred and fifty millions of 4½ percents mature. After those are paid, the remaining seven hundred and thirty-seven millions can not be paid until 1907 otherwise than by buying them in open market.

Fourth. Although the national banks now have a right to issue currency without limit equal to 90 per cent. of all the bonds of the United States held by them, they have in fact contracted their circulation in the last few years nearly if not quite $80,000,000; not because they desire to do so, nor because the business of the country did not need the currency, but because the bonds upon which their circulation was based have been paid off, and the premium on the four-and-a-halfs and 4 percents has become so high, because of their scarcity and the uses to which they can be put, that the banks can not afford to buy them, as the profit on the circulation is not equal to the premium.

It will be seen by the letter of the Treasurer which I have just read that the national banks now hold nearly one hundred and seven millmillions of our 3 per cent. bonds, which will be withdrawn from them in a year or so; so that a further contraction of their circulation, which is now only in fact two hundred and fifty millions, will be reduced at least eighty millions more, while the legal-tender notes, lying idle in the Treasury on deposit for the redemption of their retired notes, which ran up from November 1, 1885, from $39,542,979 to $61,580,663 on the 25th of June last, will be doubled before another year has expired, to the great detriment of the business of the country.

The last official data I have in regard to the national-bank notes outstanding is contained in the following statement from the Comptroller of the Currency, dated June 25, 1886:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
Washington, June 25, 1886.

National-bank notes outstanding.

Date.	Currency.	Gold notes.	Total.
November 1, 1885	$315,462,899	$384,269	$315,847,168
June 1, 1886	311,510,245	328,049	311,838,294
Decrease since November 1, 1885	3,952,654	56,220	4,008,874

National-bank notes outstanding November 1, 1885, including notes of national gold banks	$315,847,168
Deduct lawful money on deposit	39,542,979
		$276,304,189
National-bank notes outstanding June 1, 1886, including gold notes	311,838,294
Deduct lawful money on deposit	61,580,663
		250,257,631
Decrease since November 1, 1885		26,046,558
Actual decrease of circulation from November 1, 1885, to June 1, 1886		$4,008,874
Decrease of circulation secured by United States bonds from November 1, 1885, to June 1, 1886		26,046,558

As the banks hold over one hundred and fourteen millions of the 4 per cent. bonds maturing in 1907, they may be tempted by the high premium to sell them and thus contract the currency that much more. They certainly will if they think that it is to the interest of their stockholders to do so. No one will be silly enough to assume that they will be restrained for a moment in doing whatever will best subserve their private interests by any consideration for the public welfare.

Fifth. The sham that Congress has been parading before the country for the last ten years as to the necessity of taxing the people to maintain an annual sinking fund which the Secretary of the Treasury fixes this year at $45,750,000, and estimates for next year at $46,659,000, can no longer be kept up, or the necessity for it even plausibly asserted, as there are no longer any bonds to sink without buying those that do not mature for years at any premium the holders may see fit to ask.

I have struggled in vain for years to have that law modified or repealed because our bonds of 1891 and 1907 could not be paid. At last the folly of maintaining it is now so apparent, that I doubt whether any Senator will venture to advocate the continuance of it longer.

The estimates for our necessary annual expenditures may just as well be reduced forty-six millions, since the sinking-fund humbug can no longer be successfully used as a pretext for keeping up onerous taxation.

No Senator will now say that we ought to be required by law to impose and collect taxes annually to the amount of $46,000,000 in excess of the ordinary wants of the Government in order to buy bonds bearing 4 per cent. interest twenty years before they are due, and pay $127,000,000 for each $100,000,000 we buy. A private trustee would be treated by any respectable court as a knave or a fool who managed his employer's affairs in that way.

As I think the time has come at last when my often-presented bills to repeal the sinking-fund laws will receive consideration, if not during this session at the next, I will at the risk of being charged with wandering from my subject say something about this sinking-fund legislation. It has been used for the last twelve years simply as a means of preventing Congress from reducing taxation. Indeed in 1875 it was made the pretext for increasing the taxes on whisky, tobacco, and sugar, and for reinstating all the provisions of the war tariff which a Republican Congress had reduced 10 per cent. in 1872.

I resisted all the false pretenses then so ostentatiously paraded, and showed by official statements that all the clamor about violated faith in not maintaining this so-called sacred fund was untrue. I proved by the official reports of Secretaries Morrill and Sherman in 1876 and 1877 that all possible claims under it had been met and provided for and over $220,000,000 in excess had been paid, but I could not even get a respectful hearing for my resolution of January 21, 1878, the last preamble of which, with the resolution, is as follows:

And whereas the present Secretary of the Treasury, in his report to this Congress, in December last, after repeating the statements of his predecessor upon that subject, says: "On the same basis the amount of the sinking fund would have reached $475,318,888.78 on the 1st of July, 1877, on which date the reduction of the debt, including accrued interest, less cash in the Treasury, since its highest point in 1865, amounted to $696,273,348.17," or $220,954,459.39 in excess of the amount required by law to be provided for that fund: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is unnecessary and inexpedient either to maintain or impose taxes at this time for the purpose of providing for the $37,196,045.04 asked for by the Secretary of the Treasury in his estimates for the purpose of providing further for the sinking fund, and that the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed not to purchase any bonds for the reduction of the principal of the national debt till the further order of Congress; and that the committees of Congress having charge of the subject be, and they are hereby, instructed not to provide for the payment, during the next fiscal year, for any part of said sum in the adjustment of the taxation required for the maintenance and support of the Government.

The protectionists knew that their excuse for keeping up high-tariff taxation would have been swept away to the extent of over $37,000,000 a year, and they were a unit in resisting its repeal. They did not content themselves with mere opposition; they magnified its importance and swelled it up by every possible contrivance until the Secretary of the Treasury tells us in his last report that "the requirements of the sinking fund for the present fiscal year, computed upon the same basis as in former years, will aggregate $49,000,000," an increase since 1878 of $12,000,000 a year. Nobody outside of the Treasury in determining what was 1 per cent. of the debt of the United States, when they saw the statement—

Total debt	$1,800,000,000
Cash in the Treasury	400,000,000
Debt less cash in the Treasury	1,400,000,000

would decide that the 1 per cent. for the sinking fund on the debt should be $18,000,000 instead of $14,000,000, yet that was the system up to the time when Mr. Manning thought that another construction might be be given. He thought that we might claim that our own cash in the Treasury which nobody had any claim on should not be charged against us as a debt even to swell a sacred fund. Secretary Manning thought too that the interest charge for 1886, which exceeded $29,000,000, might be reduced $9,000,000 (it ought to be reduced $14,000,000). I have a complete table, which was made with great care, showing all the facts relative to the sinking fund and how it is made up, but it would take too long to explain it. The recapitulation is easily understood. It shows that $586,415,491 has been set apart for this fund, and that while 3 per cent. is the rate of interest now on Government bonds we are charged 6 per cent. on over $55,000,000 of retired greenbacks and fractional currency that never bore interest.

The proposed rate is also shown. The whole performance is a humbug; and I have only taken time to refer to it now in order to show that the law ought to have been repealed long ago, and it would have been if it had not been that it was used to keep up taxation and aid the protectionists, who up to Mr. Manning's time ran the Treasury and kept its accounts to make the strongest showing possible for the maintenance of the highest rate of tariff taxation, and the sinking fund was the strongest card they had to play. The recapitulation of how they manufactured $29,000,000 of interest to add to the 1 per cent. on the debt, and thus make up an annual sinking fund of over $47,000,000, will not be as plain as if the detailed statement was given, but I think Senators will understand it. It is as follows:

Requirement of bond payments on account of interest on redemptions for sinking fund, 1886.

Description of securities.	Redemptions prior to July 1, 1885.	Rate per finance report of 1885 and prior years.	Amount required.	Rate proposed.	Amount required.

Mr. President, I agree that this sinking-fund matter is not strictly germane to the proposition I am discussing, but it precipitated the present condition of things and it has to be dealt with very soon. Therefore we may as well be looking to see what can be done with the elephant we have on our hands.

Coming back to the questions more strictly relating to the currency, it is or ought to be conceded that we must have a paper currency that the people can use in their ordinary transactions. It is obvious that the national banks can not be longer relied on to furnish it. Something must be done and done now.

The remedy I propose differs somewhat from that proposed by the House. It is, however, in the same line, and would, I think, be acceptable to a majority of that body. I propose, as it is apparent that we can no longer rely upon national-bank circulation, to substitute small notes for it based upon coin; and I seek to abolish all distinction or discrimination between our gold and silver coin by issuing on the deposit of either "coin" certificates of the denominations desired by the depositor, within the limits set forth in my amendment, which shall be redeemable in either gold or silver coin, at the option of the Secretary of the Treasury.

It will not do to assume that men will not deposit gold coin and take certificates which may be paid in silver. Our past experience negatives that assumption. When Hon. John Sherman, then Secretary of Treasury, issued the following order—

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., September 18, 1880.

Until further notice the United States assistant treasurer in New York will pay out at his counter standard silver dollars or silver certificates in sums of $10, or any multiples thereof, in exchange for like amounts of gold coin or gold bullion deposited with him.

Upon the receipt by the Treasurer of the United States in this city of an original certificate of deposit issued by the United States assistant treasurer at New York, stating that there has been deposited with him gold coin or gold bullion in the sum of $10, or any multiple thereof, payment of a like amount in standard silver dollars or silver certificates at the counter of any United States assistant treasurer designated by the depositor will be ordered.

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

The demand for silver certificates was such that in December, 1881, the Secretary of the Treasury, in his report, says:

The Department has issued silver certificates at the several subtreasury offices, upon a deposit of gold coin in like amount with the assistant treasurer at New York, and through this means certificates have been issued for nearly all the silver held by the Treasury. These certificates amount to about $66,000,000 and are now outstanding.

That condition of things doubtless rendered the following order necessary, as all or nearly all the silver coin in the Treasury was represented by outstanding silver certificates:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECRETARY'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., November 1, 1881.

Until further notice the exchange of silver certificates for gold coin deposited at the office of the United States assistant treasurer at New York will be suspended, and Department circular No. 75, of September 18, 1880, is hereby modified accordingly.

H. F. FRENCH, Acting Secretary.

The privilege was afterward temporarily extended and the amount of gold coin deposited was increased from $66,000,000 to $80,730,500, when it was withdrawn.

The Treasurer, in his last report, page 24, says:

The issue of silver certificates by Treasury officers in the South and West for gold coin deposited with the assistant treasurer at New York, under departmental circular of September 18, 1880, was discontinued in January last. The amount which had been issued in that manner to the date named was $80,730,500.

I confess I never could understand why the privilege of depositing gold and receiving silver certificates for it should have been refused so long as there was a silver dollar lying idle in the Treasury to redeem the outstanding silver certificates with, assuming that our Treasury officials are honest in the professions they have always made of a desire to maintain, support, and circulate the silver dollar, or, what is the same thing, its legal representatives. The $80,000,000 of gold paid for silver certificates became at once the absolute property of the United States, the man who took the silver certificates voluntarily gave his gold in exchange for the paper he received after sending it to New York at his own expense. He asked no better security for what he took than the much abused silver dollar. So long as he was willing to exchange gold for a certificate payable in silver, the abuse of silver comes with a bad grace from our Treasury officials, when they refuse to take gold for it or the paper payable in it. Surely our stock of gold coin is thereby increased to exactly the same extent that the citizen who gave it to us took paper payable in silver. My proposition restores that privilege.

If men do not desire to deposit gold for certificates payable in either coin, at the option of the Government, they will not; if they desire to do so they ought to have the right; and all distinction either by law or executive orders ought to be abolished between the gold and silver coins of the country, if for no other purpose than to let our own officials, the country, and the world know that they are both coins of the United States, equal under our laws, and equally protected by our authority and credit, no matter what bullion dealers in London or Berlin may say or do in regard to the raw material out of which they are made.

Our stamp, our adoption of each coin, takes each equally out of the fluctuations of the bullion market.

Fully agreeing with the House that it is a violation of the trust confided to them for our Treasury officials needlessly to lock up in their vaults the money which they have received from our tax-gatherers, and either fail or refuse to pay out the surplus not needed promptly in the liquidation of our interest-bearing debt, so as to lighten the burdens of taxation hereafter to the extent of the interest stopped by the payment of the principal, I go further and insist that it is wise to secure against loss and abrasion by use, as far as possible, the coins which form the basis of our circulation by retaining them in the Treasury and by issuing paper representatives of them in such denominations as will cause them to circulate freely and satisfactorily as currency among the people. Therefore I propose that the Treasury Department shall issue certificates to represent coin owned by the United States which shall be of the denominations of one, two, and five dollars to an amount equal to the circulation of small notes needed for trade, and when issued on coin deposited by citizens they shall be in such denominations, not exceeding $500, as they may desire; always provided that not exceeding one-fourth in value outstanding at any time shall be in denominations exceeding $50.

I do not regard any note or certificate in excess of $500 as currency in any sense, and I deny that the United States is under any sort of obligation to become the depositary, holder, or insurer of the coin of any man or set of men by giving them one-thousand-dollar or ten-thousand-dollar notes or certificates which are not intended for general circulation. All our issues of substitutes for money ought to be confined to currency for general use. In all issues of denominations exceeding $500 our Treasury and subtreasuries are simply used for the private convenience of rich men and wealthy corporations, while we, without compensation, pay all the expenses of these costly establishments and become insurers and voluntary bailees without pay for their accommodation.

We receive ample compensation for our storage and care of all the coin represented by notes and certificates of small denominations in the loss and destruction which is a necessary consequence of active use, and the casualties from fire, flood, and the thousand risks to which they are daily subjected, all of which inure to the benefit of the tax-payers of the country, as we only redeem those returned to the Treasury. The one-thousand-dollar and ten-thousand-dollar certificates are held in the private vaults of their owners more safely and cheaply than gold or silver coin could be held; they never see the light of day and are never subjected to any risk, except that of being carried to the United States Treasury when the owner wants the coin. Therefore we only aid them in withdrawing that much money from general use, as they would put it in circulation rather than hold it at their own risk. There are now $84,738,000 in gold certificates of denominations of $1,000 and upward out of a total of $128,746,825 outstanding. There are $37,432,000 of legal-tender notes in denominations of $1,000 and upward; while out of a total of $115,821,675 of silver certificates outstanding only $1,920,000 are of the denomination of $1,000, as shown by the following tables furnished to me by the acting Secretary of the Treasury the other day:

The United States legal-tender notes outstanding on June 30, 1886, were composed of the following denominations:

One dollar	$17,603,922
Two dollars	18,204,370
Five dollars	85,629,220
Ten dollars	66,658,660
Twenty dollars	55,078,380
Fifty dollars	23,291,300
One hundred dollars	31,359,700
Five hundred dollars	12,424,000
One thousand dollars	37,362,000
Five thousand dollars	60,000
Ten thousand dollars	10,000
	347,681,552
Deduct for unknown denominations destroyed	1,000,000
Total United States legal-tender notes	346,681,552

The outstanding gold certificates on the same date were composed of the following denominations:

Twenty dollars	$11,976,470
Fifty dollars	9,717,955
One hundred dollars	8,943,900
Five hundred dollars	13,370,500
One thousand dollars	18,278,000
Five thousand dollars	13,430,000
Ten thousand dollars	53,030,000
Total gold certificates	128,746,825

And the outstanding silver certificates by denominations were:

Ten dollars	$50,188,387
Twenty dollars	44,882,628
Fifty dollars	7,384,840
One hundred dollars	9,610,820
Five hundred dollars	1,835,000
One thousand dollars	1,920,000
Total silver certificates	115,821,675
Total currency issues of the United States	591,250,052
The outstanding national-bank notes on June 30, 1886, were	309,010,460
Total currency of all issues	900,260,512

It will be observed that I propose to limit the five-dollar notes of the national banks to one-fourth in value of the amount of their circulation, which is about the average of notes of that denomination now called for by them. The Comptroller in his last report says "the fives constitute 26 per cent. of the entire circulation" (see page 141), and I propose to prohibit the reissue of legal-tender notes of denominations less than $10.

My object is obvious. I seek to increase the coin certificates of small denominations and the use of silver coin as small change, which can only be done permanently and effectually by withdrawing the other notes of like denominations whose place the coin certificates will gradually fill. The life of notes of small denominations being, as the Treasurer states, only about three years, it will not take long to make the substitution even if we wait for those now outstanding to be returned as mutilated paper, which will be the case in regard to only a small part of them, as most of them will reach the Treasury very soon in the regular course of payments.

I propose that the Treasury officials shall see to it that small certificates are issued sufficient to supply the wants of the people by issuing them on our surplus idle coin, leaving it optional with depositors of coin, who want certificates, to take such denominations as best suit their purposes. As they can always be informed how many "ones," "twos," and "fives" are outstanding there need be no apprehension that they will take more than can be kept in active use, the object of all coin depositors being to obtain circulation of the denominations most needed at the time for the wants of trade.

There are now about $121,000,000 of legal-tender notes of denominations of $5 and under outstanding, and probably $75,000,000 of $5 national-bank notes. They are diminishing so rapidly it is not easy to speak with accuracy as to them, but it is safe to say that the change of denominations I propose would in less than two years open a place for $200,000,000 of coin certificates of denominations of $5 and under, and that not less than $125,000,000 of them could be used at once advantageously. Perhaps the $50,000,000 of $10 silver certificates now outstanding might be reduced somewhat by the proposed change; that depends a great deal on the improvement in our industries which we all hope for.

As the advantage the "greenbacks" have over certificates and national-bank notes consists in the fact that the bank notes are redeemable in them, and they are legal tender for all debts, public and private, and are by law fixed in volume at about $346,000,000, there is no need for any of them to be in denominations of less than $10 when we can fill their place with certificates based on coin. The legal-tender quality is not needed in payments of sums of $10 or less. Coin is always ready for that purpose, while notes not less than $10 are more convenient to hold as a reserve for bank circulation, or for use in payment of taxes or customs dues, for which legal-tender notes are now used more than all other forms of currency combined, as shown by the following official table:

It will thus be seen that for the last month over 81 per cent. of all the taxes on imported goods at the port of New York was paid in greenbacks, notwithstanding the provision of law that "coin and coin only shall be receivable for customs dues." That is one of the evasions of law which I do not complain of. I insist, however, that Congress ought to legalize it, and not wink at executive disregard of bad Congressional enactments.

We have been furnished lately with another striking evidence of the popularity of our paper money. The bonds are payable in "coin." Fifty million of dollars of 3 per cent. bonds have been paid off since January 1, 1886, yet the holders of more than three-fourths of them received payment in greenbacks, because they preferred them even to gold.

The reason is obvious; and the custom-house returns showing payment at 81 per cent. in greenbacks for June proves that the money received by the bondholders was at once loaned to the importers and by them paid to the custom-house officers, and the Treasurer when he received it paid it out to all of us in satisfaction of the obligations of the Government. There was no sense in hauling gold or silver about at great expense and risk when the paper substitute answered every purpose without risk or cost, yet every greenback can be legally and honorably redeemed with the standard silver dollar; they are but silver or coin certificates with general legal-tender quality.

Again, Mr. President, we have been often told that the Treasury is in danger of being depleted of its gold coin. Even the sacred humbug called a reserve, which is about as silly a pretense as the sacred sinking fund, would be endangered if we ventured to pay off the 3 per cent. bonds. I and others have steadily denied it.

The discussion in the early part of last winter reached the country. The people made themselves heard. They demanded relief from the interest-bearing debt, and insisted that their money should not be locked up any longer, but should be applied promptly to the payment of their debts. Their voice was partially heeded, and over $50,000,000 of bonds have been paid off in the last six months.

Have any of the gloomy forebodings of the alarmists been verified? Has the Treasury been depleted? Has gold taken wings and flown to more favored climes?

The following official table answers these questions in the negative:

Statement showing the amount of gold coin and bullion in the Treasury and of gold certificates outstanding at the end of each month.

June 30	232,838,123 91	55,129,870	76,044,375	156,793,748 91

It will thus be seen that we had over $30,000,000 more net gold coin and bullion in the Treasury on July 1, 1886, than we had July 1, 1885, and over $20,000,000 more than we had January 1, 1886, when we began to pay off the $50,000,000 of bonds, thus falsifying all the predictions of the gold worshipers.

Mr. President, I hardly think the amendment I propose needs any further explanation. We have determined to maintain the gold and silver coins of the United States of the standard value of July 14, 1870, as equal to each other in all respects, no matter how much the bullion in each may vary in the London market.

Having so determined, it is not only our right but our duty to use them and treat them upon terms of absolute equality in all the transactions of the Government and to take care that they are on equal terms invested with every function which will add to their value and utility, because it is use that gives value to coin. Money is worth nothing to its owner till he parts with it. That may be a "bull," but it is a fact. It is its potentiality not its possession that gives it value.

I seek to furnish both the Government and the owners of coin with the means of parting with it on terms advantageous to themselves and to the people who receive it, in the form of paper currency, securing both; one by holding and preserving the coin, and the other by having the right to demand so much of it as he can return the paper representatives of, when he thinks he would rather have coin than paper.

That is all I care to say in regard to the merits of the substitute I have offered. I believe it would aid, and in no way embarrass, our Treasury officials in the circulation of small notes. I think it is better than the House proposition contained in the text of the bill, and would be more likely to be accepted by the House than the amendment submitted by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate.

It will be observed that there are two distinct and in some regards inconsistent provisions in the House bill. The first seeks to maintain the legal-tender notes of small denominations, while the second requires silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars to be issued on "all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures and obligations of the Government."

Of course the small notes and small certificates will compete with each other, and as the legal-tender notes are a well-known and long-established currency they will be preferred, and the object the House had in view when it required the issue of silver certificates of small denominations will be thwarted to the extent that the small legal-tender notes and small certificates compete, as there is a limit beyond which the business interests of the country does not need small notes of any sort. The Treasury Department in its effort to increase the circulation of standard silver dollars has in the last year reduced the issues of one and two dollar United States notes over $14,000,000, as shown by the following table, which shows the issues and redemption for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886:

Issues and redemptions for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

The Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasurer, while they opposed the House proposition in regard to the issue of small certificates with which to make specified payments, did not oppose—indeed they favored—the issue of silver certificates of small denominations and suggested the following amendment:

That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of $1, $2, and $5, and that the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable, payable, redeemable, and exchangeable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character."

Saying among other things:

The issue of the silver certificates thus provided will be of greater service to the Treasury and the people than the one-dollar and two-dollar legal-tender notes, as the immediate effect of the issue of the legal-tender notes is to throw back upon the Treasury the custody of the silver dollars issued as the result of the suspension of the issue of these notes. The amount outstanding, of silver dollars, on June 30, 1885, about which time the suspension of the issue of the one-dollar and two-dollar legal-tender notes was ordered, was $38,471,269. There was outstanding on June 30, 1886, $52,469,720, showing an excess of issue caused by the withdrawal of the one-dollar and two-dollar notes of $13,998,451, which by comparison with the amount of one-dollar and two-dollar legal-tender notes redeemed during the same period, $14,438,838, shows that the circulation of the standard silver dollars nearly equaled the amount of the one-dollar and two-dollar notes withdrawn from circulation. The notes thus withdrawn were mainly reissued in the form of five-dollar notes, the amount issued during the fiscal year 1886 being nearly $10,000,000 in excess of the redemptions of that year of these notes.

These facts satisfied me that the only permanent small paper currency in future must be secured by utilizing our surplus "coin" as the basis on which it should rest; therefore it must have the right of way over all competitors. Small legal-tender and national-bank notes must be set aside; the usefulness of neither of them will be impaired by this proposed change; and as control over the coin certificates is given to the Secretary, who has and can promptly impart all needed information every day as to issues, redemptions, volumes, and demand, everybody can regulate his business and his operations with perfect assurance that he has the same means of knowing all about the condition and volume of our circulation as anybody else, and that there will be no organized combination to control the volume of the currency either by contraction or expansion.

Mr. President, I would have no fear of the success of my amendment, and would feel assured of the good results that would follow its adoption, but for the fact that the great combinations of wealth have not yet given up the hope that they can, with the co-operation of England and Germany, strike down our silver coinage and degrade all the currency based upon it. I do not believe they can. They thought for years that they owned and controlled the finances of the country, and they can not consent to give it up. This controversy between them and the people has to be settled sooner or later. I am content to stand on the presentation of the question made by me on the 21st of December last. It has not been materially shaken by the attacks of Senators on this floor, nor by the elaborate reviews of it by gentlemen outside of this Chamber.

The discussion at that time attracted attention, and the people resolved that one-half of the coinage of this country and the world should not be stricken down in order to double the purchasing-power of gold in the hands of the combinations of money-changers in England, Germany, and the United States.

It forced even the bondholders, here and elsewhere, to admit (no matter what Jay Cooke or anybody else had said) that the standard silver dollar can be legally, honestly, and honorably paid in discharge of every obligation, by the United States, and by every State, municipality, corporation, and individual within their borders.

It exposed the impertinence of the assumption by the men who held our bonds that they have the right to demand gold and refuse silver in discharge of either the principal or the interest of the obligations they hold; and it exploded the pretense, so arrogantly asserted, and so meekly acquiesced in by the Treasury officials, that the bondholders had rights superior to and more sacred than other equally meritorious creditors of the Government.

It did more. It served notice on our executive officers that they must act as the trustees of the tax-payers of the country, and not as the agents of the public creditors. It caused them to admit that the money collected by the tax-gatherers at the custom-houses and internal-revenue offices, whether it was in gold or silver, or the paper representatives of either, should be paid out as Congress has by law directed it to be, fairly, equally, and promptly to all our creditors alike; and that no set of men shall be allowed to dictate what coin or its equivalent shall be paid to them, as has been done for many years by the holders of our bonds.

I repeat what I said before, that the national banks can no longer be relied upon to furnish a safe, stable, and sufficient currency for the wants of the country, even if none of the grave objections existed to their power to do so, which are too apparent to need elaboration.

With a reduction of at least $75,000,000 in their circulating notes in the last four years and a probable greater reduction from year to year in the future, the folly of withdrawing the legal-tender notes or striking down their legal-tender quality, canceling the silver certificates, and stopping the coinage of the silver dollar must be apparent to all men who do not propose to unite with England and Germany in the single gold standard and place the business (and the legislation as well) of the country at the mercy of the bondholders. I know of no calamity equal to such a policy. The men who control the circulating medium of a country necessarily control its business and its legislation.

The transfer of such powers from the representatives of the people to any combination of interested capitalists is a surrender of liberty, and a practical return to the serfdom of the old feudal system, when it was claimed and maintained that the mass of mankind were born saddled and bridled, while a favored few were born booted and spurred, ready to ride them, by the grace of God.

The banks are our creatures; we created them. Our only object, indeed, our only authority for granting them charters, for taxing the circulation of the State banks out of existence for their benefit, and endowing them with the exclusive privileges they have, is that they shall act as our fiscal agents and aid us in faithfully executing the laws. Have they done so? Do they propose to do so? Let us see.

We have said, by law, that silver coin shall be a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private. They deny that it can be, or ought to be, paid to them in payment of the principal and interest on the obligations they hold, though they agree that it may be to all other public creditors. They make systematized war on our silver coinage; they seek to take the legal-tender quality from the greenback in which their own notes are payable; in short, their conduct is and has been unbecoming in agents dealing with their principal.

I ask would any private man extend the powers and privileges of agents who treated them thus?

We provided by law that silver certificates should be received for all debts due to the United States, and, very justly, fearing that the banks might make war upon them, we made it a condition in their renewed charters, the violation of which should authorize a forfeiture, that they should not belong to any organization which refused to receive silver certificates at the clearing-house.

They not only repudiated and annulled the known will and object of Congress in that regard, but in order to avoid the penalty of the law, and yet render nugatory its provisions, entered into a conspiracy (no milder word will express the idea) with other banks, not national, that neither silver nor silver certificates should be received by any of the banks in the combination; so that no silver or silver certificates can by possibility reach their clearing-house.

I have heard of "boycotting" and other forms of violating law while evading its penalties, but for the agents of Congress not only to defy their masters, but to induce State organizations to do so, which but for their influence might and probably would have aided us in giving faith and currency to our silver coin and certificates, was so perfidious, that I am amazed that they have the audacity to ask to be further trusted.

It is plain that we must hereafter devise other instrumentalities to provide and maintain a stable and satisfactory currency for the people. That can be done readily through the coin certificates of the denominations proposed by me.

I am not unmindful that all sorts of gloomy prophecies are indulged in here and elsewhere in regard to the dire calamities that will befall us if silver and gold should part company in their purchasing power and the balance of trade with foreign countries should turn against us. It is a sufficient answer to say that they have not parted company, and while less enterprising nations, like France, can keep them together with nearly equal quantities of each coin, and with over ten silver dollars to each inhabitant, we are in but little danger with two and one-half gold dollars for every silver dollar among a people occupying a continent larger than all Europe.

It might be well for gentlemen who delight to indulge in gloomy forebodings concerning remote possibilities to ask themselves whether the balance of trade is not just as likely to turn against us after we have destroyed our greenbacks, our silver certificates, and our silver coin, as it is now; and if it does, and gold leaves the country, when we have nothing else, whether their prophetic eye does not see miseries untold and bankruptcies unparalleled when the country is stripped of the only basis it had for a circulating medium. Then the value to the people of the despised greenback, the silver dollar, and its paper representatives would be appreciated by all but the Shylocks, whose hearts never felt human sympathy.

"Damn the people" expresses the sentiments of more of the millionaires who seek wealth by class legislation than care to say it aloud. It suits the pharisaical portion of them better to profess to be profoundly interested for the poor laborer, whose welfare is assumed to be their greatest concern. They are so much afraid that he will be required to take a degraded, dishonest, 80-cent dollar that they are consumed with anxiety on his account. "Oh, for a forty-parson power to sing thy praise, Hypocrisy!"

Mr. President, we may as well look the question squarely in the face. The war against silver and all currency based upon it was begun in this country simultaneously with similar action by Germany in 1871, and was the result as I believe of a grasping, selfish, unscrupulous combination among the moneyed classes at home and abroad. The time and circumstances favored the scheme. Neither gold nor silver were then in circulation, and the representatives of the people in Congress were not thinking about questions of that character. Silver was more valuable (as bullion) than gold up to 1871, but the legislative attorneys of the gold monometallists knew that if the United States could be induced, betrayed, or inveigled into a union with Germany in demonetizing silver as England had done years before, that condition would soon be reversed and the price of gold would rapidly advance under the combined influence and power of the leading nations of the world.

They doubtless thought that France, defeated and plundered, could not resist such a combination with only a few comparatively feeble nations at her back.

When the history of the war on silver and legal-tender notes in this country comes to be written and understood it will strike the American people as one of the most insidious and carefully concealed conspiracies ever attempted by interested and designing men to destroy, for selfish ends, one-half of the metallic currency of the world in order to double the purchasing power of the other half, which they had so adjusted that the great mass of it, in this country at least, was secured to them and to them alone by carefully concocted laws and regulations, the scope and effect of which they hoped to conceal until it was too late for the people either to resist or remonstrate.

The act of July 14, 1870, had secured the payment of the principal and interest of all the bonds of the United States in gold and silver coin of the then standard value. The time within which about $735,000,000 could be paid had been extended till 1907, and all of them had written on their face, as part of the obligation—

> The principal and interest are exempt from the payment of all taxes and duties of the United States, as well as from taxation in any form, by or under State, municipal, or local authority.

The object and effect of this being that the bondholding millionaire can, with his liveried servants, drive his carriage without cost to him over roads built by his tax-oppressed neighbors—the tax-gatherers can not invade his palace. He is relieved from all the burdens of taxation for schools, churches, or railroad bonds issued by States, counties, or cities; in short, for all public objects, even to the police that guard his wealth. He was made, by law, the drone in the hive, for whom all the workers should toil. Only one step more was needed to make him absolute master over all the other classes of his fellow-citizens, and that was to increase as much as possible the purchasing-power of his untaxed and untaxable coin.

It was obvious that if one-half of the world's coinage could be destroyed the scarcity thereby created would enable him to buy with the remaining half twice as much of the property, real and personal, which the tax-payers owned and labored to produce as he could if the coinage of both gold and silver continued free and unrestricted, as they always had been prior to 1873.

The action of Germany in 1871–'72, as I said, gave shape and motive power to the crusade of the bondholders against silver, which was cunningly, insidiously, and secretly consummated by the infamous act of February 28, 1873, and the fraudulent manipulation of the Revised Statutes, both of which were in 1878 swept away by the indignant representatives of an outraged people overriding the veto of the President as soon as they realized the fraud that had been perpetrated upon them.

The natural and universal consequences of contraction followed the destruction of the silver coin and the contraction of the currency. During the five years from 1873 to 1878 the tramp was abroad in the land; starving men, willing to work, were begging bread. Money was said then, as it is said now, to be abundant. Of course it was. It always is when no man dare invest in property or produce goods which he knows will not bring more than half the price when he has to pay the debt, as they would when he borrowed the money to enable him to purchase or produce them.

No better illustration of that truth is needed than the fact that the same amount of the products of human labor will not now pay off that portion of the public debt of the United States still unpaid as would have paid it fifteen years ago, when it was over one billion more, nominally, than it is now. The benefit the people were entitled to receive from the reduction of the debt has been neutralized by the increase of the purchasing-power of money.

Mr. President, I wish I could read before the Senate and make part of the permanent records of the country an article by Emile De Laveleye, in the May number of the Contemporary Review, on "The economic crisis and its causes;" in which he proves beyond peradventure that the rejection by England and Germany of silver as one of the bases of circulation has caused more distress in these countries and in the world than any other cause, and perhaps more than all other causes combined.

I will, however, read one or two extracts, which show that the apparent surplus of money is often caused by its scarcity. He says:

> With respect to money a strange phenomenon is observable which occurs in the case of no other merchandise. The quantity of money has but to be lessened for there to be more than enough, and the more it diminishes the more will the excess be felt. The reason is this: When the quantity of means of exchange decreases two consequences result. In the first place, prices fall, and therefore less cash is necessary for the operation of exchanges and the effecting of transactions; there is therefore no insufficiency of money; and secondly, there seems to be too much money because, as the crisis consequent on the fall in prices puts a restraint on transactions, less money is necessary, and this therefore is unemployed and appears to be in excess.

Again, he says:

> The evils produced during the first period were admirably described by the American Monetary Commission of 1876, which simply depicted what was taking place before its eyes.
>
> The very same reasons which make capitalists refuse to exchange money, whose command over property is increasing, for property, whose command over money is decreasing, also makes them to refuse to exchange it for labor. In a commercial sense industrial enterprises are never undertaken nor carried on except with the hope and expectation of gain.
> This expectation, unless under exceptional conditions, falling markets destroy. While capitalists, for these reasons, can not afford to invest money in productive enterprises, still less can anybody afford to borrow money for such investments at any rate of interest, however low, and but little money is now borrowed except for purely speculative ventures, or to supply personal and family wants, or to renew old obligations. Money withdrawn from circulation and hoarded in consequence of falling prices, although neither paying wages nor serving to exchange the fruits of industry nor performing any of the true functions of money, is nevertheless not unproductive.
> It may not be earning interest, but it is enriching its owner through an increase of its own value, and that, too, without risk and at the expense of society. * * * The peculiar effect of a contraction in the volume of money is to give profit to the owners of unemployed money through the appreciation of its purchasing power by the mere lapse of time. It is falling prices that rob labor of employment and precipitate a conflict between it and money capital; and it is the appreciating money that renders the contest an unequal one and gives to money capital the decisive advantage over labor and over other forms of capital invested in industrial enterprises.
>
>
> The labor of the past is enslaving the labor of the present; at least that portion of the labor of the past which has been crystallized into money is enabled, through a shrinkage of its volume, and while lying idle in the hands of its owners, to increase its command over present labor and over all forms of property. The laborers must make their wants conform to their diminished earnings. Consumption is, therefore, constantly shrinking toward such limits as necessity requires.
> Production, which must be confined to the limits indicated by consumption, is constantly tending to a minimum, whereas its appliances, built up under more favorable conditions, are sufficient to supply the maximum of consumption. Thus idle money, idle capital, idle labor, idle machinery stand facing each other, and the stagnation spreads wider and wider.
> It is in the shadow of a shrinking volume of money that disorders, social and political, gender and fester; that communism organizes, that riots threaten and destroy, that capitalists conspire and workmen combine, and that the revenues of government are dissipated in the employment of laborers or in the maintenance of increased standing armies to overawe them.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] is, I think, entitled to the credit of that wonderful presentation of facts. Speaking not long ago of the rapid rise in the price of our 4 per cent. bonds from 123 to 127, he said to me: "Men who have money find it more profitable to gamble in 'money futures' than in 'property futures.'" That covered the case and exhausted the argument. No man dares borrow money to invest in production of goods when the product will not bring enough to pay back the money borrowed; and no man cares to lend when the money increases in value while lying idle in his own hands more than the interest he could get for its use.

The plain, unlearned people of the country know that destruction of silver means doubling the value of gold and taking from them half the value of all they labor to produce. They never consented to the passage of any law which produced such results. The law which passed the English Parliament in 1824 could no more be passed now, when suffrage is so widely extended, than it could be in the Congress of the United States now when the motives and purposes of its advocates are understood.

The Parliament of England before the reform bill of 1836 was in no sense a representative body. It legislated for the aristocracy and the annuitants only. The laboring poor had no rights which it felt under any obligation to respect. A highly respectable authority describes the English Parliament of that day as follows:

The house of commons did not at that time index public opinion because of radical defects in its constitution. The rotten-borough system then prevailed. The whole population of the kingdom was 21,000,000, but those who voted for members of the house numbered only 400,000. The Duke of Norfolk was himself represented by eleven members, Lord Lonsdale by nine, Lord Darlington by seven, and the Duke of Rutland, the Marquis of Buckingham, and Lord Carrington each had six—forty-three members representing six persons! The borough of Old Sarum had two members, who were elected by one voter, who kept an ale-house, while the great cities of Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Bath, with a united population of over 400,000 souls, had six members elected by a constituency of 105 voters. The borough of Bramber had two members, representing a male population of 56 persons, while Gatton and Dunwich had four members—two elected by 6 voters and two by 7, and so on. These boroughs were held as a property; Gatton being valued at the good round figure of one hundred thousand British pounds sterling, or half a million dollars, as a mere investment, because it supplied a seat in the house of commons.

Listen to what the historian Alison says on this crisis, and volumes of cumulative evidence could be furnished to support it:

The distress among the mercantile classes for years after the dreadful crisis of 1825, of the agricultural interests during the lowering of prices from 1832 to 1835, was extreme. The investment of capital in agriculture was during this distress everywhere grievously abridged, and in many places totally annihilated. Ireland, during the whole period, had been in a state of smothered insurrection.

The heart sickens at the evidence, numerous and incontrovertible, which the parliamentary reports of the last ten years have accumulated of widespread, and often long-enduring, suffering among the laboring poor of England. * * * Since the peace the all-important question arises, What was it that had this effect? The answer is, It was the contraction of the currency which has been the chief cause of all these effects.—England in 1815 and 1845; or a Sufficient and Contracted Money, page 51.

Times have changed; the English people vote now; other ideas are coming to the front. I read the following report of a meeting held in London on the 7th of this month:

The silver question—An animated discussion by English bankers in London—They resolve that to remonetize silver means greater prosperity.

LONDON, July 8.

An important meeting of the British and Colonial Chambers of Commerce was held yesterday at which there was an animated discussion of the silver question and its bearings upon the commerce of India, Australia, and Great Britain. Mr. Henry H. Gibbs, ex-governor of the Bank of England, opened the proceedings by a strong speech, showing the world-wide importance of restoring the monetary value of silver. Sir Robert W. Fowler, M. P., the London banker and ex-lord mayor, opposed the idea in a speech which was feeble in comparison with that of Mr. Gibbs, and was followed by two Indian members.

Both of these contended that the effect of the depreciation of silver must be finally the ruin of the wheat and cotton industries of America, and the development of India as the chief wheat and cotton exporter of the world. They, therefore, protested against England's aiding America to restore the value of silver at the expense of the interests of India.

Mr. Paul F. Irdman, an East India merchant, argued that England had other interests besides those of India, which stood sorely in need of the restoration of silver, and trusted that Mr. Gibbs's ideas would be adopted by the meeting.

Mr. Crump, of the London Times, denounced the agitation of the silver question as the work of the silver miners of Nevada, and their allies, the Washington ring.

Mr. Moreton Frewen opposed Mr. Crump in a strong speech in behalf of the farmers in the West and the planters in the South of America, and a resolution was passed by a vote 28 to 15, amid great excitement, declaring that the remonetization of silver would relieve the depression under which trade is now staggering. The meeting is regarded as highly important, and its influence upon the coming silver demonstration in Lancashire must necessarily be very strong.

There are volumes in that statement. I might cite the action of the German associations, demanding the restoration of their silver coinage, and the almost defiant attitude of the "Reichstag" against the despotic orders of Prince Bismarck, but I will content myself with the assertion that the people of Great Britain and Germany only need the assurance of the United States that we mean in good faith, and at all hazards, to maintain gold and silver coin and their paper representative on terms of equality, in spite of the clamor of those who are interested in doubling the purchasing power of gold by making it the only standard of value, to make them insist, with such emphasis that their rulers will not dare to disregard them, that silver shall be restored to its old and time-honored relation with gold in all transactions, great and small, public and private.

I said that the American people never consented to the demonetization of silver by the act of 1873 and the Revised Statutes. I am not unmindful that official and unofficial statements have been made denouncing all who dare to say what I do now as fools and slanderers, and parade has been made of reports and bills looking to that end as conclusive evidence that every intelligent legislator knew all about the action then taken. In answer to all these arguments I assert that no member of either House of Congress, either in the great debate in 1878, when silver coinage was restored, or before or since, has ever ventured to assert that he knew that it was done either by the act of February, 1873, or the Revised Statutes, or both; and none of them ever will.

Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY was chairman of the committee having the bill in charge, and he said in the House of Representatives, when required to say what he knew about it:

In 1872, when I made the remarks which were cited by those gentlemen, and which have been frequently quoted in both Houses, and always with an air as much as to say that to convict this man of the crime of having been instructed by the logic of events would forever settle this momentous question, we were not using coin, and no gentleman in either House appears to have appreciated the scope and magnitude of the silver question or to have given it special study. Hence the bill—and I wish gentlemen to know what that bill was; it was a bill to reorganize the mints, not to revise the coin money of the country, but to reorganize the mints, and it was passed without allusion in debate to the question of the retention or abandonment of the standard silver dollar. The then Speaker of the House, now a distinguished member of the Senate, and Hon. Mr. VOORHEES, of Indiana, who is also a member of that body, were then members of this House, and during the last Congress this colloquy occurred between them. It was, I think, denied by Mr. VOORHEES that members of the House knew that the bill proposed to demonetize the silver dollar, and to sustain his view he said to the ex-Speaker: "Did you know it, sir?" "No," said Senator Blaine; "did you?" "No," replied Senator VOORHEES.

I was chairman of the committee that reported the original bill, and I aver on my honor that I did not know the fact that it proposed to drop the standard dollar, and did not learn that it had done it for eighteen months after the passage of the substitute offered by Mr. Hooper, when I disputed the fact. The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Garfield] who now leads this side of the House was then as now an attentive and already a distinguished member of the House; yet when in joint debate before the people of Ohio in October, 1877, the question arose as to who was responsible for its demonetization, he frankly said he did not know that such a provision was in the bill when it passed the House. I state this the more freely in his absence because I informed him that I intended to do so; and he replied, "It is the case; I did make that statement, and it is true."

Nor did the President who signed the bill know that it abolished legal-tender standard silver dollars, for in his letter to Mr. Cowdrey of October 6, 1873, cited by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER], he said:

"Silver will gradually take the place of this currency, and, further, will become the standard of values, which will be hoarded in a small way. I estimate that this will consume from $200,000,000 to $300,000,000 in time of this species of our circulating medium. * * * I confess to a desire to see a limited hoarding of money. It insures a firm foundation in time of need. But I want to see the hoarding of something that has a standard value the world over. Silver has this.

Much more and perhaps more conclusive proof even than that might be adduced to substantiate the truth of my assertion, but I am content to stand on Judge KELLEY's statement, at least until some Senator says he knew at the time what was done and avows that the act of 1873 and changes in the Revised Statutes were made with his knowledge and consent. When any gentleman makes such an avowal I will show, especially in regard to the change made in the statutes, that he aided in practicing a deliberate fraud on the American people, as the managers at that revision asserted and reiterated in the most emphatic manner that no existing law was changed or modified in any regard.

It was on the faith of these repeated assurances that the Revised Statutes were adopted; yet they struck the legal-tender quality from the standard silver dollar; still the gold worshipers declare it was done openly, fairly, and with full knowledge on the part of Congress. All these assertions are refuted by the facts in the RECORD, and if they were not so refuted the condition of the country, the needs of business, the amount and adjustment of our indebtedness, Federal, State, and individual, made the destruction of silver as coinage a most disgraceful and indefensible performance.

The national debt exceeded $2,000,000,000. Silver of the standard value of July 14, 1870, was one of the two metals in which it was all expressly payable. The silver mines of the West were rapidly developing their productive power. The debt of the States, corporations, and people more than doubled the national debt. There was only $135,000,000 of gold coin in the country, of which the Treasury and the banks held $98,000,000, and other banks and the people held $37,000,000—not as much by many millions as is locked up in the Treasury to-day on the pretense that it is needed to guard greenbacks. There were $400,000,000 of greenbacks to guard then as against $346,000,000 now; there were $354,000,000 of national-bank notes authorized then against $250,000,000 outstanding to-day, and only $98,000,000 held by the Treasury and the banks, with no reserve in the country to sustain it.

In view of these and many other facts I might state, it is simply absurd to contend that the American people consented to the demonetization and destruction of their silver coinage, or that it was done knowingly by their representatives. Even the ever-vigilant reporters for the press did not find it out, which shows that it was a well-kept secret. No possible reason can be imagined why the people or their representatives should deprive themselves of the right to pay their debts according to their contracts, and double the value of gold in the hands of a few or reduce the value of all they had one-half to enrich the bondholders, to whom all the gold from customs was pledged. Everything proves that that legislation was the result of a secret combination of the holders of our bonds to enrich them and to ruin everybody else.

The truth is, that the national banks and bondholders then believed that they could control the legislation and finances of the country as they pleased, and they combined to destroyed all the coin and currency except gold and national-bank notes. The legislation of the years that follow proves it.

There was, as shown by the Finance Report for 1873, only $135,000,000 of gold in the United States at that time; the Treasury and the banks held $98,000,000 of that. The national-bank notes were made by law payable in lawful money, that is, in greenbacks.

The monometallists have struggled from that day to this to deprive the greenbacks of their legal-tender quality, still leaving them lawful money; that is, money good enough to pay off the bank notes with when payment of any of them are demanded, but not good enough for any citizen to tender to his creditor in payment of his obligations; he was to be required to borrow gold from the banks for that purpose at such premium as they could exact from his necessities. That was another of the contrivances to degrade greenbacks and keep them at a discount with gold.

The banks were, up to 1875, limited by law in their issues to $354,000,000, and New England had the lion's share of that. They managed to reduce the legal-tender notes from over $400,000,000 to $354,000,000 in 1873. Black Friday came, and $28,000,000 of greenbacks were thrown on the market to save Wall street from bankruptcy, making $382,000,000. They were legalized by a subsequent act.

In the mean time the national banking system was readjusted to save the East from distributing the surplus it held illegally, and they were allowed to issue notes without limit, while provision was made to retire all the greenbacks in excess of $300,000,000, and a construction was sought to be given to the resumption act which required all the greenbacks to be canceled and permanently retired as soon as they were presented at the Treasury for redemption after January 1, 1879.

Contraction and destruction of all our currency except national-bank notes, which were authorized to be issued without limit, and repudiation of everything but gold coin and bullion was the order of the day from 1873 to 1878. Distress, financial ruin, and general stagnation in business prevailed in every part of the land. Bankers and bondholders alone prospered; they alone could command gold, as all the custom-house receipts were pledged to them, and nothing but gold, after silver was demonetized, was receivable there.

Neither gold nor silver coin ever could or ever can be demanded from a national bank even for its own notes when presented at its own counter, for payment. They have not resumed specie payment and do not intend to. The act of June 20, 1874, prohibited a demand for the redemption of any national-bank notes from any bank except those issued by the bank itself, and they could always be kept far from home. The national banks are not required to take their own notes in payment of the obligations of the United States held by them, nor for the interest on the bonds which secure their circulation, while every other creditor of the Government is compelled to receive their notes in full discharge of its obligations to him.

Section 5182 Revised Statutes provides:

That the national-bank notes shall be received at par in all parts of the United States in payment of taxes, excises, public lands, and all other dues to the United States, except duties on imports; and also for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, and associations within the United States, except interest on the public debt, and in redemption of the national currency.

Thus every creditor of the United States is compelled to take the promises to pay of national banks, except the national banks, who owe them, and they are not to this day required to pay either gold or silver coin to redeem their notes. They have not yet resumed specie payment and do not propose to.

The greenback is redeemable in silver coin; it is only a coin certificate; it would be lawful money even if deprived of its legal-tender quality. Therefore all the provisions of the act of July 12, 1882, carefully avoid the use of the words "legal-tender" notes when designating the money in which national-bank notes may be or shall be redeemed for the next twenty years under their renewed charters; and in settling up under their old ones, and in all its provisions, it provides that they shall be liquidated in "lawful money."

Even after resumption they would not agree to pay in coin; not even in silver coin or in legal-tender notes; yet they and their advocates, official and unofficial, in and out of Congress, have kept up an unrelenting war upon the legal-tender quality of the greenback, so as to degrade it, and yet pay all their obligations with it, because it would still be lawful money.

Mr. Burke said:

The most dangerous class in the state is an extensive, discontented, moneyed interest.

They, and they alone, combine, call conventions, make denunciatory and inflammatory speeches, evade and defy Congressional enactments, and seek to spread discontent with, and distrust of, the coin of the United States. No laborer nor combination of laborers have ever complained of the greenback or the silver dollar or its paper representative; they never suspected that they were being defrauded till the banks constituted themselves their guardians, and through their speeches and their "press" raised a clamor against silver in the (so-called) interest of the laboring poor.

They tried to annul the contract which they required us to make with them on the 14th of July, 1870, which provided that they should be entitled to receive payment of both the principal and interest of their bonds in gold or silver coin, of the standard value of that date, hoping to get a decision from the then Attorney-General that their bonds were payable in gold. After silver was stricken down they caused the then Secretary of the Treasury to write a letter, asking his opinion on that subject. The letter and answer are as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., April 21, 1877.

SIR: I beg leave to call your attention to, and ask your opinion upon, the following questions growing out of the refunding act of July 14, 1870, to wit:

Can I stipulate in the body of the 4 per cent. bonds about to be issued that they shall be redeemable in coin of the present standard value; that is, the standard value at the date of their issue, or must it be the date of the law?

I submit a statement prepared by Hon. H. F. French, assistant Secretary, having reference to the laws.

It may become important to the public interests to make the new bonds payable in coin of the present standard; that is, gold coin. Some doubts have been expressed upon whether previous bonds issued under acts passed prior to 1873 are not legally payable in silver coin. This question may become important, as any doubt upon the legal terms of a public security affects its value.

Very respectfully,

JOHN SHERMAN, Secretary.

Hon. CHARLES DEVENS,
Attorney-General.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, April 26, 1877.

SIR: In answer to your letter of the 21st instant, requesting my opinion upon the following question growing out of the refunding act of July 14, 1870, to wit, "Can I stipulate in the body of the 4 per cent. bonds about to be issued that they shall be redeemable in coin of the present value, that is, the standard value at the date of their issue, or must it be the date of the law," I have the honor to reply:

The act provides for the issue of bonds "redeemable in coin of the present standard value." The word "present" undoubtedly refers as a matter of date to the time when the act was passed, and not to the time when the bonds were thereafter issued. It contemplated that a long period would elapse before it would finally be carried into effect, and that changes in the coinage of the country might occur during that period.

Whatever changes in the coinage should occur, these bonds were, however, to be redeemed in coin of the standard value as it existed at the date of the act. By this provision the holder was guarded against any depreciation that might take place in the value of the coin, and the Government would not be compelled to pay the additional value should the coinage be appreciated. All the bonds issued under the act were to stand alike, no matter what was the date when such bonds were issued. Each was to be redeemable in coin which was included in the authorized coinage of the country at the date referred to, it being of the standard value as it then existed. Since the law was passed, no change has taken place in the standard value of the coin. It is understood that there has been a certain change in the coinage of the country, and that silver dollars have now ceased to exist practically as coin.

It has been further provided by the statute of February 12, 1873 (Revised Statutes, sections 3585-'86), that "the silver coins of the United States shall be a legal tender at their nominal value for any amount not exceeding $5 in any one payment."

Notwithstanding this practical change in the coinage of the country, and the passage of this act in regard to legal tenders, the form of bond to be issued by you should not be changed so far as the mode in which it is to be redeemed is concerned. It was not intended that this should be varied according to the changes which might be made in the coinage, because a definite rule was given by reference to the coin of a particular date. That which will pay the bonds heretofore issued under this act will pay the bonds which you may hereafter issue.

It can not be authoritatively said that the words "payable in coin" or "payable in gold" are equivalent to the words used by the statute. Even if this leaves open for discussion the question whether bonds issued under th s act are or are not redeemable in silver coin of the character and standard which existed July 14, 1870, it is not a doubt which it is in your power to remedy by the use of words in the bond other than those which this statute provides.

While I comprehend the difficulty suggested in your letter and the convenience that there might be in removing any question upon this matter, I am, therefore, of opinion that it would not be safe to issue the bonds, except as redeemable in coin of the standard value of July 14, 1870.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

CHAS. DEVENS, Attorney-General.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
Secretary of the Treasury.

The answer of Attorney-General Devens will be found on page 24 of Executive Document No. 9, second session of the Forty-sixth Congress, but for some reason unknown to me the letter of the Secretary is not to be found. My colleague, Hon. W. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE, procured it, however, from the archives of the Treasury Department, so that there is no doubt as to its authenticity.

That official's answer settled the question, and the absurd pretenses about Jay Cooke's advertisements, and the understanding about gold, and gold alone being the coin in which the bonds were to be paid, were exposed and settled by Mr. Devens; the indorsement he directed to be made was made and is now a part of each bond, in accordance with the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States.

In the mean time the contraction of the greenbacks was hurrying on at a rapid rate. The representatives of the people became alarmed when they saw that they were reduced from $384,000,000 to $347,000,000, and that they were being converted into notes of large denominations, so as to be useless for currency.

They called a halt by the passage of the following law on the 31st day of May, 1878:

An act to forbid the further retirement of United States legal-tender notes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the passage of this act it shall not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury or other officer under him to cancel or retire any more of the United States legal-tender notes. And when any of said notes may be redeemed or be received into the Treasury under any law, from any source whatever, and shall belong to the United States, they shall not be retired, canceled, or destroyed, but they shall be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation: Provided, That nothing herein shall prohibit the cancellation and destruction of mutilated notes and the issue of other notes of like denomination in their stead, as now provided by law.

All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Approved May 31, 1878.

That act settled the question raised under the resumption act of January 14, 1875, as to the final redemption and retirement of the legal-tender notes after January 1, 1879.

Secretary Sherman, in his report dated December 3, 1877, asked for the passage of some such law for the double purpose of settling that question and of securing a convenient and satisfactory legal-tender currency to the people. He expressed his opinion that they could be reissued after 1879, adding:

But this construction is controverted, and should be settled by distinct provisions of law. It should not be open to doubt or dispute. The decision of this question by Congress involves not merely the construction of existing law, but the public policy of maintaining in circulation United States notes either with or without the legal-tender clause. These notes are of great public convenience; they circulate readily; are of universal credit; are a debt of the people without interest; are protected by every possible safeguard against counterfeiting, and when redeemable in coin at the demand of the holder form a paper currency as good as has yet been devised.

Congress by the act I have read not only complied with the request of the Secretary, it went further and repealed the law which authorized the reduction of the legal-tenders to $300,000,000 by making it unlawful to cancel or retire any more of them. It required them to be reissued and paid out again and kept in circulation, no matter from what source they were received; and it provided when they were mutilated and new notes had to be substituted for them that the new notes issued in their stead should be of like denominations as the mutilated notes that were for that cause canceled.

Congress did not intend to empower any Secretary to tamper with the then outstanding legal-tender notes. They were in a shape satisfactory to the law-making power, while before the passage of that act the Secretary could by law cancel one thousand mutilated one-dollar notes and issue in their stead one one-thousand-dollar note. That power was taken from him, and he was restricted to the right, and the duty was imposed upon him, to issue notes of like denominations in the place of those destroyed. The reason was obvious. As Secretary Sherman said, they circulated readily in their then form, being of denominations both large and small; they had universal credit; they were not easily counterfeited; they were the best paper currency that had yet been devised.

The national banks were allowed to issue their notes without limit and of any denomination of not less than $5. They needed large amounts of legal-tenders for reserve and redemption funds. If they could require the Secretary to issue legal-tenders in such denominations as they chose they could convert the ones, twos, fives, and tens into one-thousand-dollar, five-thousand-dollar, and ten-thousand-dollar notes and destroy the greenback circulation among the people and occupy the field themselves. Nothing better illustrates the difficulty of restraining executive officers from doing what they please, fas aut nefas, than the fact that every Secretary of the Treasury from 1878 till now has changed the denominations of the legal-tender notes to suit his own ideas of convenience, and they claim that the law of 1878 gives them the right to do so. If it does I confess my inability to construe a law.

It was to prevent the exercise of that assumed power that the House of Representatives inserted into this bill as a limitation on the use of the money appropriated the proviso: "That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes of large denominations in lieu of notes of small denominations canceled or retired."

That is not new legislation; it is an express order to our Treasury officials not to violate the law.

I do not assert that the public interest has suffered, or that it is likely to suffer, by the changes in the denominations which have been or are likely to be made; that is not the question. My position is that no official has a right to violate the law, even when he thinks he is improving the service by doing so. The House was right in ordering obedience. I think the legal-tender notes are in better shape now than they were in 1878, as the following table shows:

Denominations of legal-tender notes outstanding at the dates named.

Denominations.	June 30, 1878.	May 31, 1886.
Ones	$20,929,874 30	$18,272,775 40

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE COMPTROLLER OF CURRENCY,
Washington, June 25, 1886.

The gain, it will be observed, is in the five-dollar notes at the expense of the five-hundred-dollar. That is a great improvement over the condition in 1878; but they may all be converted into five-hundred-dollar notes if the Secretary has the power, which all of them have exercised, as I insist, in violation of law.

Mr. President, I ought not to close these remarks without adding that the gold in the country is now fourfold more than it was when silver was demonetized in 1873, and that we have acquired more gold and added it to our stock since silver coinage was restored in 1878 than all the silver coinage from that date till now amounts to. The Director of the Mint makes the following statement:

GOLD COIN IN THE COUNTRY.

[From Mint reports.]

July 1, 1873:
In the Treasury and national banks	$98,000,000
In other banks and in hands of the people	37,000,000
	135,000,000
January 1, 1879:
In the Treasury and national banks	147,700,000
In other banks	11,000,000
In hands of people	119,600,000
	278,300,000
July 1, 1885:
In the Treasury and national banks	219,700,000
In State banks	26,000,000
In other banks and with people	297,500,000
	542,200,000

This amount would have been $582,200,000, but the present Director of the Mint deducted $30,000,000 for the consumption in the arts from 1873 to 1880, which sum was not deducted before that time for the reason that it was claimed to be offset by the coin brought in by immigrants in excess of that taken out by travelers.

By the most careful estimates the excess of gold exports over imports will not exceed $3,000,000 for the present fiscal year.

I have not the official figures for 1886, but it is safe to say that the gold coin in the country now is not less than $540,000,000 as against $135,000,000 in 1873 and $278,000,000 in 1879. The total coinage of silver dollars since 1878 is less than $240,000,000; the gain in gold has exceeded that sum since 1878 by over $20,000,000, yet we are told that gold is taking wings and fleeing away, and that same old tradition called Gresham's law is going to ruin us, if it has not done so already.

Mr. President, the United States owes next to nothing abroad and substantially nothing at home outside of ordinary expenditures that can be paid till 1891 and 1907. The premium on our 4 per cent. bonds has risen in a few months from 123 to 127. The exports and imports of gold are principally in bullion, and almost altogether on private account. Our foreign commerce is increasing and our home industries are improving. Our greatest need is a full, reliable, and convenient circulating medium, which I think my amendment to this bill will furnish, and the prompt restoration to the people of the money gathered into the Treasury by our tax-collectors. I repeat what I have in every form of speech and illustration so often asserted, that the greatest calamity of all is the hoarding and locking up of money in the Treasury; hence my anxiety to require our Treasury officials to pay it out promptly, and pay it out in such form as will best promote the general welfare.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator from Kentucky move a substitute for the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BECK. I offer my amendment as a substitute for the Senate committee's amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In what part of the clause is it proposed to be inserted?

Mr. ALLISON. Before that substitute gets too far I desire to reserve any point of order that I can reserve upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator raise a point of order now?

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has not yet carefully read the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. ALLISON. I have. I think it changes a great many existing laws and is in the nature of general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has no doubt that this is general legislation of the broadest character, and on that ground it is not in order as an amendment to this bill. The Chair has not read it through, but so far as he has gone it is clearly so.

Mr. BECK. It changes existing law, and as an original proposition I agree that it would not be in order; but I ask the Chair to read the provision made by the House on page 19 from line 435 to line 454 inclusive, which the House had a right to insert in the bill, and which being in we have a right to amend, because that is general legislation and a great deal more comprehensive in its scope than what I propose. I have a clear right to vote for the House provision as it stands, of course, because it is here. I do not want it, I do not think it wise legislation; but I think it can be amended so as to make it wise legislation, and hence the amendment I have offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. We can not apply the rules of the Senate to whatever is proposed by the other House. The House must judge of that matter for itself. But under the rules of the Senate the Chair is of opinion that this amendment is not in order. If the Senator desires, he may take an appeal or if the Senator wishes the question submitted to the Senate it will be done.

Mr. BECK. I only want to say one word. I desire the Chair to look at it—I will offer it again in the Senate—from this standpoint: Assume that the law is to-day what the House proposes to make it, is my modification of it new legislation? The House having asserted as much, for the purpose of acting upon the point of order that must be assumed to be existing law because it was made in order by the House; and we can not take the provision out under a point of order. Then the question is, assuming that to be true, have we not a right to amend it? Hence the amendment I have offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the proviso moved by the committee is entirely new legislation not affecting or even pertinent or germane to anything contained in the House proposition.

Mr. BECK. I will offer this again in the Senate after further time for reflection and contemplation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is out of order.

Mr. BECK. I shall have the right to offer it again in the Senate notwithstanding the impression of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Certainly. The Chair will submit the question to the Senate at any time it is desired.

Mr. BECK. I will offer it when the bill is reported to the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that if the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky is not in order the amendment offered by the committee is not in order. If the Senator from Kentucky can not amend the clause because the amendment is in the nature of general legislation, how can the committee do the same thing?

Mr. FRYE. That point has not been made yet.

Mr. TELLER. That point I desire to make now.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator makes the point seriously I should like to say a word about it.

Mr. TELLER. I do make it seriously.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly it is in order to strike out provisions that are in the House bill; and I should think that if those provisions were struck out the Senator himself would waive the point of order on the proviso, which is the only thing subject to the point of order. The proviso is in the direction of the views of the Senator from Colorado, and I should hope that after we have stricken out the House provision he would not disturb the harmony of this proceeding by suggesting that the proviso should not be inserted. Certainly it is in order to strike out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that all the amendments proposed by the committee are in order except the proviso.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to be heard on that question.

Mr. TELLER. I do not raise any question on the proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The other amendments merely change the language of the clause grammatically.

Mr. TELLER. The proviso is the only merit there is in the action of the committee.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand the Senator from Colorado does not raise the point of order on the proviso.

Mr. TELLER. I raise the point of order on striking out and inserting the words in the upper part of the clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that that is a mere question of grammar.

Mr. TELLER. Bad grammar does not vitiate the law if it passes in that shape.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks those amendments are in order.

Mr. TELLER. Well, we will reserve that point until we get into the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clause will be read as it will stand if the amendments of the committee be adopted.

The SECRETARY. In line 435 it is proposed to strike out the first word "That" and insert "And;" in line 437, after the words "denominations of," to strike out "ones" and insert "one" and strike out "twos" and insert "two;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. I think these amendments had better be agreed to as we go along. They are all different amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment striking out the word "That" and substituting the word "And." in line 435, will be regarded as agreed to if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection.

The SECRETARY. In line 437, after the word "denominations," it is proposed to strike out "ones" and insert "one."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is, in line 437, to strike out the word "twos" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is, after the word "dollars," in line 437, to strike out:

On all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury, in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government. That.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 440, before the words "the silver," to insert "And;" and in line 441, after the word "receivable," to insert "redeemable;" so as to read:

And the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable, redeemable, and payable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations is, in line 446, after the word "character," to strike out the words:

And shall be redeemable in standard silver dollars on demand, and when paid into the Treasury shall be reissued, subject to the provisions herein for the redemption of the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore put the question on the amendment and declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for a division.

Mr. HARRIS. Let us have the yeas and nays at once.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. Not knowing how he would vote on this amendment, I withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM (after having voted in the affirmative). I cast my vote, forgetting that I was paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. PAYNE (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. HAMPTON], and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TELLER. My colleague [Mr. BOWEN] is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN. I announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. KENNA] with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The result was announced—yeas 25, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Hawley,	Sherman,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Hoar,	Spooner,
Butler,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Frye,	Miller,	Wilson of Iowa.
Chace,	Gray,	Palmer,
Conger,	Hale,	Platt,
Dawes,	Harrison,	Sawyer,

NAYS—24.

Beck,	Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Vance,
Berry,	George,	Maxey,	Vest,
Brown,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Voorhees,
Call,	Harris,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Camden,	Ingalls,	Riddleberger,	Whitthorne,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Teller,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—27.

Blackburn,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Plumb,
Blair,	Hampton,	Manderson,	Ransom,
Bowen,	Hearst,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,
Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Cullom,	Kenna,	Morrill,	Sewell,
Eustis,	Logan,	Payne,	Van Wyck.
Fair,	McPherson,	Pike,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment inserting the proviso, which will be read.

Mr. BECK. What was the precise question just now voted on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question just voted on was striking out the words from line 446 to line 449. The question now is on inserting the proviso.

Mr. BECK. I desire to give notice that I shall ask for a separate vote on that question in the Senate, which was, I believe, striking out the words from line 446 to line 449; and I will ask for a separate vote in the Senate on the amendment striking out after the word "dollars," in line 437, down to the word "Government," in line 440; and also on the amendment inserting the word "redeemable" in line 441, after the word "receivable." I shall ask a separate vote on each of these when the bill comes into the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations propose to add to the clause just acted upon, at the end of line 449, the following proviso:

Provided, That said denominations of one, two, and five dollars may be issued in lieu of silver certificates of larger denominations in the Treasury, and to that extent said certificates of larger denominations shall be canceled and destroyed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now we go back to the terraces. The next amendment I believe in order reserved is the amendment, on page 58, respecting the Capitol terraces.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question pending upon that amendment.

Mr. HALE. When the Senate adjourned last night I gave notice of an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the Chair was not in at the moment, but he is advised that the then occupant of the Chair held the amendment of the committee to be out of order.

Mr. HALE. But I gave notice when the Senate adjourned that I had another amendment to offer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be now in order.

Mr. HALE. After the words "eighteen hundred and seventy-seven," in line 1432, I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That the work under the appropriation shall be done so as to provide committee-rooms upon the western front of the terraces, with proper ventilation and light from windows in the outer western wall.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I do not propose to occupy much of the time of the Senate upon this subject, because it is a thing in which I can have no greater interest than any other Senator. I wish to give in brief the history of this matter so far as it has depended upon the only thing that has given it life, and that is the appropriations of money for the work.

The Capitol as it stood ten years ago was a most beautiful and imposing and majestic structure. People of taste, of judgment, and of trained and discerning skill in architecture who had traveled the world over were always impressed when they viewed the Capitol. There were inconveniences about it. In its original structure not enough attention had been given to the convenience of Senators and members in occupying either the chambers of the legislative bodies or the committee rooms. The prevalent fault-finding about the building was that not enough attention had been given to the feature of air and light and ventilation from exterior walls. The halls of the two legislative bodies are castles in the center of the wings, coming nowhere to the sun, to the air, to the light, and many of the rooms in the Capitol are subject to the same objection. But all the same it was a great, beautiful, grand structure, and it ought to have been let alone. If it had not been for uneasy spirits, experimentalists who wanted to get hold of this building and to work out their own plans and their own devices and their own schemes, it would have been let alone, as it should have been.

Ten years ago and more the plan began to be urged and the idea mooted of changing the outside. It came up first upon a project to extend from the center in the form of a Greek cross wings to the east and to the west. That was abandoned, but during that discussion one thing was urged continually, and stress was laid upon it as an architectural feature, that the appearance of the building was low; that it was not high enough for its immense length and breadth. I think that was recognized by architects and by people of taste and judgment in every way.

When that plan was abandoned we first began to hear about this scheme for extending out upon the three sides, to the north and west and south, in the form of a new structure called the terrace. There was a bank of earth which was called a terrace. The question arose whether anything was needed to be done there, as the old Library project had been abandoned.

When that subject came before Congress, Senators, almost everybody, had a great deal of skepticism about it. It was a pretty serious question to deal with this magnificent building, situated on this commanding eminence as it is. Having commended itself to the taste and judgment of the world, it was a pretty serious thing to begin to meddle with its foundation, and it did not meet with much favor at first. But like everything else about Washington, like everything else that is urged upon Congress, the more it was repelled and discarded as an impracticable idea the more persistent the men became who were engaged in it.

At last the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and more especially a long-experienced member of that committee, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], for whom we all have the highest respect and reverence, became possessed of the idea that as well as being a sound public man and a good legislator he was an artist and architect, and that he could immensely improve this building about its foundation. He kept at it in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds until at last, through the aid of an architect imported from New York, a Mr. Olmsted, a plan was prepared for building out terraces of marble instead of the terrace made from the natural earth presented before, and as is commonly presented about buildings.

The history of that move, of that performance is rather an interesting one. When the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had succeeded, as that committee thought, in perfecting this plan for improving the appearance of the Capitol, and had got a report, and had got estimates made for this whole transaction, which it was said would cost $800,000 (and which, like every other estimate and like the whole plan, was essentially and fundamentally faulty and weak in the amount as in everything else), it became necessary to secure the attention of Congress, and the favorable attention of Congress, because Senators as well as Members were doubtful, skeptical, hesitating, were afraid that some grotesque, absurd thing might be ingrafted upon the foundation of this building which would be a shame and a reproach to the future.

The question came up first of giving the whole plan adopted, and that was abandoned. It could not be done; the House would not agree to it; the Senate would not agree to it. So it proceeded piecemeal, and from year to year the Senator from Vermont, representing the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, because he had found, as the committee had found, that they could not get any bill through that committed Congress to the whole plan.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It went through the Senate.

Mr. HALE. They could not get it through Congress. They must get it in the place where comes the test of embarking in any practical scheme of legislation requiring money about Washington, that is an appropriation in terms made. They came before the Committee on Appropriations, which had no more interest in this matter, and has no more interest in it to-day than any other committee, and no member of the committee has any more interest in it than the member of any other committee—they came before that committee and did not dare to propose that the whole scheme should be taken, but that Congress should embark in it and should test it.

The first appropriation was made four years ago for starting and developing to a limited extent this work; and the appropriations were made referring in their terms to certain plats and plans which were made. Since last night I have been hunting up my papers, for like other members of the Committee on Appropriations and members of other committees I have the fashion after a subject is closed of putting up the papers and filing them away because I may want to turn to them afterward. I remembered in the discussion last night that whenever this subject was brought to the Committee on Appropriations it never was urged upon them that these limited appropriations from year to year were to involve any plan that comprehended a blank, unrelieved wall upon the outside.

Mr. TELLER. What kind of a plan did you think it was?

Mr. HALE. I am coming to that. When we made the appropriations we made them upon little maps which were presented to us, and I have one of them here that I found. [Exhibiting.] The maps upon which we made the appropriations and which were submitted to us were like the one which I have in my hand.

Mr. EDMUNDS. A ground plan, and no elevation?

Mr. HALE. A ground plan.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And no elevation?

Mr. HALE. And no elevation. We were asked, in order to fix where the money should be placed, to mention by letters certain sections of this plan. They began with A on the north side, B, C, D, E, G, F, H, I, J, K, L, and M. In the old discussions upon the Library, upon carrying out the east and west wings in the form of a Greek cross, the question of committee-rooms was always uppermost and discussed; and the moment that the project was broached before the Committee on Appropriations to begin this work the question arose about committee room, and not one dollar I may say, and if I am wrong in this I ask any member of the Committee on Appropriations, then or now, present at any time, to contradict me—not a dollar of appropriation would have been given unless it had been believed that in accordance with the thread of the discussion on the old question of changing the Capitol there should be clean, fresh, and amply-lighted exterior committee-rooms.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Maine permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. I understand the Senator to state now that there never has been any appropriation made in bulk for this work, but the appropriations have always been made by parcels at the solicitation of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, represented by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], and that it was always distinctly understood that there should be committee-rooms with windows upon the outside. Do I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. HALE. Always.

Mr. VEST. I wish to ask the Senator if in 1884, in the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress, the Appropriations Committee did not report unanimously the bill which I hold in my hand, entitled "An act for the completion of the Capitol terraces and the stairways connected therewith," appropriating $770,588.98 for that work, which was the full amount of the estimate, "the work to be done according to the plans and specifications furnished by Frederick Law Olmsted, landscape architect;" and if that bill, so reported by the committee of which he is a member, did not pass the Senate unanimously, as the RECORD shows? Now, let the Senator answer that.

Mr. HALE. I referred to that before. That project came to naught; it never passed the House of Representatives. Look at the discussion; look at the time when the bill was reported; look at the whole of the proceedings accompanying it, and the Senator can not find anywhere that there was any abandonment of the idea of committee-rooms.

Mr. TELLER. It was the indorsement of a plan which never had any windows at all. Olmsted's plan never had any windows.

Mr. HALE. I wish to say a word about that plan.

Mr. VEST. If the Senator will permit me, I shall not interrupt him again.

Mr. HALE. The Senator is himself one of the most generous men in allowing interruptions, and I think sometimes I trespass upon his generosity. I do not object to his interrupting me at any time.

Mr. VEST. I am much obliged for the compliment. But I say the Senator stated over and over again last night, and has reiterated it again to-day, that the Committee on Appropriations has never recommended any appropriation for this work except in parcels. He said it last night, or the RECORD is at fault, and my memory is at fault, and I undertake to say the memory of every Senator here. I produce a bill which passed the Senate unanimously, which was reported by the Committee on Appropriations unanimously, which appropriated the whole amount of the estimate according to the plans and specifications which I read last night, which I have here now, and which did not mention any committee-rooms or any windows on the outside.

Mr. HALE. Neither do the appropriations that were made, for the reason that always in the conferences and always in the investigation of this matter it was declared that committee-rooms could be upon the outside in consonance with the plan. When Mr. Olmstead, the architect, appeared within the last ten days before the Committee on Appropriations and was asked by the chairman whether it was essential in this plan that there should be no windows upon the outside of this structure that they have built, or if windows could not be cut in there now, he declared that they could be and that it would not destroy the plan; that it was not considered by him as essential, but it was considered by Congress as essential.

Mr. HOAR. I do not know that I ought to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HALE. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Senator said it would not destroy the plan. Does he mean by that to say that the architect was of opinion that it would have no effect on the architectural beauty of the structure?

Mr. HALE. The architect did not say that; but it had been said, and the chairman asked the question thinking that it would bring out that answer from the architect, whether it would be practical now to cut these windows without destroying the effect of the plan, and the architect answered that they could be, and did not lay stress upon that.

Mr. TELLER. It would destroy the plan, but not the effect.

Mr. HALE. He put it in that way. But I was going on in order. This plan which I found among my papers is a plan that does not give windows anywhere. It does not give windows on the Capitol itself. It is under the background of this structure that is projected out in front. It simply gives the outline. It does not give spaces.

Mr. TELLER. Being a background plan, it could not very well.

Mr. HALE. He had the diagram in his hand. The Senator from Vermont asked us to appropriate for section A. Where is section A? It is right there. Where is section B? It is right in the corner. Where is section C? He said "it is right along there." Then in order that this work should proceed not in an irresponsible way, they put on the appropriation which they made for the north side, after the little experiment which one of the Senators I know characterized as a tunnel or a canal by which we come in to the steps out here. After it had got so far along they wanted to proceed with the rooms and the terrace upon the north side, and the committee were so careful not to let it proceed irresponsibly that they tied up the appropriation which they gave, and provided that the work under the appropriation should be confined to the north front of the Capitol and should not extend westward beyond the line of the west front of the Senate wing of the Capitol. It did not mean that it should go on without from time to time holding it in check.

When we came here the next winter we found that that had been done, and that there were no committee-rooms on the north side. When the Senator from Vermont representing his committee came before the Senate Committee on Appropriations the first question asked him was, what had become of the plan of having committee-rooms there? The reason was not that the plan did not involve committee-rooms until you got around to the center, but that on the north side away from the sun it was thought that the rooms could be made for storage, and that we should not have the committee-rooms until we got around to the front; and so the committee upon that made an appropriation for the work in front.

I affirm—and I ask members of the Committee on Appropriations to contradict me if I am wrong—that when that appropriation was made and the plans declared where there should be work, no plan was shown to us, nothing indicating that here was a scheme for an entire wall to be run along, and that the desire of Congress for committee-rooms was to be disregarded.

When we came here this winter, and the committee found that this work had been going on, and the question arose as to what should be done further in the way of appropriations, it was a complete surprise to the committee when they went out on the western front and found that rooms had been made there without a particle of light in the exterior wall at the west.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who is now with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], will bear testimony that he himself was as much surprised as any member of the committee, and that when he went out there and saw that, he declared that he had been deceived in this matter.

Then for the first time it was found on investigating into the ulterior purposes of this architect and this scheme that the only rooms which can be used for committee-rooms, as much as we need them and as much as the need constantly is arising, were out opposite and in front of the center of the Capitol, in that little area shaped like that before the Secretary's desk here, upon which we look when we sit in the barber's chair looking out through the open window to the west, and not one of those committee-rooms is to have any outlook, any window, any light, out toward the west where all the winds blow, where the air is pure and sweet and clear, but every one of the committee-rooms opens upon this little area or court, which is closed, into which no wind can sweep, which whenever the sun runs high and the weather becomes warm, is hot and oppressive, so that a man in any one of those committee-rooms would be obliged to close the window to keep out the accumulated heat that would pour into the room the moment that he opened his window. No breath of life in the air from the heavens or the winds that blow can penetrate one of those rooms.

Mr. INGALLS. Like this Chamber.

Mr. HALE. Yes; just like this Chamber; and I say that is one of the features, and the inconvenient and unhealthy features of this Capitol as it was originally, which seem to be perpetuated and carried out by this plan.

Now, the question comes, what is to become of these rooms all along on the north side to the open air, all along on the west side to the open air? Opposite each wing, where the Senate sits and where the House sits, are large, spacious, lofty rooms, connected from an inner corridor with a bull's-eye light overhead like a coal cellar, and on the face to the west of those rooms is nothing but the blank, dark wall, purposely made to exclude light and air and ventilation. Yet it is a part of this plan to make that portion of the Capitol which the architect in the remarkable letter which was read last night characterizes as the cellar.

I never heard of the cellar being up above and open, and 15 or 18 or 20 feet above the level of the ground. But to carry out his plan of dungeons into which men might be immured, rather than clean, healthy, spacious committee-rooms, the architect sticks to his idea of a cellar. Those rooms are along this corridor, lighted from above, lighted perhaps by a little window opening into a court, no outside light, or ventilation, or air; and yet the plan embraces, as I have said, the feature of so using that floor which should be one of the most attractive and convenient and handy of any in the Capitol. There is to be the entrance from the center.

The corrider along the elevator that runs now is to run down another floor; there is to be egress and ingress freely; and if these rooms could have been given what a natural man would have supposed as a matter of course would be given to them, we should have found there some of the best committee-rooms that there are in this Capitol (I should be very glad to go into one of them) the way that buildings are built now, with asphalt and with lead linings, and with subcellars and with everything that can be made where there is no stint in money, and those rooms could be made the best of any in the Capitol. But they are closed, they are left cold, dark, and damp, and you can not ventilate them. The north rooms which were made for storage are so damp that if you put furniture into them in one week the varnish begins to drop, the paint peels off, the articles become damp. If you put papers in there they will not keep, they become damp and begin to rot—decay and putrefy. They are good for nothing, because every element and every consideration of convenience has been sacrificed by this plan of this architect, who tells us in that remarkable letter which was read last night that the only feature about the building is that it should have an imposing look. He says:

> Here is a great and costly building, the greater part of the cost of which has been directed to the purpose of producing a certain impression on the minds of those looking toward it, and an impression that should be associated with ideas of the strength and majesty of a great nation.

I agree that the strength and majesty of the structure should not be sacrificed:

> It was proposed to be accomplished by setting a strong wall into the face of the hill in front of the foundations of the building; that is to say, in front of its cellar wall. Such an outer wall, it was calculated, would have the effect upon the eye of a dam holding back whatever on its upper side looked liable to settle toward the down-hill side. Every dollar thus far spent on the terrace, and on the grounds in connection with it, has been spent on the supposition that this calculation was soundly made.

In another part of the letter the architect states that the great reason why this work has been entered upon and carried out after the fashion it is being carried out is that there was an impression before that the Capitol would squeeze out the ground around it and would settle, and that there was a lack of firmness in its base. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] participated in a very pungent and effective way, as is his habit, in the discussions with reference to carrying out the east and west wings for a new library accommodation; and I venture to say that in all of those discussions he will bear me out that this idea that the architectural effect of this building could be improved because it was necessary to put a wall or a dam out there to prevent the impression of sinking or squeezing out the ground never was heard of.

The thing that was heard of then in the discussions here and in the committee was that the building presented rather a squat appearance, and that this new work, instead of being a cellar, would add another story in effect to the building and would thereby in effect heighten it and would relieve that appearance. I wonder if the Senator from Kansas in those discussions ever heard before this letter from the architect of this idea that the object was to have a dam outside to prevent the Capitol from appearing to squeeze out the ground. And if Congress had been told what this design was not a dollar would ever have been appropriated for it. I venture this assertion that there are not ten Senators in this body who before the last two weeks ever knew or heard or believed there was a plan here for running a blank, bare, staring wall around the Capitol without a window in it.

Mr. TELLER. It was their own fault if they did not know it.

Mr. HALE. They did not know it; and in the solicitations with which the Committee on Appropriations were visited that was carefully concealed, and we made our appropriations and our references to this plan simply upon the plot of the ground in order to fix upon the diagram where the money was to be expended. I never saw any feature, nor any report, nor any diagram of this entire plan without windows upon the outside walls until I came here this winter.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would suggest to the Senator from Maine that there it is: "Referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed, December 5, 1883."

Mr. TELLER. There never was any other.

Mr. HALE. I know that document, the same one referred to last night.

Mr. HAWLEY. There is the illustration itself, and there are the specifications, all of which describe exactly that kind of wall, and repeat it over and over.

Mr. HALE. I have read those specifications. They do not say anything one way or other about windows. The truth is that at all the times when that feature was presented it was said, "Yes, you can have your committee-rooms, and your windows, and when we get to the west side it will be done." It was not pretended that it was a distinctive feature that there should be no windows, and Mr. Olmsted himself did not pretend that when he came last week before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator be so kind as to let me explain a matter? I am anxious to get at the truth.

Mr. HALE. I yield.

Mr. HAWLEY. Senators and members and everybody visiting the Capitol will remember a picture that hung for years on the terrace at the western front and at the foot of the entrance near what is to be the grand staircase, and which thousands of people have looked at as showing what was to be the future of the Capitol. There is a completed terrace in that picture precisely as described in the plan three years old, precisely as it is partly finished on the north and west sides.

Mr. TELLER. That was hung up at least five years ago.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have gone to the architect's office and inquired for it and it was dug out of the old lumber.

Mr. VEST. I raise the point of order on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. VEST. That the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine is out of order.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will withhold that for a few minutes, I am nearly through what I was going to say——

Mr. VEST. I will withdraw it for the present.

Mr. HALE. I have no feeling except to present this matter to Senators and then let it be disposed of. If the Senate does not desire these committee-rooms, then we can get along without them. I can, for one, if other Senators can. I was only giving the history to show that this plan is now sprung and that in the quarters that had the responsibility of appropriating this money this never was understood until the present time.

Now as to the beauty and the fitness of this long, unbroken band. I am not an architect; I do not know that any Senator here is an architect; the chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds [Mr. MAHONE] is not; the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is not; and the venerable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] is not an architect.

I have had experience enough with architects—and I have had a good deal within the last few years—to know that upon great questions of the appearance of a public building or a private building, of a dwelling-house or any feature of it, as to how it shall strike the intelligent and cultivated and observant eye, the judgment of any intelligent and enlightened gentleman is as good as that of an architect; and, moreover, it is not pestered and thwarted and disturbed and turned awry by any particular scheme or plan that an architect has and that he is bound to carry out. No man ever built a house and let the architect have his way and gave him carte blanche who did not find afterward that he ought to have kept his own eye, his master-eye, upon the subject.

I have asked and have tried to find out from others who have professional knowledge and experience in this matter where a public building can be found with its outer base—not a cellar, because the architect is bright enough to keep calling this a cellar in order to avoid the point I am now making that this is an outer face to the base—I do not know where any building can be found with the basement out clear to view a plain line of granite or marble or brick, or whatever it may be, unbroken by windows. I believe the effect would be better to have windows inserted in these rooms all along in front, because whatever may be said about this dam, this wall that is to prevent the appearance of squeezing out the ground, the general effect to the beholder as he stands far off and approaches the Capitol is just as it was said it would be at the time we entered upon this work, that another story is added to this building, that it lifts it up and makes it less squat, and it appears as if this wall was right under the continuation of the old wall. It will be improved by windows properly put in with proper supports and proper strengthenings at the sides below and above.

I do not believe that any building of this kind can be found anywhere. The architect was asked when he was before us if he knew of any such building. He instanced a building in England, the country home of the Duke of Devonshire I believe, and it happened fortunately that a member of the committee had visited that place last year and he said at once that is nothing but a wall that rises above the ground like any wall and is not in any way like this feature, and the architect then was obliged to confess that it was so and he could not give the name.

I have been to the Library and I have been looking over the engravings and pictures of stately buildings, remarkable buildings, buildings the structures of which have given renown to the architects, and I can not find anywhere any building with a great base unrelieved by doors or windows, but precisely in form like the base of a monument.

While I do not pretend to have any architectural education and may be all wrong about it, I have a profound belief that if that is carried out in the years to come the question first asked by everybody approaching it will be, why have you got that blank, staring wall outside there? You may dam this building now, but our children and our successors will damn it a great deal worse in the years to come. I do not believe in it any way. I think the architect is all wrong. He has got this idea into his head, and like all architects he is bound on carrying it out whether or no.

I do not know but that it will be said we have gone too far, that we can not retract. It will be said that if Senators did not know they ought to have known. Perhaps that is so. Perhaps I ought to have known, perhaps the Committee on Appropriations ought to have known more, ought to have been more wary, ought to have examined more fully into the details of this plan; but when every appropriation was accompanied by an assurance that we should have these committee-rooms, we did not. Perhaps we were at fault. I do not say that we were not. I do say—and in this I appeal to the consciousness of Senators surrounding me now—that I believe not ten men up to this winter ever had a thought that there was a feature here to be carried out of a blank, staring wall upon the outside and no windows and no committee-rooms. I may be all wrong about it, but I make that statement as my impression from the talk I have heard from Senators and from the way my own mind has run. And with this I am going to leave it.

I can have, as I said, no more interest than anybody else, no more than the Senator from Missouri. The Committee on Appropriations divided on the subject. They have no interest in it. It is not a desire to stop the work, but it is well that in a matter of this importance Senators should know just what has been going on, how it has gone on, and what they are likely to see in the future.

Mr. VEST. I now renew the point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri raises the point of order that the amendment of the Senator from Maine is not in order.

Mr. HALE. Let us have it read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "seven," in line 1432, it is moved to add:

Provided, That the work under this appropriation shall be done so as to provide committee-rooms upon the western front of the terraces with proper ventilation and light from windows in the outer western wall.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator from Missouri to withdraw the point of order for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri withdraw the point of order?

Mr. VEST. Of course I do not wish to prevent the Senator from speaking.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to make a remark or two in regard to this subject.

I do not know what other Senators may have thought during the few years in which this work of carrying around the marble base in place of the earth slope around the Capitol has been going on; but with the little attention that I have given to it I supposed from the first until now that the general feeling was among all who looked at this Capitol from the west side and from the north side and from the east side that the earth embankment against this Capitol resembled too much the embankments around the little prairie houses that are built for temporary purposes, the commencement of a place to stay a little while when a man was making his homestead, banked up, as I have heard in Ireland and in Norway and in other places some residents bank up with earth or with snow or with ice as a matter of protection. That was the appearance of the Capitol to other people as it was to myself.

The main argument that I ever heard for leaving these grass plats or slopes was to afford a place for children to roll their eggs down on Easter Day, so that it was their part of the Capitol on that occasion for a play-ground; it was said to be convenient for that purpose. I have always understood that the very length of the building gave, especially upon the western side of the ground against it, the impression that it was a flat building; and I have heard it suggested here and in Congress that in some way, by some expense, the old Capitol should be raised another story, and the dome itself raised on the top of another story to relieve the idea of the flatness of the building. That has been the criticism of those who have had advantages which I never did have of seeing the famous buildings of the capitals of the Old World.

When this was proposed I understood, from all the conversation I ever had with members of Congress and others, and I supposed there was to be this wall around the building in the place of the earthwork, of the grass slope, of the embankment, and the theory of it was that in looking at the building from the west and that part of it from the north and south, which was to be affected by this wall, it would to the eye and in point of fact equal to some extent another story of the building, and although it was removed far off from the building, was a mere foundation for the sidewalk and for the top of the promenade-ground around the building, yet the effect of it and the object of it was esthetic almost entirely to improve the appearance of the building.

I have heard from time to time, and innumerable times, members of Congress of both Houses speak of the work as it progressed, as a view of it from the north and latterly from the south showed its effect, that it did have the effect in coming from the west around the walks of the Capitol Grounds, it did have the effect to the eye—illusory perhaps, a mere delusion of the senses—of raising the whole Capitol a story, these outer parts of it taking the place of the earthwork, blending in with the building and lifting it another story from the earth.

I never heard that anything about that building was to be used for committee-rooms, and I am free to say that I do not believe there is a Senator in this body or a member of Congress in the other House if these rooms were completed in the best possible style, with windows of any possible form and with great elevations or greater depth as it may be, could be found would agree beforehand as chairman of a committee or a member of it to go, from this Senate in any possible mode either down through the engine-room or out through the west-front of the Capitol and into the corridors there and select a committee-room to which he would go in summer and winter and hold his committee meetings there. This getting committee-rooms off to other places has been attempted from the necessities of the case and has uniformly failed everywhere and in whatever building. A committee that goes away from the immediate presence of the body is at a disadvantage because its attention may be called by the alarm-bells of yea-and-nay votes, executive sessions, and all those things where a committeeman desires to be within immediate reach of the scene of his labors.

There were two windows on that subterranean west front of this Capitol. One of them remains there yet, I think—ghastly, unsightly sepulchral windows, as if the entrance to the dead-house, the entrance to the vault whitewashed as in old times if my recollection is right, like the outside of a sepulcher. There is one now that has not been torn away right in front of the Senate portion of this beautiful building, a great gaping, staring window whitewashed within and without. I think it has been used in some way or other as a means of getting air through this earth embankment and through the engine-room and through the heating-room, and the Lord knows what for. I have never explored all these places and means of getting fresh air to the Senate. The window in the further end of this Capitol was so unsightly to the members in the other House that many of them who were there then cheerfully accepted any proposition by which the window could be removed, and so they built a martello tower away off on the grounds somewhere in order that the air should not come from the immediate surface of the ground.

The Senator from Maine proposes for these committee-room windows. We raised up this martello tower 20 feet, a perfectly air-tight building except at the top so that the air that should come in should be pure. It used to come sweeping along the surface of the humid ground, and it was thought it should at least come up a little higher and come down through this tower and then come into this old window, and come into the House in that way.

The Senate that is careful about these matters of health and smell have continued the use for their refreshment and recreation up to this time of a window opening low down, the air coming through some kind of a whitewashed vault and coming to the Senate Chamber, and it comes here yet. No man in the spring or in the winter when the beautiful grounds around this Capitol are properly fertilized by the fertility of the Guano Islands or the fertility of South Carolina phosphates or the more common fertilizing processes that are secured around the different livery stables of the city and piled away in immense magazines of fertilizers—no man in the Senate unless he has a very bad cold and his sense of smell has been very much obstructed can fail to tell in a moment when the fertilizers are scattered over the grass and how the current of air coming along in a moist spring day up this beautiful slope finds its passage within the fan, as if we must bring in by the aid of machinery surface air from the fertilized grounds around. One sitting here can tell with the ordinary exercise of his sense of smell when the fertilizers are there.

The same effect will come from a window low down with the slope, the air coming up to it from the immediate surface and from the soil whether affected by fertilizers or the natural moisture arising from the frequent rains. The air taken from the surface of the ground around this Capitol is not healthy and is not pleasant, and is not fit for the Senate, and is not desirable for a committee-room, window or no windows.

That striking window which used to stare us like a great tunnel entrance at the House end was removed years ago, but the other window has remained at the Senate end and is there to-day if it has not been removed within a few days, and I do not know how that may be.

I venture to say that the sole object and the only practical object of the expense of building this marble wall around the building was to sustain the foundations of the building and to remove the unsightly grass plots that slope down from the building, and if I may so say to substitute the pure white marble in the place of the leek-covered earthen parapet. There never was a time but that the pure air was impregnated with the leeks and the garlic coming over this ground. It is not to-day, although twenty to thirty men are busily engaged from early spring to midsummer with their little knives weeding out these little roots of the leek, the garlic, or the onion, or whatever name you call it by, and carrying it off in basketsful day after day, the smell of the garlic will linger there still. Now, do you want committee-rooms just overlooking these grounds? We desire to have the view even from the committee-rooms down there hidden by the already great trees and shrubbery, and shut out from the view of the heavens or the earth by the shrubbery which must necessarily cover that ground.

The Senator has spoken of the delightful view from the barber-shop——

Mr. HALE. I do not like it.

Mr. CONGER. I do not like that view. I did not hear him very exactly, but I thought the Senator had expatiated upon the delightful view from the window of the barber-shop.

Mr. HALE. I was saying that the trouble with this plan is that the committee-rooms provided for are rooms looking out on that space. I do not like it better than he.

Mr. CONGER. Any man of taste who can fall back in the barber's chair and go through the soaporific and barberous practices of a good barber learns to enjoy that place, and gathers around it even when there is no special barberous necessity for it. We associate the idea of comfort and nicety with it, and regard the place as being a pleasant and a sightly place. There is my friend from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I saw a heavenly smile come over his countenance when I described it, even when he was not looking out on the beautiful view, with the Monument in the distance and the grove before him.

But, sir, there is something serious about this, and I generally when I talk to the Senate desire to say serious things, though the Senator from Maine may consider these allusions a little humorous. I have thought that his remarks about this parapet, or whatever it is called, were made with the intention of showing to the Senate how ridiculous it would be to have this wall all cut up with windows, a solid basement for one of the most beautiful promenades in the world. What kind of windows? Double windows, Gothic windows, the big Gothic in the middle and the little hanging on at the side, or the kind of windows with little square holes like the windows in the upper story of this Capitol? What could be put in there in any arrangement that would not demand a greater height of these walls, and what could be put in there which would not, to the eye of any man educated or uneducated in artistic things, mar the harmony and the solidity and the beauty of these walls? How many windows shall there be? How situated? What is to be placed there in any event that would not take away the entire effect if there is a good effect in having these walls carried around the Capitol.

Sir, the plan for what was to be done when we reached around the front of the main building and the entrance to the main building was hung up under glass, stuck down along the walk, and it was there for some years. I had supposed from it that in the immediate front of the building there was to be a double staircase, a stairway leading from the walks from Pennsylvania avenue and from Maryland avenue, winding up by some suitable plan to the front of the main center of the Capitol. In that there might be ornament; in that there might be openings and windows; in that there might be tracery. Any of those things there would be appropriate, but here there should be nothing except the plain, distinct, clear purpose of this work, which was to raise the building and put in place of a mud wall the white granite or the mottled granite. The stairway would be the place for ornament. If the Senator from Maine will exercise his taste, and I hope he will, there may be ornamental things there on the two grand stairways on which the visitors to the Capitol and the people of the United States coming from the two main branching avenues that lead up to the west front of the Capitol should come up the walks that are already prepared, and come up to the Capitol by a staircase which is appropriate and tasteful in regard to the construction of the building.

It is said that this building lacks air. It is said that it lacks ventilation. It is said that the store-rooms down here are so moist that papers melt, corrode, or mold. Why not? All along they have been there to mold, and probably it is no worse now. There never has been any attempt to clean out that space to make it even free from the dampness of the building. But there are many rooms in this building that have no ventilation that are occupied for committee-rooms no better than they have to-day; and the ventilation of those vaults or rooms must depend upon the forcing of the currents of air to them, and so the drying of those rooms depends on the heat and hot air sent through.

But, sir, I will say another word. No man will want to go to one of these rooms as a committee-room either for the reasons of convenience or health or proximity to either of the Chambers. If they were there nobody would want them. No man will say beforehand that he will take them either as chairman of a committee for his committee or as a member of it. You may circulate the request and I venture to say you can not get a signature in a week. So then I think the idea of these rooms for committee-rooms, thus by openings and by windows and by whatever process marring the plan and the design of the work itself, ought not to be undertaken.

We have no need to prepare down under ground and in dark places committee-rooms. Whenever the work already ordered by Congress, the building of a new library, shall be so far completed as to permit the removal from the library part of this Capitol of the vast accumulation of books and pamphlets and magazines occupying those rooms, there will be more and better rooms in that one part of the building than all these front committee-rooms put together.

Besides it is proposed—how soon it may come I do not know, for these are things reaching through years that we are considering now—and I have no doubt it will soon be entered upon, to build upon the other side of East Capitol street over where the library may be located a place for the law library, for the United States Supreme Court, and for the officers connected with it, leaving for the use of the Senate in the Capitol from twelve to fifteen rooms which can be the best committee-rooms in this building. The uses for which they are now occupied will be taken away. In both ends of the Capitol, the prospective buildings for the library, and United States court-rooms, and for the law library, and for the clerk's office, and the marshal's office connected with the courts, will leave rooms that are desirable and that will be sought by committees without going down elevators and without going down into the engine-rooms and through the corridors below.

These are my views. I was astonished beyond measure when I found that a committee of the Senate would stop the progress of a work which to the mind of every man with whom I have ever conversed and of every citizen of the United States with whom I have talked about this improvement on actual inspection, has been considered very proper in its form and very desirable, and worthy of the Capitol and worthy of the nation; and when it comes to any vote upon that I shall vote against the report of the Committee on Appropriations stopping the appropriation for any purpose whatever, and most of all I shall vote against it when the object of stopping the appropriation is to make an unnecessary and a useless and an undesired and an undesirable number of committee-rooms far down in the bowels of the earth and mar the plan and mar the usefulness of the work as it is now proceeding.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask unanimous consent that the usual five-minute rule may by applied to amendments to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair did not hear the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I now ask unanimous consent that in the further consideration of this bill the five-minute rule may be applied to the amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that hereafter in the consideration of this bill the five-minute rule shall be applied to the discussion of amendments. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. VEST. I now renew the point of order on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] raises the point of order upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] that it is not in order. The bill as it came from the House contains an appropriation for continuing the work on the terraces of the Capitol to which the Senator from Maine proposes an amendment changing the plan upon which that work has heretofore been prosecuted under the authority of law. Following the decision of the Senate yesterday evening upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] the Chair is constrained to hold that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. ALLISON. Now the pending amendment is to strike out from line 1416 to line 1432 inclusive.

Mr. VEST. Let us take a direct vote on that.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us take a vote on that. We have had full debate now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 1416, after the words "Capitol terraces," down to line 1432, as follows:

For continuing the work upon the terraces of the Capitol, sections marked K, D, and J, as shown on printed plan accompanying the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury (Executive Document No. 9, first session, Forty-eighth Congress), including wages of mechanics and laborers, and for reconstructing boiler-vaults connected with sections C and K, $150,000.

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for continuing the construction of the terrace and grand stairways of the Capitol made in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," is hereby reappropriated or rendered available for the continuation of that work during the fiscal year 1887.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Iowa and to the Senate that that amendment, as the Chair understood, was ruled out. The entire amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was a proposition to strike out the words read and to insert what follows in italics, it being one amendment to strike out and insert, which the Chair held last night to be out of order. So that amendment is disposed of already.

Mr. ALLISON. I offered last night an amendment to the text at the end of line 1423. I did that with a view of moving to strike out from line 1424 to line 1432, because my amendment is intended as a substitution for the House provision.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment is now in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I then move to strike out the clause from line 1424 to line 1432, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The language proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the unexpended balance of the appropriation for continuing the construction of the terrace and grand stairways of the Capitol made in the act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for other purposes," is hereby reappropriated or rendered available for the continuation of that work during the fiscal year 1887.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to strike out these words.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, do I understand that the original text remains in the bill from line 1416 to line 1423 with the amendment that I offered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the effect of the ruling of last night, in which the Senate concurred.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I hope we shall go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The next amendment of the Committee on Appriations which was passed over was, in line 1463, after the word "lands," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

Depredations on public timber: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, $60,000.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the amendments relating to public lands be passed until the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, for whom I have sent, comes in. He desires to make some amendment, and I do not know what it is. I think this and the next amendment had better go over until he comes in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Was the request acceded to?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that the Senator from Kansas told me before he left the Chamber that he favored these two amendments, and that if they were adopted it would be satisfactory to him. I do not understand that he desires to offer any amendment to these two amendments of the committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope this amendment will not be agreed to. I think that the House cut the appropriation down to the very lowest possible limit in this case. The appropriation is only $75,000. The estimate was much larger than that, and without the entire appropriation I do not think that this service can be properly and efficiently administered. I hold in my hand a statement which was prepared at the General Land Office, showing the proceedings, civil and criminal, instituted for depredations committed upon public lands. This is prepared by Mr. Archibald Young, acting chief of the special service division, dated July 17, 1886, and addressed to Commissioner Sparks.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 17, 1886.

SIR: During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, legal proceedings were instituted on recommendation of this Department against parties in the Southern States for timber depredations upon the public lands, as follows:

States.	Criminal.	Civil.	Amount involved.
Alabama	4	8	$61,050 25
Arkansas	29	16	34,345 02
Florida	4	2	1,037 50
Louisiana	120	60	257,603 65
Mississippi	26	17	108,183 00
Total	182	103	462,219 42

While in the same States during the previous fiscal year only twenty-two criminal suits and twenty civil suits were instituted, involving $148,713.92. (See Land Office Report, 1885.)

Very respectfully,

ARCHIBALD YOUNG,
Acting Chief Special Service Division.

Hon. W. A. J. SPARKS,
Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Then I have a comparative statement showing the number of entries in the Southern States reported by special agents and the number canceled or held for cancellation during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1885, and June 30, 1886. That refers to a different branch of the same subject, which shows that the total number reported by the agents in 1885 was 221—that is, entries for cancellation—and in 1886, 325, and those canceled or held for cancellation in 1885 amounted to 122, and in 1886 to 260. I will insert the table:

Statement showing number of entries in the Southern States reported by special agents, and number canceled or held for cancellation during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1885, and June 30, 1886.

States.	Reported by agents.		Canceled or held for cancellation.
	1885.	1886.	1885.	1886.
Alabama	12	3	57	5
Arkansas	44	50	10	67
Florida	64	31	30	38
Louisiana	90	154	11	131
Mississippi	8	11	5	18
Missouri	3	76	10	1
Total	221	325	122	260

ARCHIBALD YOUNG,
Acting Chief, Division P.

It is clear that this particular branch of the service has been efficient, and it is not right to cripple it by reducing this appropriation. In fact it ought to be increased above what the House has it. I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 17.

Mr. ALLISON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GIBSON. Let the amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1463, after the word "lands," it is proposed to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

Depredations on public timber: To meet the expenses of protecting timber on the public lands, $60,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the amendment is disagreed to the appropriation remains at $75,000.

Mr. BECK. After this action was taken by the committee I called upon the Secretary of the Interior and endeavored to have as careful an ascertainment as I could, and he assured me that what had been given by the House was not enough, and that to strike it down would cripple the service. Therefore I shall vote against the amendment.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Ingalls,	Platt,
Allison,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Plumb,
Blair,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Cameron,	Hale,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Conger,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Wilson of Iowa.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Palmer,

NAYS—30.

Beck,	Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Van Wyck,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Kenna,	Vest,
Blackburn,	George,	Maxey,	Voorhees,
Brown,	Gibson,	Payne,	Walthall,
Butler,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Whitthorne,
Call,	Gray,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.
Camden,	Harris,	Teller,
Cockrell,	Hearst,	Vance,

ABSENT—19.

Bowen,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,
Chace,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Eustis,	Logan,	Morrill,	Sewell,
Fair,	McPherson,	Pike,	Stanford.
Frye,	Miller,	Riddleberger,

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on Appropriations reported, in line 1467, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ninety" and insert "sixty;" so as to make the clause read:

Protecting public lands: For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, $60,000.

Mr. COCKRELL. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. The estimate for that item is $300,000. The appropriation last year was $90,000. The appropriation in this bill as it came from the House was just the same as it was last year. In the estimates of appropriation a note is appended stating:

With the present limited appropriation it is impossible to employ a sufficient number of agents to investigate charges of fraud already made, much less expose and prevent many other fraudulent entries from being made. The appropriation of $75,000, with the deficiency of $25,000, making a total of $100,000, only allowed the employment of an average of twenty-eight agents for a period of nine months and sixteen days, or twenty-two agents for the entire fiscal year. In order to prevent fraud there should be a force of at least one hundred agents constantly in the field, which would require an appropriation of the amount estimated for under this head.

In order to make this service at all effective $90,000 should be appropriated, and I trust that the amendment will be disagreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me that the amendment ought to be agreed to. There were no public lands surveyed last year and practically none are to be surveyed this year. Therefore the limit of the operations of this class of agents is something entirely different from what has heretofore obtained, and the necessities, whatever they may have been heretofore, will be largely diminished.

In addition to that, a bill has passed both Houses of Congress and is now in conference which ought to become a law, disposing wholly of pre-emption entries. By reason of all these various facts I doubt very much if there ought to be even so much appropriated as the Senate committee propose for the purpose of protection of the public lands from illegal entries. There can be no illegal entries or entries of any kind unless the lands are surveyed, and, as I said, last year no money was used for that purpose, and none is to be used this year, so that the area within which these agents can be employed is much less than it has been heretofore, and the necessity for agents to look after the entries is very much diminished.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask the Senator from Kansas what the estimate is.

Mr. PLUMB. The estimate of the Department for surveys was $350,000, against $350,000 and $400,000 appropriated heretofore, and last year out of $350,000 appropriated to survey public lands the Commissioner of the General Land Office only expended $9,000. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] asks what is the use of appropriating anything? Probably there is no use in appropriating anything because it will only be expended.

The area in which these agents can operate and the number of entries about which they can be concerned and which can be the subject of scrutiny by the Department will be reduced to almost a nominal number. Why should we use the great machinery for carrying on the public lands in this way when there are to be no surveys whereby these lands may be the subject of entry? It is worse than locking the stable door after the horse is stolen. It is an entirely useless expenditure of public money.

Mr. INGALLS. How much was spent last year?

Mr. PLUMB. Ninety thousand dollars was appropriated last year for this purpose, but that was in connection with a large expenditure for public surveys, as there had been the year before, but last year no land was surveyed and for this coming year no land will be surveyed. It will be readily seen that the force necessary to carry on this branch of the Land Office work is naturally much less than it has been heretofore.

Mr. COCKRELL. This does not relate to the surveys. This relates to the illegal and fraudulent entries and appropriations of the public land by cattle syndicates, foreign corporations, and things of that kind. Thousands of acres have been entered in the names of cowboys and other persons who do not enter the lands for actual settlement or in good faith, and this is the only way I see in which these fraudulent entries can be reached.

Mr. PLUMB. But I want to say to my friend as of course he knows very well that if the lands are not surveyed they can not be entered, and consequently the necessity of the detection of these entries will be diminished. It is not a question of surveying, it is true, but at the same time, as there are to be no new entries because there will be no new surveys, why have people to inspect the entries?

Mr. COCKRELL. Because of fraudulent entries already made.

Mr. PLUMB. But that we appropriated for last year and the year before.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the appropriation was not sufficient to complete one-tenth of the investigation. If it did not say "up to date," I would not ask for this, but these are the entries of cattle syndicates and corporations and foreign combinations where they have taken up thousands upon thousands of acres of land fraudulently in the name of parties. They have not been investigated yet, and they can not be. It will take time to do it. They will probably not be able to complete it during the present year.

Mr. PLUMB. The trouble about it is that the money has not been used for that purpose. I know of a case which has occurred recently where an agent of the Department, who assumed to investigate entries which have been made apparently by cowboys and transferred to a cattle syndicate direct, reported that those entries were lawful and proper and ought to be confirmed. That is a result of what is going on under the employment of what are known as special agents. The rich people, the people who have money, can get their lands reported upon favorably, while the poor homesteader, who has barely enough for subsistence from year to year, and a hard time to get that, is the man who can not make favor with that class of people.

I think I have heard something from the Senator from Missouri with his eloquent speech in times past about the infamy and the wrong of the spy system as applied to the internal-revenue system of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I never opened my mouth on it.

Mr. PLUMB. Then he was like the Irishman's owl—he kept up a deal of thinking.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have always been in favor of the internal-revenue agents breaking up all illegal trade.

Mr. PLUMB. Then there was a lack of harmony among the Democratic Senators on that subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. It was my friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Missouri says it was the Senator from North Carolina. He, it seems, is the black bass of the internal-revenue system.

I wish to say that this is a system of private inquiry, of ex parte determination of rights, which has been carried on at the expense of the lawful homesteaders of the United States and in favor generally speaking of the men who have made an unlawful appropriation of the public domain. These agents have exercised judicial functions and executive functions. They have been appointed without reference to their functions for these important places. They have exercised functions of as much importance as the functions exercised by a Territorial judge or by a judge of the district court of the United States anywhere; and yet they have not been men selected by reason of having the qualifications necessary to exercise those great functions. They have no power to summon witnesses. No one has any power to summon a witness to appear before them. They have carried on what they please to call investigations, the results of which show plainly that they are tinged by the self-interest of parties, and that they are sometimes open to even a stronger characterization than that. That is in the past. The damage which has been done of that kind will outlive the life of any person on the floor of this Chamber.

Now, that there was no land surveyed last year and that no land is to be surveyed this year, so that the area within which entries can be made has thus been circumscribed, the necessity for the appointment of these men, whatever it might originally have been, has disappeared; and to make this appropriation will simply be to give to the Commissioner of the General Land Office the authority to appoint a great number of these agents with no work practically for them to perform. In regard to current entries the matter is somewhat different. I do not object now for the purpose of this appropriation to what the executive officer may think necessary to accompany the entries that may be made during the coming year, but I do object to any appropriation that is not necessary for that purpose.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, this is a very important amendment. The sum allowed by the House ought to be continued in the bill and even a larger sum appropriated.

As to the homesteader, the people of the United States I think would hear with some degree of surprise that the agents of the General Government could not be used and were not used for their protection in their homestead rights. In the State which I have the honor in part to represent here this money could be used, and usefully, for the protection of the poor, honest homesteaders against men of wealth, against corporations, against grants made to the State of the swamp and overflowed land and the location of homesteads upon dry land under that grant, through agents employed by one person and another.

I doubt not that everywhere in the United States the poor man has no friend in the protection of his home and his right to his land except the General Government and the agent of the Land Office with the service honestly administered.

There is no need of there being spies. They ought not to be spies. If the regulations of the Land Office permit secret inquisitorial examinations and statements made upon which to determine the question of title it is simply a bad administration, and the Committee on Public Lands here ought to introduce a bill to correct that practice. But the Government of the United States should investigate and ascertain whether the homesteader has a right to be upon his land, whether it is a fictitious entry by some corporation or some rich man for the purpose of accumulating a large tract of land in his position for speculative purposes. The land laws of the United States have been by the cupidity of men perverted from the purpose which the Government intended and donated them for into means of accumulating large bodies of land and large fortunes in the interests of individuals. That is the evil which now affects the country.

The Committee on Public Lands at every session since I have been here have reported to that effect. The Commissioner of the General Land Office in the discussions which have occurred during this session has furnished such evidence, as is shown in repeated and numerous extracts from the testimony taken before that committee. This appropriation is needed. Every homesteader and poor man in the United States is interested in an efficient system of investigation in order that the honest poor man who has located upon his land in good faith should be protected, and where some moneyed man has induced an unjust and fraudulent entry and obtained land by fraud and misrepresentation it should be corrected. This appropriation is intended for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let the amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1467, before the word "thousand," strike out "ninety" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

Protecting public lands: For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation $60,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HALE (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote and announce my pair with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK].

The result was announced—yeas 28, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Plumb,
Allison,	Frye,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Hawley,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Cameron,	Hearst,	Miller,	Sherman,
Chace,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Spooner,

Brown,	Fair,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Coke,	Hale,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Saulsbury,
Cullom,	Hampton,	Morgan,	Sewell.
Edmunds,	Harrison,	Morrill,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1493, after the word "and," insert the the word "of;" in line 1494, strike out the words "as far" and insert "$10,000, or so much thereof;" and in line 1496, after the word "field," insert "made under this appropriation;" so as to read:

And of the sum hereby appropriated $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, may be expended for the examination of surveys in the field made under this appropriation, &c.

Mr. COCKRELL. Just before that I should like to offer an amendment, as I gave notice of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations must first be acted upon according to the rule. The pending amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. In connection with the amendment that is pending I wish to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Chair will receive it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will ask to have a letter from James Edmunds, assistant in charge of the surveying division, read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, July 19, 1886.

SIR: In response to your request for a statement in regard to the requirements of the surveying service so far as relates to the examination of surveys in the field for the purpose of ascertaining the character of the work performed by deputy surveyors before accepting their surveys and reporting their accounts to the Treasury for payment I have the honor to state:

There are now in this office returns of unexamined surveys from the several surveying districts made under fifty-seven contracts, distributed as follows:

In Arizona, 1 contract; California, 13; Colorado, 3; Dakota, 6; Idaho, 1; Florida, 1; Minnesota, 4; Montana, 11; Nevada, 3; New Mexico, 3; Oregon, 2; Utah, 1; Washington, 7; Wyoming, 1.

These contracts embrace the survey of standard lines, the exterior boundaries of about one hundred townships, and the subdivisional survey of nearly two hundred townships and fractional townships, the subdivisional surveys covering an estimated area of 4,000,000 acres.

In addition to the surveys above referred to the work under contracts chargeable to the appropriations for the fiscal year just ended must be taken into consideration. Seventy contracts payable from said appropriations have been approved the aggregate liability of which is $112,000.

The examinations thus far made show that a number of surveyors have returned surveys so defective as to be useless for the purpose intended, and others, with an utter disregard of their obligations, have returned fictitious field notes and plats and the examiners' reports show that the deputies made no attempt to comply with the terms of their contracts and that the surveys alleged to have been made were wholly fraudulent.

The number of fraudulent and defective surveys developed by the examinations thus far made is conclusive proof of the necessity for the examination of all surveys before acceptance and payment.

The complaints from settlers in various sections of the country, stating in many instances that no evidence of subdivisional surveys in given townships can be found, and in others that the lines and corners are erroneous, causing frequent disputes and litigation as to boundaries, furnish further evidence of the necessity for careful examinations of surveys in the field.

With the present force of examiners it will be utterly impracticable to complete the examination of the surveys now awaiting payment and those under contract before the close of the present fiscal year, and unless a liberal appropriation shall be made during the present session of Congress applicable to the examination of surveys contracted for under former appropriations the examinations must be delayed until the requisite funds shall have been provided.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

JAS. EDMUNDS,
Assistant in charge Surveying Division.

Hon. WILLIAM A. J. SPARKS,
Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

Mr. COCKRELL. In that case I really think an amendment should be made, although there is no amendment proposed by the committee to the text. I do not know whether it would be in order to suggest an amendment now, or must I wait until we get through?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule adopted requires action on the committee amendments first.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1522, after the word "for," strike out the words "necessary expenses of survey, appraisal, sale, and pay of custodians" and insert the words "care and preservation;" and in line 1527, before the word "thousand," strike out "ten" and insert "two;" so as to read:

For care and preservation of abandoned military reservations transferred to the control of the Secretary of the Interior under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 5, 1884, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 1585——

Mr. MCMILLAN. What was done with the amendment beginning in line 1528?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It was reserved by the Senator from Vermont, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that it was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It was amended, I think, and then the Senator from Vermont desired to make some inquiry about the matter and said he would ask to have it laid over.

Mr. ALLISON. What amendment is that?

Mr. MCMILLAN. The paragraph which was inserted, beginning in line 1528, which reads as follows:

For the survey of the grant known as the Hanson grant, in the State of Florida, $100, the said sum to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ALLISON. That was agreed to. The Senator from Vermont put in an amendment.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think he said he desired to have it go over.

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Then it is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment which was passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 1585 insert:

Report of Geological Survey of the Territories: For the preparation, from material already in hand, of volume 3, book 2, and volume 4 of the Report of the United States Geological Survey of the Territories, the publication of the same having been ordered by Congress, $10,000, to be expended in preparing, drawing, and rewriting the same; said work to be done by Professor E. D. Cope, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and the printing and illustrations to be made by the Public Printer.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Iowa who has charge of the bill to state what this $10,000 is for; that is to say, what work it is to pay for?

Mr. HALE. This is to fill the hiatus in these valuable reports, which exists by reason of these volumes never having been published. They are elaborate works upon paleontology. The work was done and the papers, so far as they have been collected and are ready for publication, by Professor Cope, who was under Professor Hayden when the leadership and charge of this service went out of Hayden's hands into the present hands. No further work was requested or done in the way of publishing. Professor Cope was not continued in the work by Professor Powell, and so the material has remained there.

I am assured by those who are experts that the work is very valuable, and that when completed and published, like the others, it will be of great use.

Mr. PLUMB. That is not still an answer to my question. I do not desire to interpose a point of order at this period, but I wish to know now what work this appropriation will pay for doing?

Mr. ALLISON. This will not pay for any work. This will simply pay for the preparation of work to be put in the hands of the Printer.

Mr. PLUMB. Then there is $10,000 for the arrangement of material that has already been prepared for this work. The amount proposed to be appropriated leads me to believe that practically nothing has been done, but that somebody has thought now of something he would like to do at Government expense to be incorporated in the series of works of the Geological Survey.

Mr. HALE. No; that is not true. So far as the work in the field, which is the basis of all these publications, is concerned that has all been done. The materials have been collected by Professor Cope and are very valuable. Professor Powell himself recognizes that they are of the greatest value. But the work has not been put into condition for printing. The printing has been ordered, the appropriation has been made for that purpose, and all that is wanted is the work necessary on this volume. The foundation, the fundamental work in the field, of course has all been done. If it has not, and if the appropriation is made, it will remain there just as it has been.

Mr. PLUMB. I make the point of order on the amendment that it has not been estimated for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there any estimate from the Department?

Mr. ALLISON. That point of order is good against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is sustained, there being no estimate. No other amendment was reserved, the Chair is advised.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer a series of amendments to be read in their order. I will state that these amendments are amendments relating to public buildings which were sent to the committee by the Secretary of the Treasury after the bill had been reported. They relate to the completion of heating apparatus, &c., for public buildings which have been already constructed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are the amendments reported from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; all the amendments I propose I report from that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated in their order.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 56 insert:

For court-house and post-office at Fort Scott, Kans.: For approaches and heating apparatus complete, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 85 insert:

For court-house and post-office at Keokuk, Iowa: For heating apparatus complete, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert after the preceding amendment:

For post-office at Lexington, Ky.: For approaches and heating apparatus complete, $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I now offer another amendment on behalf of the committee. I will say respecting the amendment that it relates to a building at Savannah, Ga. When the bill was in the Committee on Appropriations the law authorizing this public building had not passed both Houses. Some days ago it passed both Houses and received the signature of the President. The committee recommend the insertion, after line 153, of these words:

For court-house and post-office at Savannah, Ga.: For purchase of site and commencing the erection of building, $100,000.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator say the bill passed both Houses and has received the signature of the President?

Mr. ALLISON. I do. It is now the law. It has been the law for seven or eight days. The amount proposed in the amendment is one-half of the amount.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. After line 187, I move to insert:

Bureau of Engraving and Printing: For construction of a new sewer from the south side of said building to the corner of Fourteenth and D streets, southwest, to connect at that point with the city sewer, $1,800; the work to be done under the direction of the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

I will say one word respecting this appropriation. The improvement of the river is so conducted as to close up the sewer now conveying the débris of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing which runs into the Potomac, and it is necessary that this new sewer should be made in view of that fact.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I also offer three amendments to be inserted after line 316. I will say respecting these amendments that they relate to light-ships which were provided for by a law that received the signature of the President four or five days ago, and they come from the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 316, it is proposed to insert:

For construction and equipment of a light-ship to be placed off the south end of Ram Island, Fisher's Island Sound, Long Island Sound, New York, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the preceding amendment insert:

For the establishment of a light-ship to be stationed off Grosse Point, Lake Saint Clair, Michigan, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the preceding amendment insert:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to remove the light-ship formerly stationed at Eel Grass Shoals to the south end of Hogg Island Shoal, Narragansett Bay, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, after the word "coin," in line 1095, I move to insert:

Including fractional silver coin by registered mail or otherwise.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 1095, after the word "coin," it is proposed to insert:

Including fractional silver coin by registered mail or otherwise.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move now to insert $100,000 instead of $75,000 in the same line; so as to read:

Transportation of silver coin: For transportation of silver coin, including fractional silver coin by registered mail or otherwise, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out lines 1104 and 1105 and insert what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out lines 1104 and 1105, as follows:

Transportation of minor coin: For the transportation of minor coin, $5,000.

And in lieu therof to insert:

Recoinage, reissue, and transportation of minor coins: The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to transfer to the United States Mint, at Philadelphia, for cleaning and reissue, any minor coins now in, or which may be hereafter received, at the subtreasury offices, in excess of the requirement for the current business of said offices, and the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated for the expense of transportation for such reissue. And the Secretary of the Treasury is also authorized to recoin any and all the uncurrent minor coins now in the Treasury, and the sum of $4,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to reimburse the Treasury for the loss on such recoinage.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 992, I move to amend by inserting after the word "engraving" the word "printing;" so as to read:

Engraving, printing, electrotyping, and photographing supplies, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. By direction of the committee I offer an amendment, after line 1052 to insert:

To provide for the expense of executing the provisions of the oleomargarine act, $25,000.

This amendment is rather irregular, but it is a necessary amendment in view of the fact that the oleomargarine bill passed a day or two ago.

Mr. MILLER. I ask the chairman if he thinks that is sufficient?

Mr. ALLISON. I think that will be sufficient in connection with the appropriations in the regular appropriation bill. Of course the Bureau of Internal Revenue will use the regular officers for most of this work, but there are some things provided for which can not be paid for out of the regular appropriations for that bureau.

Mr. PLUMB. Let me ask the chairman if that amendment would not substantially cut off the authority of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to use other funds, this being a specific appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. That is a very good criticism. I will modify the amendment by saying:

In addition to the regular appropriations for the internal-revenue service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That modification will be made.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 1701:

Bureau of Labor: For books, periodicals, and newspapers for the library of the Bureau of Labor, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Those are the amendments the committee propose to this bill.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MILLER. I rise to a matter of privilege or personal explanation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York states that he rises to a matter of privilege.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, it will be remembered that when the river and harbor bill was under consideration by the Senate an amendment was moved by the Committee on Commerce, which read as follows:

Improving New York Harbor, New York: Continuing improvement to secure a 30-foot channel at mean low water at the Sandy Hook entrance of the harbor, upon such plan as the Secretary of War may approve, $1,000,000.

In reply to an inquiry made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] in regard to this, among other things I said:

There has been much discussion in regard to the matter, and a generally expressed opinion by all the commercial bodies of the city of New York, the chamber of commerce, the maritime association, together with the leading shipping merchants of New York, that the work should be undertaken in such a way as to secure a depth of 30 feet at low water over Sandy Hook bar.

It will be seen that in those words I made the statement that the chamber of commerce and other commercial bodies and the leading shipping merchants of New York desired this appropriation.

I find in a paper before me some words which were spoken in another place, which seem to controvert the statement made by myself. I send these words to the desk and ask that the paragraph I have marked be read:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HEWITT. * * * This is the view taken by the Chamber of Commerce of the City of New York. They do not ask for the money. They do ask that the channel be deepened, but first that a competent board shall be created to determine how the amount of money shall be expended; how the improvement may be best made, and then they will come and ask an appropriation to carry it out.

Mr. MILLER. Now I ask the Secretary to turn over the leaf and find a paragraph marked on the next page. Let that be read also, as it was submitted at the same time.

The Chief Clerk reads as follows:

Mr. HEWITT. * * * So I stand here on behalf of my constituents. I think they know what they want, and I think I know what they ought to have. They have not asked for this money. I do ask that it be withheld, but I ask the House to pass the bill which has come over from the Senate to give us a competent board to determine what we need and what it will cost and how it can best be expended. [Applause.] After that is done we shall hope to get all the money we need.

Mr. MILLER. I also hold in my hand some words which were spoken in another place, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HEWITT. I desire to occupy a moment or two with a question of personal privilege. Upon the first page of this morning's RECORD will be found what appear to be two petitions, one from the Chamber of Commerce of New York, the other from sundry merchants of New York city. Unanimous consent to have these printed in the RECORD was granted yesterday to my colleague [Mr. BURLEIGH]. These papers are not addressed to the House or the Senate; they are addressed to the Committee on Commerce of the Senate. Of course no member had any knowledge of the contents of these petitions when leave was granted to print them. I never saw them before. I do not know for what purpose they are published, but I suppose to cast some doubt upon the statement I made when the river and harbor bill was under discussion, that the chamber of commerce and the merchants of New York had not petitioned for the expenditure of a million of dollars.

Now, it is unnecessary for me to call attention to the fact that the resolution of the chamber of commerce here inserted does not apply to the provision of the river and harbor bill at all, but to another provision they desire to have inserted in the bill. I have a telegram in my hand from the chairman of the harbor committee of the chamber of commerce, received in answer to a communication I addressed to him, in the following words.

Mr. MILLER. It will be seen there that the statement is made that the person speaking had no knowledge of these petitions or resolutions from the chamber of commerce. By reference to the RECORD of June 13, of this session, it will be seen that I presented those resolutions and stated in presenting them:

Mr. MILLER. I present resolutions adopted by the executive committee and the committee on the harbor of New York of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, favoring an appropriation of $1,000,000 for the beginning of the permanent work of deepening the water over Sandy Hook bar to 30 feet at low tide. I move the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

At the same time I presented a petition:

Mr. MILLER. I also present a petition of similar purport, which has been prepared and signed by a very large number of leading commercial men of the city of New York, praying that the appropriation be made, and stating that "the undersigned believe this to be of paramount importance not only to the commerce of this city but to that of the entire country." As the petition is short, I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD, as I shall desire to refer to it hereafter.

It was so printed. This was public notice to everybody that these petitions had been received and presented to the Congress of the United States. I find also that upon June 21 I presented other petitions to the same purport, asking for this appropriation of a million dollars to deepen the water over Sandy Hook bar, and if any one did not know of it I certainly am not to blame.

In reply to what was read a moment ago at the desk, I send to the desk also words which were spoken in another place, and ask that what I have marked may be read by the Secretary.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURLEIGH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from New York did state on the floor of the House that the chamber of commerce and the merchants of New York were opposed to the insertion of this appropriation of $750,000 for the New York Harbor in the river and harbor bill, and yet the chamber of commerce has sent to the Senate and presented here a petition or series of resolutions in which this $750,000 is recommended, and showing that they are in favor of this identical bill. The bill and resolution and memorials of the citizens of New York are now before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors; and, sir, the gentleman states when he refers to Senator WARNER MILLER's bill, No. 2153, I think with reference to dumping refuse matter in the harbor of New York, what is a mistake when he says that is what they referred to. They so state themselves. And the gentleman from New York is mistaken. He takes the back track now, as he always does. [Laughter.]

Mr. MILLER. I find in this paper another statement which was made at the same time, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BURLEIGH. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] can not evade his position in this way. Over his own signature Mr. A. Foster Higgins, the chairman of the committee on the harbor, in a letter to the Senate, dated June 11, 1886, said:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

At a joint session of the executive committee and the committee on the harbor of the chamber of commerce, held Thursday, June 10, 1886, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That these committees learn with pleasure and gratitude that through the efforts of Senator WARNER MILLER an appropriation of $1,000,000 has been placed in the river and harbor bill for the improvement of New York Harbor. And we respectfully request that such amount be placed subject to the discretion and judgment of the Secretary of War, but not be entirely confined to any one locality or plan of improvement.

Attest:

CORNELIUS N. BLISS,
Chairman Executive Committee.
A. FOSTER HIGGINS,
Chairman Committee on the Harbor.

NEW YORK, June 11, 1886.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has read the RECORD, and this was referred to in it when the debates were going on in the Senate.

I also wish to have read a letter dated July 22, signed by C. N. Bliss, chairman of the executive committee, which further explains this subject.

The Clerk read:

NEW YORK, July 22, 1886.

MY DEAR MR. MILLER—

Mr. VEST. These are proceedings of the House of Representatives. I raise the point of order that it is not competent to speak of them here. If we have any rules here let us follow them.

Mr. MILLER. I have said nothing about proceedings of the House of Representatives. I have stated that these were remarks submitted in another place, and I have sent them to the desk to be read. If they can not be read there they can be read from my desk. There is no parliamentary power that can prevent my doing so, and no parliamentary practice that will prevent its being done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order being raised, it is the duty of the Senator to withhold his remarks until it is decided. The Chair knows no rule to prevent the reading of remarks made in the House of Representatives. There is a general parliamentary principle that reference shall not be made to the proceedings of the other House, but there is no rule of the Senate which forbids the reading of extracts from the proceedings of the House. The Chair has had occasion to look at that carefully. If the Senator from Missouri thinks otherwise and if he will refer the Chair to any rule or decision on the subject the Chair will be obliged to him.

Mr. MILLER. I do not think the Senator from Missouri desires to prevent me from making a personal explanation and putting into the RECORD the necessary papers to show the correctness of the statement which I made upon this floor on the 3d day of July, which was to the effect that the Chamber of Commerce of New York had passed a resolution indorsing the amendment I had proposed and asking the Senators and Representatives from New York to support it, and that a large number of the shipping merchants of New York had also petitioned for it. Proof of its correctness can not be shut out at this time, and I do not think the Senator from Missouri desires to do anything of that kind.

Mr. VEST. I do not want to prevent the Senator from New York making any personal explanation, but I want to get through with the public business and adjourn this session of Congress as soon as possible; and I do think that according to the best parliamentarians it is a violation of the rules of parliamentary law and of the Senate to take up a speech delivered in the House of Representatives and ask that it be read here. If I am not correct about it, let it go. I want to get through with the business.

Mr. MILLER. This has been done in the other body to which I have referred in the last two days. At whatever point the Chief Clerk stopped reading I ask him to resume.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

MY DEAR MR. MILLER: I have your favor of the 21st. The copy of the RECORD is not yet to hand; but I am surprised to hear that Mr. Higgins has presumably made any opposition to the appropriation for the New York Harbor. In the prior letter sent you about June 11 you have his assent to the proposal over his own signature as chairman of a committee of the chamber of commerce, together with the approval of the executive committee; also of other interested bodies, besides the document signed by many of the merchants. I believe it to be, practically, the unanimous expression of opinion of the members of the chamber that the appropriation should be made now, whether the commission bill becomes a law or not. The latter is deemed to be very desirable if practicable, but the harbor should and must have immediate attention, whether the work be done just as my friend Mr. Higgins wishes, or as the Congress chooses to have it done. If you will indicate anything you would wish to receive from here in further support of your action I will endeavor to furnish it promptly.

Very truly, yours,

C. N. BLISS.

Hon. WARNER MILLER,
United States Senate.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, as I have before said, on the 3d day of July from my seat on this floor I stated that the chamber of commerce and other commercial bodies and leading citizens of the City of New York had asked for this appropriation of $1,000,000 for the deepening of the water over Sandy Hook bar to 30 feet at low water. I have had read statements which call in question the correctness of the statement which I then made. It now seems that the chairman of the committee on harbors of the chamber of commerce of the City of New York is attempting to prevent the adoption of that amendment by the House of Representatives, and in order to do so it has been attempted to be shown that the chamber of commerce had approved what was known as the harbor commission bill which I introduced into this body, which I reported favorably and had passed only a few days ago, and that these recommendations and that these petitions were not for the appropriation of $1,000,000 to deepen the water over Sandy Hook bar at all, but were simply in favor of the passage of the harbor commission bill.

In addition to the petitions which I have had the honor to present to this body at several times during the past few months, I find from the public records that a very large number of petitions have been presented to the American Congress upon this subject from the city of New York very largely signed by the leading commercial men and shipping merchants of New York city. I hold one of them in my hand. It is a petition praying for an immediate appropriation by Congress to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for the purpose of securing a depth of 30 feet at low tide. There are a number of these petitions. I find that they were presented to the House of Representatives by Hon. Joseph Pulitzer, then a member of Congress from the city of New York. These have all been presented at this session.

I judge that the chamber of commerce, through its proper officers, is better able than any one else either here or elsewhere to answer the question as to what it has suggested and recommended. I have received this morning a letter from the chamber of commerce, signed by the chairman of the executive committee and approved by the president and vice-president of that body, which in very plain terms states their views. I send this to the desk and ask to have it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read if there be no objection.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
New York, July 23, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Mr. HEWITT'S remarks in the House of Representatives relative to an appropriation for New York Harbor, as reported in the RECORD of the 21st instant, must have been made under serious misapprehension of the position of the chamber of commerce. You have official documents from the chamber, signed by James M. Brown, president; Cornelius N. Bliss, chairman executive committee; A. Foster Higgins, chairman harbor committee, and William D. Morgan, chairman produce exchange harbor committee, supported by a memorial from many of the leading mercantile and shipping firms of the city, fully approving the Senate's amendments to the river and harbor bill, which appropriates $750,000 for the improvement of New York Harbor, the same to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. Probably the misapprehension in Mr. HEWITT'S mind arises from the fact that the chamber of commerce also supports very heartily your bill for the appointment of a commission to have permanent charge of the harbor. The chamber does not consider that there is any conflict between the two measures, and while the members favor a commission and hope Congress will provide for one, they ask, absolutely and urgently, that the appropriation proposed by the Senate be granted at the present session.

The statement of Mr. HEWITT places the chamber before Congress as not knowing its own mind, or of being divided in its counsels, neither of which is true. I shall be glad if you will give Mr. HEWITT an opportunity to inspect the papers above referred to, and the executive committee of the chamber trust that the appropriation will be restored to the bill.

Respectfully, yours,

CORNELIUS N. BLISS,
Chairman of Executive Committee.

Approved by—

JAMES M. BROWN, President.
CHARLES S. SMITH, Vice-President.

Hon. WARNER MILLER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MILLER. That, I think, fixes the present position of the chamber of commerce upon the question which has been raised as to their position in favor of this appropriation and in favor of its being made now and in favor of its being made whether the bill for the harbor commission shall pass or not.

I have here a few words which I will read myself without taking the trouble to send them to the Secretary's desk:

In addition to this amount this bill proposes $750,000. It is against that which I protest, not against putting in money to improve New York Harbor, but against continuing an improvement behind which it has been intimated to me that there may be a job; and since the gentleman has raised this question in this manner I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter from Mr. Higgins, chairman of the committee of the chamber of commerce, in regard to this whole operation, so that the country may know what is going on.

Then follows a long letter signed by Mr. C. A. F. Higgins, which, while it in no way makes any direct charges against me, does intimate that I have been earnest and energetic in securing the passage of what is known as the harbor-commission bill, and refers incidentally to correspondence which has taken place between Mr. Higgins and myself in regard to the harbor-commission bill and in regard to this improvement of the harbor by the appropriation of a million dollars to deepen the water over Sandy Hook Bar.

Mr. President, it is not customary, I believe, to print letters of this kind without the consent of the writer. Whether that consent was obtained in this case or not I do not know, but I assume that it was.

And when a gentleman permits a letter of that kind to be printed in the public records of our Government he must expect that the correspondence to which he has referred in the letter will also be submitted to the public, and I do now submit this correspondence which has taken place between myself and Mr. Higgins upon the matter of the harbor-commission bill and in regard to this appropriation. In order to save time I will not read this correspondence unless it shall be insisted upon, but will submit the letters each one in order, together with my answer, to be printed in the RECORD, if that is satisfactory to the Senate. Otherwise I shall be compelled to read them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the papers will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLER. They will be submitted. They are marked in their order.

Now, Mr. President, a few words in regard to the statement which I read a moment ago: "It has been intimated to me that there may be a job."

Mr. HARRIS. What is the character of papers the Senator proposes to have printed in the RECORD?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels bound to state that the remarks just made by the Senator from New York do not fall within the privileges of a personal explanation.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly they do, Mr. President. This language here refers to my action in securing this appropriation in the Senate, and it intimates that there may be a job connected with it. Certainly I have a right to reply to that, as to any suggestion or intimation coming from any source whatever.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear any intimation of that kind.

Mr. MILLER. The Chair is at fault then in not hearing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was listening carefully.

Mr. MILLER. Now, Mr. President, as to the possibility of there being any job in connection with the appropriation of $750,000, as it now stands or as it stood in the river and harbor bill when it left this body, it seems to me to be necessary to say but a single word.

I have read here the language of that amendment, which provides that that money shall be expended by the Secretary of War upon such plan as he shall approve. It does not adopt any plan of any set of engineers, although the engineers have prepared a plan and have submitted it to Congress; but I did not think it wise at that time to put into the bill what we ordinarily put in when we make an appropriation of this kind, which is to provide that the money shall be expended in accordance with a certain plan, specifying that plan; but in order that there might be a wider scope of examination, in order that the Secretary of War might consider all plans coming from his own Army engineers, or coming from civil engineers, or coming from men in private life, the language of the appropriation was simply to the effect that the Secretary of War should expend this money upon plans approved by him.

As I stated some days ago in my speech on the river and harbor bill, there has never been a scandal connected with the expenditure of any river and harbor money expended under the control of the Secretary of War from the beginning of the Government down to the present time. It is impossible that there should be any job connected with it. No person could have any power or influence over it in any possible way save through the Secretary of War; and if this imputation of a job, which I have read the words of, is intended to apply to the Secretary of War I leave that for the Secretary of War himself to answer.

Mr. HARRIS. I asked what was the character of the papers that were proposed to be inserted in the RECORD. I should like to know something of their character.

Mr. MILLER. The character of the papers is that of a correspondence had between myself and one of the officers of the Chamber of Commerce of New York in relation to the harbor commission bill which has passed this body and in relation to this appropriation of $1,000,000 which the Senate put into the river and harbor bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the correspondence reflect upon a member of another House of the legislative department?

Mr. MILLER. It does not in the least, but it is put in in explanation of a letter which I find printed in the RECORD from the same person with whom I had the correspondence, and which letter is intended indirectly to reflect upon me, and therefore I submit the whole correspondence, that this Senate and the whole country may know precisely what the correspondence has been instead of leaving it in the dark as it has been left by the party who inserted this letter.

The correspondence is as follows:

OFFICE No. 50, WALL STREET, June 7, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: It was with the utmost astonishment that I learned from two different sources your expressions, first, as to the hopelessness of passing our harbor commission bill, and your intention of substituting a request for a million of dollars for Gedney's Channel. I hasten to warn you that such a move will produce a feeling here most prejudicial to you personally, and which will be very unfortunate in view of the present desire to have you again an honored Senator. You must recall the fact that this bill in its present form originated with you, and as the proper substitute for the more simple bill presented by Mr. Cox; that it was heralded as the proper and in fact only effectual remedy for the evils existing in our harbor and for which no cure has been found by any possible State action, and was the result of the most earnest and searching examination of the subject by the mayor, the chamber of commerce, the produce exchange, the maritime exchange, the pilot commissioners, and every one else interested.

It has no relation to any other commission ever talked of or created. It was to cover a condition of things unique and not existing in any other harbor of the United States, and was deemed essential to preserve this national gateway. There could not be an objection to its fairness and simplicity except by persons to whom it would become an obstacle in perhaps interfering with schemes of their personal profit or aggrandizement. I called your attention to the value it would have as a means of practically annihilating jobbery, and showed you the great saving to the Government and advantages it would gain by carefully considering every proposed plan and opposing any and all which failed to offer positive results. The only possible opponents of the plan were the engineers of the Unired States who saw in it a possible interference with their exercise of sole judgment, power, and authority in matters connected with the harbor and the possible objection of New Jersey.

Before the introduction of the bill this session I took the precaution of submitting it to the governor of New Jersey and obtaining his approval and the assurance that Senator MCPHERSON would aid you in its passage. As the Engineer-in-Chief of the Army was to be the head of the commission I could not imagine any reason for their opposition which could bear the light of day. I find now that some surreptitious influence is at work, and that they are bringing upon you pressure to swerve you from that course as to this bill which alone can win you the approval of your constituents. This bill was introduced as an honest, fair demand of this city and State for a remedy for evils beyond the State's control. It is at least entitled to have it pressed for passage and honest reasons given for its defeat.

It will not in the least satisfy its requirements to have a sop of even a million of dollars to be expended in a measure utterly tentative and which may require every succeeding year a similar amount to keep the depth once attained. This latter I know to be a job and that the parties urging it are working in interests entirely selfish, and not really in the permanent interests of this harbor. I am quite sure the loss of our bill would in no degree be compensated by any such appropriation. I shall be driven, if this bill be dropped, to a personal explanation to the chamber of commerce and the public of New York, and I beg that you will not permit yourself to be made the peg upon which this whole unjust and most improper action will be hung.

Yours, most truly,

A. FOSTER HIGGINS,
Chairman of the standing Committee on Harbor and Shipping of Chamber of Commerce of New York.

Hon. WARNER MILLER,
United States Senate, Washington, D.C.

SENATE CHAMBER, Washington, D. C., June 9, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 7th.

You are mistaken in supposing that I have given up the harbor-commission bill. I shall do my best to pass it through the Senate at this session, but I do not believe it possible to pass it through the House this session and become a law, and the proposed appropriation of $1,000,000 for the improvement of the entrance to New York Harbor is no way a substitute for the commission bill.

The commission bill provides for a permanent commission to have in charge the harbor of New York and adjacent waters, and to prevent any injury being done the harbor by preventing the dumping of any material into the same, and it provides very stringent penalties for any violation of the law, but there is no power given the commission by the bill to expend money for the improvement of the entrance to New York Harbor, as is now given the Secretary of War through the board of engineers, such as the work at Hell Gate, Gowanus Bay, and other work now going on in New York Harbor, and in my judgment if the commission bill was now a law it would be impossible to get appropriations for the work on Gedney's Channel, but it would require that all money to be expended should be expended in the ordinary way.

The House of Representatives, in the river and harbor bill which they passed, did away with the Mississippi River Commission and also the Missouri River Commission, which have been engaged for many years in the improvement of those streams, and it has relegated both works to the Secretary of War, the money to be expended this year under the Secretary of War, as all moneys this year in these matters are to be expended.

They are also mistaken in supposing that any "surreptitious influence" or any influence of any kind is being brought to bear on me to induce me to give up the commission bill. No one has approached me on the subject except the friends of the bill. Of course I understand fully that the board of Army engineers is opposed to it, but what they have done to exercise any influence on this bill I do not know at all, as they have not in any way approached me.

The proposed appropriation for the deepening of Gedney's Channel is not to carry on the present experimental work of sea-dredging, but it is to begin the permanent improvement which has been proposed by a board of three Army engineers and approved by General Newton.

General Newton came before the Committee of Commerce and fully explained the plan to the committee and assured the committee that if they were supplied with sufficient funds the work could be accomplished in three years and a depth of 30 feet of water at low tide obtained and he had no doubt as an engineer of the complete success of this plan.

Believing that the great bulk of the merchants of New York are very desirous that this improvement should be made and that they have great confidence in General Newton, who has done so much in New York, I did not hesitate to recommend the committee to appropriate $1,000,000 to commence this improvement.

General Newton has little or no confidence in the work or attempt at work in sea-dredging, but he thought it well to experiment to see whether sea-dredging can be done at all, and while he has no confidence that it will succeed in New York, he thinks it might be valuable at some points along the coast, but he has decided that it is possible to obtain the depth of 30 feet by the plan proposed by the board of engineers, and I must say I fully concur with him in that.

When you say that you know "there is a job in this" and that "the parties are working in interests entirely selfish," you must refer, I presume, to the attempts of dredging which is now going on, for certainly you can not refer to the permanent improvement proposed by General Newton. No one has appeared to urge this except General Newton, and he was invited by the committee to come and give his views on the whole question.

In taking this action I have been guided entirely by what I believe to be the pressing necessity of New York, that the water over the bar should be at the earliest moment possible deepened to 30 feet at low water, and I have no doubt myself of the ability of General Newton to accomplish this result if he be furnished with the funds.

You suggest that my action in this matter will be prejudicial to you (me) personally and which will be very unfortunate in view of the present desire to have you (me) again our honored Senator. Prizing your good opinion of myself as highly as I do, I can not believe for a moment that you think that I would perform or leave unperformed any public duty for the purpose of advancing my own political interests. I have never yet given a vote or performed a public act with any such view, and should I ever be unfortunate enough to do such a thing, I trust my constituents will retire me to private life.

Of course if the great commercial interests of New York city do not desire that this great improvement be made, it will be a very easy matter to have the appropriation stricken out of the bill, but I am very clear in my own opinion that this work should be commenced at once and pursued with all vigor to a successful completion.

Believing that you have misunderstood the matter in some of its aspects, I send by this mail a copy of the report of the board of engineers on this subject, which you may not have seen.

Yours, truly,

WARNER MILLER.

A. FOSTER HIGGINS, Esq.,
50 Wall Street, New York City.

JUNE 10, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: Your esteemed favor of the 9th is received, and I thank you for the trouble you have taken to fully inform me of the true condition of matters. My judgment and mind are so deeply interested in procuring for our harbor the protection from injury, which is only to be attained by such a bill as has been presented by you from the chamber, that perhaps I err in looking with suspicion upon everything which is proposed as a substitute. I beg that you will understand my communication as flowing from this fact.

We have to-day had a formal session of the two committees of the chamber of commerce, and by to-morrow's mail I will forward to you the resolutions passed expressing our gratitude to you for your action, and our desire that this appropriation if obtained shall be subject to the discretion and judgment of the Secretary of War and not appropriated to be spent upon any specific locality or plan. If you will see yourself that this feature is introduced you will remedy the very important objection I entertain as to its being a substitute.

To explain to you more fully you will see that to accept this sum specifically to be applied only to Gedney's Channel will be to institute a work in that spot alone and in connection with that channel which will be fatal to any consideration even of any other channel or plan. I fear this to be the intention of its proponents, but if it be placed at the disposal of the Secretary of War he will be at liberty to listen to all objections, consider any and all other plans, and adopt that one which in his opinion is the best. This can not be objected to by any one who honestly has the interests of New York at heart, but will be opposed by any who have a desire to direct those expenditures in some indefensible direction.

We shall trust to your good management to see that this condition is made a part of the appropriation. We still urge that you do not suffer to be suspended a single possible exertion to get our harbor bill passed. It is nothing new that a board shall be appointed to consider New York work, and it is certain that no power less than such a board as has been asked for will ever put an end to the vandalism daily and hourly being perpetrated. Of the two measures I am firmly of conviction that this harbor bill is worth more to us than the million of dollars.

Yours, very truly,

A. FOSTER HIGGINS,
Chairman of Standing Committee on Harbor and Shipping of Chamber of Commerce.

Hon. WARNER MILLER,
United States Senate.

SENATE CHAMBER, Washington, D. C., June 11, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your esteemed favor of the 10th, and am glad to know that my letter to you has explained matters so that you fully comprehend what I am attempting to do. It is my intention to so draw the clause in the bill to leave the Secretary of War free to adopt any plan for the improvement of the entrance to the harbor which he and the engineers may decide to be best. General Newton himself approves of such a wording of the clause, and I do not see that there will be any objection to it. At all events I will put it in that shape, and with the hearty co-operation of the chamber of commerce and other bodies of New York I hope to succeed in keeping it in the bill.

Yours, truly,

WARNER MILLER.

A. FOSTER HIGGINS, Esq., New York city.

JUNE 14, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: I am becoming more and more astonished at the masterly work evinced and performed by the opponents of our harbor-commission bill, and the same persons, in their evident desire to force all action in connection with New York Harbor, into the acceptance of some declared plan (sic) of the United States engineers. Now, my dear sir, I must ask you to calmly consider for a moment the facts I shall state to you, for your letter indicates to me that you have listened to General Newton. You avow to be familiar with his plan, and you are publicly quoted as saying that you are "in favor of it."

I have carefully reread the report you sent me, and in it I find but two plans or suggestions of plans. The first is the simple dredging of Gedney's Channel to a uniform depth, as much as the sum appropriated will accomplish. At first this was the balance of the $200,000 obtained. A contract was made in accordance—iron-clad, a failure completely—and the announcement that the sum available was too small to be worthy of contracting for, as no one would build a sea-dredge capable of work there unless a sum of at least $300,000 was available; consequently $150,000 additional was asked for, and at the instance of General VIELE and Mr. BURLEIGH was asked for from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

I went to Washington and advocated it, as well as the other national (?) works of Buttermilk Channel and Newtown Creek, both of which I expressed the opinion were entitled to aid, and at the same time most vigorously stated that New York did not want any large appropriation until the best channel for improvement and the best plan for permanent maintenance had been fixed on, and that our commission bill had this object in view.

Permit me just here to inform you that the bill did expressly make it the duty of the commission to examine and report to Congress from time to time such plans of permanent improvement and protection of the harbor as they should decide on. I understood that the committee would recommend the appropriations named, and looked with favor on the commission. Certainly within the last month I was told the committee had consented to embody the whole bill introduced by you into the river and harbor bill. It was my plan to thus have it pass, and if passed by the Senate and vetoed by the President, as is confidently predicted, that your bill should then be pushed, and being embodied in the river and harbor bill would certainly meet with no new opposition. How all this has been changed you know better than I do.

The other plan of the engineer report was deemed a mere suggestion. It involved an expenditure stated roughly to be from five to six millions; consisted of a jetty system extending south to southwest from Coney Island. It involved the direct obstruction and complete annihilation of the 14-foot channel and the east channel, and confined the entrance to New York Harbor to one single channel—Gedney's on the sea and its two corresponding inner channels, the main ship and swash.

This entire plan seemed to a civilian so wild that I asked General Newton personally if he could possibly foretell what would be the effect on the inner or outer bay of such a plan, and if he did not see that to contract the entrance to one single channel would be a great loss. He admitted that no one could possibly tell the effect, that he by no means advocated such a work to be carried out at once or continuously, but tentatively, little by little—to construct walls only of comparative height and length—and then to await the effect of so much, and to take step No. 2 only after step No. 1 proved effective. You will see that in the same manner his printed report most cautiously says: "If the experiment fails here then the composition and nature of al lthe shoals should be accurately determined by deep borings, the action of the currents definitely learned, and the method of contraction studied." (Page 5.) Again on page 6: "I do not know that the cut once opened will be self-maintaining, but the present appropriation being small it is well enough to experiment with it."

All this indicates the (to say the least) propriety of following the resolutions of the chamber of commerce asking for an appropriation of $75,000 or $100,000 wherewith to make the tidal observations, the borings, and all the studies required by common sense, and which do not exist, to determine at least the feasibility of any scheme and the probability of its maintenance.

I candidly think the engineers are afraid to subject their plans to public scrutiny; otherwise why should they object to a commission constituted exactly like the one which, I think, in 1854 was appointed for New York, on which Generals Bache and Totten acted? I notice an interviewer with you calls those who advocate the commission "schemers."

What possible scheme lies hid under a board of men like the Chief of Engineers, a Navy officer, a professor of the Coast Survey, and an honored representative of New Jersey and New York? It is wicked and absurd to so speak of it. I regret exceedingly to learn that the bill when called up did not have any attention and was passed over. I trust you did not sanction this, as it certainly does not consist with a desire for its passage. I am told that Senator MCPHERSON declares he favored the passage of the bill, but does not now wish to antagonize you.

My dear Senator, I feel convinced that you can, if you desire, pass this bill. It is of so much real value to save wasting money on our harbor, as naturally all moneys to be expended in new plans would be submitted to such a commission, and to stop the injuries going on uninterruptedly for twenty-five years past, that I again beg you to give it your aid.

I inclose a petition which was signed by the most influential and important firms and organizations in New York, which was sent in by Mr. Pulitzer and then seems to have been buried. I beg you to revive it, and if the appropriation can be made to fit in with its request we will have gained a most important end.

Yours, hurriedly, but sincerely,

A. FOSTER HIGGINS.

Hon. WARNER MILLER,
Washington, D. C.

SENATE CHAMBER, Washington, D. C., June 16, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of yours of the 14th. If the person who furnishes you with information from Washington would undertake to be certain of his facts and give you only facts, you would not have written the letter of the 14th, for I can not believe you would have written such a letter if you had been in possession of the truth in the matter. You say, "I regret exceedingly to learn that the bill when called up did not have any attention and was passed over. I trust you did not sanction this, as it certainly does not consist with a desire for its passage."

The person who gave you that information, if he knew anything about it, knew that the Senate was acting under the five-minute rule by unanimous consent, under which no bill can be taken up and have more than five minutes, and under that rule all bills giving rise to debate go over. The bill on New York Harbor went over still retaining its place on the Calendar, like a large number of other bills. I can not believe that your informant did not know of that fact when he gave you information regarding it, and I must consider it a willful intent on his part to misrepresent it.

You also state that Senator MCPHERSON favors the passage of the bill, but does not wish to antagonize me. As to his views, I know nothing whatever. He has never mentioned it to me in any way.

You state that you were told a month ago that the committee had consented to put the bill into the river and harbor bill, and in case that bill was vetoed it would be taken up and passed separately, and you say, "How all this has been changed you know better than I do." I presume you refer to the House committee, for certainly there never was any such understanding in the Senate committee, for the Senate committee could not put the bill into the river and harbor bill under its rules. I did it two years ago and it was ruled out under a point of order.

I never knew that the House committee had consented to put the bill into the river and harbor bill, and I have no knowledge whatever as to why it changed its views, if it did change, and any intimation that I know how it was done better than you do is entirely gratuitious on your part. I know nothing whatever about it.

I need not repeat my former assurances that I shall do my best to secure the passage of the commission bill, notwithstanding your intimations that you do not believe that I am in earnest in the matter. I shall not change my course of action or my determination to do what I can to secure its passage.

I beg to remain, yours, truly,

WARNER MILLER.

P. S.—I notice in your letter also that you say that you have seen in an interview that I called the advocates of the commission "schemers," which you say is both wicked and absurd.

I have never characterized the advocates of the commission bill as "schemers" in any authorized interview or in any conversation with anybody, as I would not likely put myself in such a list, as I consider myself and am one of the advocates of a commission bill.

W. MILLER.

A. FOSTER HIGGINS, Esq.,
50 Wall street, New York City.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, as I have stated, it is impossible there should be a job connected with the expenditure of this money if it is to be expended absolutely under the control of the Secretary of War. Why it is that this Mr. Higgins, after having signed a communication from the chamber of commerce to this body or to the Committee on Commerce of this body advising and recommending this appropriation of $1,000,000, should now in another way seek to defeat it, I do not know. I see that he takes the ground that this appropriation should not be made until after the commission bill has been passed entirely and become a law and until after of course the commission has had an opportunity to make plans of their own. But the two Houses of Congress have not looked favorably this year upon the expenditure of money for the improvement of rivers and harbors under commissions and have taken the power away from the commissions and have given it to the Secretary of War.

This harbor-commission bill which I introduced and had passed through this body provided for the appointment of a commission of five men, whose duty it should be to maintain a supervisory power over the harbor of New York to prevent the dumping into it in any way of refuse or other matter tending to destroy the harbor or in any way injure navigation in it. There is nothing in that bill giving the commission power to expend money for the improvement of the harbor, and if an appropriation was made at any time after the bill should become a law it could not be expended under that commission unless Congress gave it direct power to do it, but all the moneys appropriated in the river and harbor bill are to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Why this attack has been made I do not know, but I have had read here a letter received to-day from the chamber of commerce, signed by its president, its vice-president, and the chairman of its executive committee, calling upon this Congress to see to it that this appropriation is not lost at this time.

If there is any job connected with any portion of this movement it will be found somewhere else than in the appropriation of $75,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War. Whether there is any job of that kind or not, I know not; whether any improper influences have been at work and have favored the passage of the harbor commission bill or not, I do not know; but it is very evident that some gentlemen having that bill particularly in view and in interest are now very anxious to secure from this Congress a rejection of that amendment, in order that nothing may be done in the harbor of New York until after the commission shall have been permanently established and shall have had an opportunity to make its own plans and bring them before Congress. I do not know what those plans may be, nor whether Congress would approve them; but if we are to judge by the action of Congress at this session we shall find that Congress has not been favorable to the expenditure of money for such purposes under a commission.

I have here a letter from Capt. Francis J. Palmer, an engineer who has been in some way connected with the chamber of commerce and who has been making investigations in the harbor of New York. I send it to the desk and ask to have it read. Perhaps that may throw some light upon some reasons which have influenced some people in attemping to have this amendment stricken out of the river and harbor bill.

The Secretary read as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK,
New York, July 14, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I desire to thank you for securing the passage of the harbor board bill. Your work, although very late, is most welcome. That Sun article twitched you off. We know your brain power, your commanding presence, and the merits of the bill, and have been very much annoyed that you did not take action ten weeks ago, as it can only at this late season become law through united exertions, that is, you and other Senators bringing your influence to bear upon such men as Judge REAGAN, Hon. A. HEWITT, &c., to get the bill taken up from the Speaker's desk with the approval of the majority. I have only deferred taking bolder steps toward securing that end at the wish of the chamber of commerce, as they believe the appointment of such a board will give New York at once what she wants, and other ports—Galveston and Charleston—will likewise obtain relief years earlier than they could otherwise.

Yours, very respectfully,

FRANCIS J. PALMER.

Hon. WARNER MILLER,
United States Senate.

I have right at my back and can get all the millions needed to carry the biggest kind of harbor work that may be decided upon by the Secretary of War, and there is no doubt in my mind that he will have the best.

Mr. MILLER. Just one word in regard to the passage of the harbor-commission bill through this body, and then I shall have finished.

I think two years ago I secured the adoption of substantially the same bill as the harbor-commission bill which has passed here at this session, and secured its addition to the river and harbor bill. It was placed upon that bill by the Committee on Commerce when the bill was reported to this body, and, it being discussed, a point of order was made against it by, I think, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. The Chair ruled it out of order and it was thrown out of the bill. This session I brought in the same bill, secured its adoption by the Committee on Commerce, and I was authorized by that committee to report it favorably, placed it upon the Calendar, and passed it at the earliest opportunity. It will be remembered that several times when going over the Calendar this bill was reached, and it was objected to by several Senators and went over.

After talking with those Senators and explaining the bill to them their opposition was withdrawn, and finally one morning the bill was again reached when we were passing over the Calendar, and foregoing any right to make any remarks upon it at all, though we were operating under the five-minute rule, the bill was taken up, and no Senator objecting to it, it was passed.

I simply desire to say in answer to these insinuations which have been thrown out in this letter and other letters that I was not prompt or energetic in my endeavors to pass that bill, that they are without foundation. I never lost any opportunity to secure the passage of that bill or to secure it at the earliest possible moment, believing and feeling that it was a measure of very great importance, particularly to the people of the city of New York; and any imputation that I was dilatory or delayed action upon that bill is absolutely without foundation.

I have nothing more to say.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine; and

A bill (H. R. 8975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (H. R. 6314) to increase the pension of James Carlin; and

A bill (H. R. 8474) granting a pension to James McGlen.

The bill (H. R. 8296) to remove the political disabilities of Duff Green Reed was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DEATH OF VICE-PRESIDENT HENDRICKS.

Mr. VOORHEES. Will the Senator from Iowa allow me to offer a resolution which I desire to have printed and referred to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will receive the resolution.

Mr. VOORHEES submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the proceedings of the Supreme Court of the United States, as they appear on page 707 of volume 117 of the Supreme Court Reports, on the occasion of the death of Thomas A. Hendricks, late Vice-President of the United States, be published with the memorial addresses already authorized by Congress.

VETOED PENSION BILLS.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to submit the reports of a majority of the Committee on Pensions on the veto messages of the President of the United States on the bill (S. 1077) granting a pension to Newcomb Parker and the bill (S. 1797) granting a pension to John S. Kirkpatrick. I call the attention of the minority of the committee to these reports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reports will be received and placed on the Calendar.

SEIZURES OF AMERICAN VESSELS IN FOREIGN WATERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate of the United States:

In response to the resolutions of the Senate, dated respectively May 10 and July 10, 1886, touching alleged seizures and detentions of vessels of the United States in British North American waters, I transmit herewith a report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying papers.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, July 24, 1886.

WILLIAM P. CHAMBLISS.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 68) for the relief of William P. Chambliss, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

CHARLES F. MANDERSON,
JOHN A. LOGAN,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

FRANK L. WOLFORD,
JOSEPH WHEELER,
Conferees on the part of the House of Representatives.

The report was concurred in.

PACKING AND SELLING CUT TOBACCO.

Mr. BECK. I ask unanimous consent to have a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue printed to accompany the bill (H. R. 8738) to so further amend section 3362 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and section 3363, as makes a distinction in the mode of packing and selling cut tobacco.

That was omitted at the time the bill was reported. I desire to have it printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed as a document to accompany the bill.

AMENDMENT TO DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on the Judiciary, which has considered it informally, an amendment intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill, which I ask may be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed, if there be no objection.

CATHARINE LANIGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2349) granting a pension to Catharine Lanigan; which was in line 5, after the words "rate of," strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Catharine Lanigan, mother of John Lanigan, late of Company K, Twenty-third Illinois Volunteers, in the late war, at the rate of $30 per month, from and after the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. SAWYER. I move that the amendment be concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the amendment already agreed to on page 70, after line 1701:

For the education of the children of school age in the Territory of Alaska, without regard to race, $25,000.

I beg that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will not object to the amendment. This is a regular estimate found on the sixty-second page of the Book of Estimates. I think the item must have been left out when this bill was framed, by mistake, growing out of the fact that it is found in the Book of Estimates under the legislative appropriation bill, and I suppose, though I have no knowledge, that when the legislative bill was made up, this item being found there and not belonging there, it was left out, and when the sundry civil bill was made up it was not found in the estimates for that bill.

It is a regular estimate, and this is all the money that has been proposed for this purpose. If this should be adopted, it is all that has been appropriated for the purpose since the act establishing a government over Alaska. At that time $25,000 was appropriated for this purpose, and, if my memory does not fail me, that is all the appropriation for the purpose which has been made.

The necessity of it is so apparent under the work which has been done there that I shall occupy no time of the Senate in advocating the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 61, line 1488, after the word "dollars," I ask that the following amendment be added:

The moneys received at the General Land Office as fees for furnishing transcripts of records and plats shall be deposited in the Treasury and be deemed an appropriation to pay for making such copies; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall be authorized to use any portion of this appropriation for piece-work, or for temporary clerk-hire by the day, month, or year, at such rate or rates as he may deem just and fair, not exceeding $1,000 a year.

Mr. ALLISON. I feel bound to make a point of order on that amendment, but I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I do not myself object to an appropriation of, say, $5,000 for that purpose. I had prepared an amendment covering that idea, but I can not lay my hand on it now—$5,000 to make copies of maps and plats—but I do not believe we ought to place in the hands of the Commissioner the funds arising from fees for copies as a fund to meet such expenditures.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then just add there "not exceeding $5,000."

Mr. ALLISON. That is not what I propose. I am willing to make an appropriation to enable the Commissioner of the General Land Office to make these copies.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is all we want.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. But I do not wish a specific fund set apart for that purpose, thereby changing existing law.

Mr. COCKRELL. This directs that the fees shall be covered into the Treasury and only appropriates a certain amount. I would as soon have a specific appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not object to that.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will prepare an amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The law provides that these fees shall be turned into the Treasury, and I desire that that law shall continue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri modify his amendment?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will in a moment. I withdraw it for the present, but I will offer another one that I hope the Senator will not object to. On page 49, at the end of line 1182, I move to insert:

And the appropriation herein made for gas consumed in any of the public buildings shall include the rental or use of any gas-governor, gas-purifier, or other device for reducing the expenses of gas, when first approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and ordered by him in writing: Provided, That no sum shall be paid for such rental or use of said gas-governor, gas-purifier, or device greater than one-half of the amount of money actually saved thereby.

Mr. ALLISON. I reserve any point of order until we have an explanation of the object.

Mr. COCKRELL. There are gentlemen who claim that they have a gas-governor or purifier by which they can save in all the public buildings of the United States a very large sum of money, and they simply ask that the Secretary of the Treasury shall have authority to rent and use this, and not pay for such rental or use exceeding one-half the amount actually saved. It does seem to me such a plain proposition that there can be no objection to it. The proviso explains it so that the Secretary shall not authorize the use or rental of this at any sum greater than 50 per cent. of the amount actually saved by its use.

Mr. ALLISON. That on its face seems to be a very economical proposition, and I do not know but that it is; but I always fear legislation which will authorize the placing in public buildings all over the country of a patented arrangement. It seems to me that if there is a device which will save the consumption of gas in any way that can be utilized by the Government the easiest possible course would be to apply this instrument to use in the Treasury building, or some building here in the city of Washington under the eye of our own officers, and thus demonstrate its utility.

Mr. COCKRELL. Well, I will restrict it to the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON. Suppose you restrict it to the Treasury building.

Mr. COCKRELL. That might not be well, but the Secretary of the Treasury would certainly not be likely to try it in any other place. I amend my amendment by saying "in the District of Columbia."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I had a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, upon which I can not lay my hands just now, in which, as I recollect it, he recommends that the provision should be put in, that there would be no harm in it.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us try it in the District of Columbia and see how it works.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment as modified as follows:

And the appropriation herein made for gas consumed in any of the public buildings in the District of Columbia shall include the rental or use of any gas-governor, gas-purifier, or other device for reducing the expenses of gas, when first approved by the Secretary of the Treasury and ordered by him in writing: Provided, That no sum shall be paid for such rental or use of said gas-governor, gas-purifier, or device greater than one-half part of the amount of money actually saved thereby.

Mr. ALLISON. The District of Columbia ought not to control the Treasury Department, because this relates to the Treasury Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is under the control of the Treasury Department.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move the following amendment to come in after line 2495, on page 102:

For the purchase of the painting The First Fight of Ironclads, by W. F. Halsall, $7,500.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order, unless that comes from a committee.

Mr. HOAR. It comes from the Committee on the Library.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it recommended by the committee?

Mr. HOAR. It was recommended by the Committee on the Library and sent to the Committee on Appropriations. I ask to have read a letter from Rear-Admiral Worden.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, May 19, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: I take the liberty of addressing you in reference to the painting by W. F. Halsall of the first fight of ironclads, now on exhibition in this city. I have examined the picture closely, and regard it as giving a correct representation of the vessels engaged and as presenting an accurate picture of the event it is intended to illustrate. In my judgment, too, it has decided artistic merit, and illustrates with marked effect an epoch in the history of the naval warfare of which our nation and people have the right to be proud. For that reason I beg to suggest that it should become the property of the Government and be placed in a prominent position in its legislative halls.

With great respect, your obedient servant,

JOHN L. WORDEN,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy.

To Senators SEWELL, HOAR, and VOORHEES,
Committee on Library, United States Senate.

Mr. HOAR. I now send to the desk a letter from Lieutenant Littlepage, who was on the Merrimac.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 19, 1886.

To the Joint Committee on the Library:

GENTLEMEN: Having been an officer on the Merrimac and having participated in the memorable engagement between that vessel and the Monitor, I take the liberty of stating that I consider the painting by W. F. Halsall as correct a representation of that fight as it would be possible to produce on canvas.

As to the artistic merits of the picture I leave it for others to judge, but as to its historical importance I can conceive of no greater event of the kind, not only for its effect upon this country, but for the deep impression it made upon the whole world.

It made the great naval powers feel that they were without war vessels, completely revolutionized naval warfare, and caused the remodeling and reconstructing of all navies.

On account of the historical importance of the scene it so vividly and so accurately represents, I submit that the Government should purchase it and suitably place it where the public can see it.

I am, most respectfully, your obedient servant,

H. B. LITTLEPAGE.

Mr. HOAR. I have letters from persons who were on both sides. This painting is not intended as a commemoration of a victory, but of a great epoch in naval architecture, in which the equipment of the Merrimac was a great exploit on one side and the invention and equipment of the Monitor on the other. I will say that the picture has been examined by a great many persons who were in that fight on both sides, and all speak of it with great enthusiasm. It is the production of an artist who is commended to me by eminent artists as a man standing high in his profession. While the price is $7,500, it is a painting which has been insured for $15,000, and my only doubt about the matter is that the price is too small. If the Senate will allow the other letters I have on the subject to be printed in the RECORD without reading I will not delay the proceedings by reading them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the letters will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears none.

The letters referred to are as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF STEAM ENGINEERING,
Washington, May 20, 1886.

SIR: Learning that the committee of which you are chairman has under consideration the purchase of Mr. Halsall's picture of the Merrimac-Monitor fight, I venture, as a participant in some and an eye-witness of all the incidents connected with that momentous engagement, to commend to you the faithful and skillful manner in which the artist has handled his subject. The picture recalls vividly the events of those two fateful days, and is a worthy memento of one of the great naval battles of history.

Very respectfully, yours,

CHAS. H. LOSSING,
Engineer-in-Chief, U. S. N.

Hon. WILLIAM J. SEWELL,
Chairman Joint Committee on the Library.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, May 21, 1886.

SIR: Referring to the painting of W. F. Halsall of the fight between the Monitor and Merrimac, now on exhibition in this city, having examined it, I desire to state that it gives a splendid illustration of the fight. I have taken the liberty to commend it from my standpoint, having been engaged in the first day's fight and an eye-witness of what took place on the second day.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THEODORE D. WILSON,
Chief Constructor, U. S. N.

Hon. WILLIAM J. SEWELL,
Chairman Joint Committee on Library.

WASHINGTON, May, 1886.

To the joint Committee of the Library:

GENTLEMEN: I witnessed the fight between the Monitor and Merrimac on the 9th of March, 1862, and I can not conceive of anything more truthful and realistic than Mr. Halsall's picture of that engagement. I sincerely hope that the historical painting will become Government property and be placed where the public can have access to it.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

WM. P. RANDALL, United States Navy.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 30, 1886.

To the Committee of the Library of the United States Senate and House of Representatives:

GENTLEMEN: I respectfully ask your consideration of a painting by me entitled The First Fight of Ironclads, with a view to its purchase by Congress. The subject is the naval engagement between the Monitor and the Merrimac, in Hampton Roads, on the 9th of March, 1862. The purpose is not to recall an episode in the late war, but to portray an event which revolutionized naval architecture and warfare throughout the world. An effort has been made to attain historical accuracy by careful studies at the scene of action by the use of the original drawings of the constructors of both vessels and by interviews with many of the opposing participants in the engagement.

I have the honor to refer by permission to Admiral Worden, U. S. N., as to the merits of the picture in these respects, and it has met with the approbation of officers of the Merrimac.

I also inclose criticisms published in the Boston press in respect to its artistic qualities.

It would give me pleasure to have you visit the painting at 1425 New York avenue at such time as may be most convenient to the committee.

I am, respectfully, your obedient servant,

W. F. HALSALL.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts why it is that this picture can not be purchased under the general appropriation which we have made, if it is so meritorious. We appropriate annually a sum for the purchase of works of art. I suppose this comes under that description. If the painting is especially meritorious, I should think that the Committee on the Library would be entirely able to control the purchase without the intervention of a special appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. HOAR. It did not seem to me that this quite large appropriation of $7,500 should be made without the approbation of Congress; and it seems to me also that the general appropriation should be left, as it always has been, for such special calls as come up during the year; and very often it is not exhausted. For instance, this year, I may state, we had an opportunity to purchase for $1,200 an original painting of Henry Laurens, president of the Continental Congress, made in the Tower and while he was a prisoner, by Copley, the most eminent American portrait painter that ever lived. That picture was offered to Mr. Corcoran, who desired it very much for his gallery, but he said that the Government ought to own it, and I suppose nobody would doubt that. It is a portrait of marvelous value and beauty and excellence in every way. The general appropriation is for such calls as are frequently made, and the committee thought this special matter should come to the attention of Congress. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. HAWLEY. I have no doubt that engineer officers, architects, mathematicians of any kind are quite capable of certifying as to the true proportions and perhaps the perspective of the two ships. I do not like to trust my own judgment as to the artistic merit and value of this as a work of art, but a mere presentation that is architecturally correct is not sufficient. I have seen, as we all have, a great many pictures. I do not wish to express an opinion, and I do not know whether this is a valuable work of art or not. An architect has certified to that. Where are the artists and critics?

Mr. HOAR. I have a letter from the most eminent portrait painter in Boston, who certifies to the excellence of this work. The author, Mr. Halsall, is a well-established man in his profession, making four or five thousand dollars a year, and this is the work of four years. He had insured it at $15,000, but he desires the Government to have it.

I had also two or three personal applications from Mr. Daniel C. French, who is the author of the famous statue of the Concord Minuteman and the author of the famous statue of John Harvard at Harvard College, which I think are the two first statues in this country, unless we except the work of St. Gaudens and Ward. The work of Mr. French, in my judgment, is unsurpassed. He is a man of absolute truthfulness, of a rigorous, ideal taste in his conception of artistic excellence, thoroughly devoted to his profession, and would recommend nothing that was inferior or mean.

I think on the universal expression of delight of everybody who has visited the picture, including many Senators on both sides of the Chamber, we can act upon it when we have such testimonials from artists in addition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Some days ago I submitted an amendment, which was sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs and reported favorably. I desire to have it follow the amendment of the chairman of the committee on page 70.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the amendment already agreed to, at the end of line 1701, it is proposed to insert:

That the sum of $37,500 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purchase of a school farm and the repair of old and the erection of new buildings and outhouses for the indian industrial school at Carlisle, Pa., to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the amount?

Mr. TELLER. The total amount is $37,500.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order.

Mr. TELLER. You can not.

Mr. ALLISON. What do I understand in reference to the amendment?

Mr. TELLER. I will say to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that this was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs favorably, and it also has an estimate and the indorsement of the Interior Department, and the personal indorsement of the Secretary in a letter that I have here which he personally sent to the committee.

I should like to state, if the chairman will listen, that this is to buy a farm adjoining the school, which is very much needed, and to repair some buildings. It is thoroughly indorsed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and by the Secretary of the Interior, and is asked for by the superintendent of the school. It is a very meritorious thing, and it ought to be done. If that school is to be kept up it should be kept as it has been.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator how much land it is proposed to purchase?

Mr. TELLER. About 90 acres, as I recollect, and about $18,000 is for the land, which is much cheaper than it was offered at two years ago.

Mr. ALLISON. Two hundred dollars an acre?

Mr. DAWES. It will be worth that to anybody, and can be sold at any time for that.

Mr. CAMERON. I can say something about the value of land in that neighborhood. It is within 18 miles of where I reside. The amount asked is not a high price.

Mr. DAWES. The Government could not invest money any more safely than putting it in that land. If there is any opposition to the amendment, I wish to state that the relation of this school to the public Treasury is a very remarkable one. Captain Pratt, who has the management of it, has done such amazing work there that he ought to be commended to the consideration of Congress. He has obtained every dollar that has been put upon that plant by begging it around throughout the country from the charity of the people of the country; he has bought the land in that way. He has never had a dollar of appropriation from the Treasury of the United States to keep up and to enlarge the grounds of that institution. This is the first time that there has been an appropriation asked for by him. He has been from city to city and from town to town soliciting subscriptions for all that has been done there. We have appropriated $36,000 I think this very year to erect a new building at Lawrence, Kans.

Mr. TELLER. Fifty odd thousand dollars.

Mr. DAWES. Yes; $50,000. I think this is the most reasonable application that could be made, and it is as perfectly safe as anything can be.

Mr. CALL. I merely wish to say a single word in regard to Captain Pratt. I saw him first at Saint Augustine, Fla., in 1878 probably. He was then in charge of some of the wild Indians from the plains, who had committed murders and outrages there and had been transported to the fort at Saint Augustine for safe-keeping. Captain Pratt was there, I think, with a single sergeant and not more than one or two men at the most, and there were about sixty Indians. He devoted himself to them for some months, had them under the most perfect control, and had the old and the young engaged in learning their books and making considerable progress; in fact, they were to some extent civilized people. During the six or eight months that he occupied that fort with these Indians they were permitted to go out in the country and work for themselves, and there was never a single case of outrage or disorder among them.

He has devoted himself entirely for some years to solving the problem of the civilization and education of the Indian, with a very disinterested purpose and with the most signal success. These Indians were the most outrageous characters on the Western plains, and he had the most perfect command over them. I have no question that he is and will be a very great agent in the solution of the problem of Indian civilization.

I shall vote for this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I offer the following amendment from the Committee on Commerce, to be inserted after line 1621:

For salaries and traveling expenses of the Missouri River Commission, office expenses, and contingencies, $25,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.

Mr. VEST. The House of Representatives put an amendment upon the existing law which did away with the Missouri River Commission. The Senate put back the commission in the river and harbor bill, but there is no provision for the payment of the salaries of the civilian members of the commission or traveling or office expenses. This is simply an appropriation, which was inadvertently omitted in the river and harbor bill, and the Committee on Commerce suggest that it be put in this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Has the Senator from Missouri a copy of the river and harbor bill? My friend appears to have the documents.

Mr. VEST. I am a member of the Committee on Commerce and know there is no provision for it. This comes from that committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Their conduct is regulated in that bill.

Mr. VEST. Yes; but there is no provision for expenses.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer the following as an amendment, to come in on page 5, after line 108:

For court-house, custom-house, and post-office at Omaha, Nebr.: Paying for paving of streets adjacent to said building, $3,017.75

This item is in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. ALLISON. Has it been submitted to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes, sir; it is within the rule.

Mr. ALLISON. The only trouble about that class of appropriations—and I desire to say it once for all, because there are a number of them I believe—is the difficulty of ascertaining the amount. I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska how he knows that this sum has been expended, and if so, by whom.

Mr. MANDERSON. It has been expended by the city of Omaha, and the amount of the expenditure has been certified to the Treasury Department. The estimate comes from the city authorities. To my personal knowledge this paving has been done and should have been paid for years ago if the Government desired to do what it should.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to add to the amendment "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska accept the modification?

Mr. MANDERSON. Yes, sir; I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS. I offer an amendment, Mr. President, of which I gave notice the other day, a copy of which I send to the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 56, after line 1349, it is proposed to add:

For the expenditure upon Bedloe's Island, in New York, under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the purpose of restoring and accommodating to the occupation of that island by the monument and beacon of Liberty Enlightening the World the surface and the structures of the Government upon the said island, and for access to the said island, namely:

For building a permanent wharf of stone and concrete, $16,000.

For strengthening interior walls of the fort, $7,200.

For connecting arches between the walls of the fort and the foundation mass of the pedestal, $26,400.

Mr. EVARTS. The Committee on Foreign Relations, acting upon communications made by the State Department and the President, reported unanimously an amendment, which I ask may be read, and which was sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To defray the expenses incident to the landing, housing, protecting, and inaugurating upon Bedloe's Island of Bartholdi's statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, and to construct platforms, and other incidental expenses, and for incidental expenses of the ceremony of inauguration, and for certain improvements on the island estimated for by Charles P. Stone by estimate dated May 19, 1886, $106,100.

Mr. EVARTS. A similar report I think was considered in the other House. The Committee on Appropriations of this body have inserted a provision, which I will now read, immediately before what I ask my amendment to follow:

Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World: To defray the expenses incident to the landing, housing, protecting, and inaugurating upon Bedloe's Island of Bartholdi's statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, and for construction of platforms, repairs of wharf, clearing grounds of unsightly structures, and other incidental expenses, and for incidental expenses of the ceremony of inauguration, $56,500.

That is ample for the purposes asked, and meets and satisfies so far and for those objects the recommendation of the State Department and the recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Relations; but this which I now offer is not connected with any immediate necessity for the inauguration, but is included within what is manifestly a proper duty and necessity not to the immediate event but to the Government's own care of its own island.

It will be remembered that by a resolution adopted by both Houses of Congress, and I believe with entire unanimity, in 1877 this Government accepted the proposed gift of the statue provided that a site should be determined for it to which it should be surrendered, that it should be accepted in the sentiment of friendship and of generosity, and that upon a pedestal which should be furnished by the voluntary contribution of means by the citizens this statue when thus placed should be preserved and kept up as a beacon.

The island selected was Bedloe's Island, and was turned over to the committee for the purpose of the structure after the proper examination by the Treasury Department, including the work on the part of the committee, whose funds have been raised and whose funds have been employed, and whose function has been completed. It only becomes necessary for this committee under either head that has been provided for, or is now asked to be provided for, to put the Government in proper relation to the condition of things and the situation of proper inauguration and provision for the island.

In this $106,000 that was recommended by the President and the Secretary of State and by the Committee on Foreign Relations, I have neither added to nor varied in the least either of the items to which the amendment relates. The committee found perhaps that in making their present provision for what the honor and dignity of this Government required in the principal matter of the reception and provision for the inauguration of the statue it was sufficient; but I submit that this subject which is thus described is within the immediate and necessary duty of this Government at any time when it is sufficiently advised that the work remains to be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York is reminded by the Chair that we are under the five-minute rule.

Mr. EVARTS. I will with permission continue a few moments if no objection is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. EVARTS. This island in its little area of 11 acres by its devotion to this structure is necessarily set apart for this purpose; and all that is asked here is that the United States should now accommodate the structures of the old works of the Government on the island in order to comport with the present devotion of this island to this great work of art and this great work of celebration of unity of feeling between these two great nations.

Thus we ask for building a permanent wharf of stone and concrete $16,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, rather than that there should be an expenditure merely for temporary repairs. Then for a structure "for strengthening interior walls of the fort, $7,200;" "for connecting arches," a large structure, "between the walls of the fort and the foundation mass of the pedestal, $26,400," being the precise items that are contained in the recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the executive government.

The point is that for this inauguration this island should be certainly put in the condition which soon and necessarily it must be put by the Government for the fitness of things and the demands of public opinion and by visitors who shall resort to the island.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations gave every dollar that was estimated for and deemed necessary for the purposes of the inauguration of this statue. The amendment now proposed by the Senator from New York is really an amendment which involves the idea of ornamentation and beautification, and the committee did not believe it judicious, and I hope the Senate will not agree at this time to enter upon that expenditure. It can be made at any time in the future when this statue shall have been inaugurated. But I trust the Senator from New York will not urge this amendment. I feel constrained to test the sense of the Senate by moving to lay it on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion to lay on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I propose the following amendment at the end of line 108, page 5:

There is hereby appropriated $500 to repair walks and fountain in United States grounds surrounding post-office building in Lincoln, Nebr.

I will say that that item is approved by the Treasury Department, and has been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and by them reported favorably.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not estimated for, and I do not think we had better enter upon this system.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator raise the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the amendment been sent to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MAHONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And was it reported from a standing committee?

Mr. VAN WYCK. It was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is in order, then.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that it lie on the table then.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President——

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion to lay on the table for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. GIBSON. I offer an amendment similar in character to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] about the Missouri River Commission. This is for the Mississippi River Commission. I ask that it be inserted on page 67, just after the amendment adopted on the motion of the Senator from Missouri. This is reported from the Committee on Commerce, and I think is acceptable to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 67, after the amendment adopted on motion of Mr. VEST, it is proposed to insert:

For salaries and traveling expenses of the Mississippi River Commission, and for salaries and traveling expenses of assistant engineers under them, and for office expenses and contingencies, $100,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. I offer an amendment to come in after the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] which was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 5, line 108, and after the amendment already agreed to, it is proposed to insert:

For custom-house at Indianapolis, Ind.: Paving streets adjacent to said property, $350.52.

Mr. HARRISON. This is estimated for and is of precisely the same character as the amendment adopted on the motion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. ALLISON. There is a question as to whether the Government of the United States should pay for paving streets under the direction of the officers of a city or town. I believe there are a great many instances where the Government has paid for sidewalks, but the question of paving streets is an open question.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know who should pay except the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise no point on it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COKE. I wish to make a verbal amendment to an amendment already agreed to. In line 51, page 3, after the word "custom-house," I move to insert "court-house;" so as to read:

For custom-house, court-house, and post-office at El Paso, Tex., &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. On page 81, I move to insert, after line 1964, the following:

To enable the Secretary of War to lay a submarine cable from Cape Charles to Cape Henry, $20,000.

I want to say in reference to the amendment that it was introduced here and sent to the Committee on Military Affairs, and by that committee reported back favorably and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Sustaining this proposition is a letter from the Superintendent of the Signal Service, transmitted by the War Department, urging the laying of this cable as very essential for the purposes of the Signal and Life-Saving Services. Now between the coast south of Cape Charles and north there are no connections; and in order to get in communication dispatches have to travel over a thousand miles to come up this bay and go around to Wilmington.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am authorized by the Committee on the Library to offer the following amendment; it has been reported by the committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations; I ask that it come in on page 102, at the end of line 2495.

For the purchase of the painting entitled "Farming in Dakota," by Carl Gutherz, $3,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose the point of order will not lie against that, but it seems to me, inasmuch as we have provided already in the bill for $10,000 for the purchase of works of art, and now $7,500 for the great painting that the Senator from Massachusetts spoke of, this might wait until next session for this additional purchase.

Mr. VOORHEES. I think the Senator from Iowa will concur with me that we ought not to wait. This is a painting of a great scene in the agricultural history of this country. We have appropriated money, and none too much, for paintings illustrative of the art of war and destruction and things of that kind. This is the only painting, I believe, we have ever had an opportunity to procure representing the cultivation of the soil, the breaking of the great prairies, rendering the bosom of the earth fruitful and productive, and I am satisfied that it is $3,000 better spent than most of the money that is in this bill. I must insist on my amendment. I do not understand that there is any point of order against it. It is agreed on by the Committee on the Library, reported here by their authority, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I believe that takes in all the conditions of the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I propose two amendments, to come in after line 119, page 6, as follows:

For the post-office, custom-house, internal-revenue office, and court-house at New Haven, Conn.: To pay an assessment for the connection with the city sewer, $210.

For the post-office, custom-house, internal-revenue office, and court-house at Hartford, Conn.: Paving street between said post-office and the city hall, $892.46.

Both items may be acted on together. They are both in the Book of Estimates, on page 156.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. On page 56, at the end of line 1349, relating to the statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, I move the following amendment:

Provided, however, That no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be used to procure or pay for spirituous or intoxicating liquors or tobacco or stimulants or narcotics in any form; nor shall any charge or expenditure for the same be paid by the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. What is that about?

Mr. BLAIR. I propose this proviso to the appropriation for the ceremonies at the dedication of the statue of Liberty Enlightening the World.

Mr. ALLISON. I assure the Senator there is not the slightest possibility or probability of any such thing being done; and the items of the appropriation do not include anything of the kind indicated in the Senator's amendment. I hope he will not press it.

Mr. BLAIR. I assure the Senator that if I did not think it was necessary, I would not offer it.

Mr. ALLISON. I assure him that it is totally unnecessary. There is nothing in this appropriation except a small sum to entertain our foreign guests who may come here from France.

Mr. BLAIR. That is precisely what I have reference to.

Mr. GORMAN. I raise the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I have the floor, I believe.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise a point of order, if it is possible for me to do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must hold that the Senate have the power to limit their appropriations to any purpose. A motion to lay on the table would be in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I make that motion.

Mr. BLAIR. That motion can not be made while I am on the floor I submit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire has a right to the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Iowa gives the Senate the assurance that no part of this appropriation will be made use of in such a way as I think it may be unless restricted by the amendment which I propose.

I desired that this amendment might be adopted without any remark; in fact I anticipated no opposition; but as a direct contradiction to the Senator's assumption that there is no danger that any portion of this may be expended in the way I speak of, I send to the desk and ask to have read a bill which was contracted and was paid for by this Government at the recent celebration at Yorktown for the direct purpose of entertaining our foreign guests.

It may be thought that this is a trifling matter, an unseemly matter possibly, but I do not believe that the American people will justify us in so making appropriations that any part of the public money can be expended in a manner to produce a public disgrace.

I ask for the reading of the bill I have sent up, a bill actually paid as a part of the ceremonies of the centennial celebration at Yorktown.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate is perfectly familiar with all the details, and I trust the Senator will not have that read.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not care to have the bill read if the Senator objects.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to it, but I think it is unnecessary.

Mr. BLAIR. Is there objection to the amendment then? All I want is to restrict the payment for stimulants and narcotics. There are ways in which they can be supplied on great occasions of that kind, if it be necessary that such expenditure should be made. It is not necessary to pay seven or eight thousand dollars, as was the case then, out of the public Treasury for the nations of the earth to get drunk on. I object to it, and ask that the amendment be acted on.

Mr. GORMAN. I move that the amendment lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland that the amendment lie on the table.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask that the amendment be read in connection with the clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. BLAIR and the clause as it would stand if amended.

Mr. BECK. That proviso is too ridiculous for the Senate. I move to lay it on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair can receive but one motion to lay on the table. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] has already moved to lay this amendment on the table.

Mr. BECK. That is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on that motion.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE (after having voted in the affirmative). I ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether he thinks I ought to vote on this question, as I am paired with his colleague [Mr. PIKE]?

Mr. BLAIR. If it is a party question it would be understood that the pair should stand. I leave it entirely to the Senator's own judgment.

Mr. GEORGE. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from New Hampshire regard this as a party question?

Mr. BLAIR. No, I did not say that; but if the Senator from Mississippi regards it so——

Mr. GEORGE. I do not; but I asked if you did.

Mr. BLAIR. I notice that one party votes one way and the other the other.

Mr. GEORGE. I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 27, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—27.

Beck,	Cockrell,	Hampton,	Stanford,
Berry,	Coke,	Harris,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vest,
Brown,	George,	Kenna,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Gibson,	Payne,	Walthall,
Call,	Gorman,	Pugh,	Whithorne.
Camden,	Gray,	Sherman,

NAYS—28.

Aldrich,	Edmunds,	Jones of Nevada,	Platt,
Allison,	Frye,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Hale,	Mahone,	Sewell,
Cameron,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Conger,	Hawley,	Maxey,	Teller,
Dawes,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Van Wyck,
Dolph,	Ingalls,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—21.

Bowen,	Hearst,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Chace,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,	Sawyer,
Colquitt,	Logan,	Pike,	Wilson of Md.
Cullom,	McPherson,	Plumb,
Eustis,	Miller,	Ransom,
Fair,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,

So the motion to lay the amendment on the table was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for the reading of the document I sent up. ["No!" "No!"]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I offer an amendment after line 59, on page 3, to insert:

To pay the city of Jersey City, in the State of New Jersey, for paving streets adjacent to Government property, to wit, the post-office, &c., $244.

This is estimated for.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENNA. I move to amend the bill on page 21, line 495, by adding, after the word "Oregon" in that line:

Great Kanawha River, West Virginia.

I desire to say in support of this amendment only, that the Department has recommended lighting this river. The length of the river in which danger results from the want of lights is very short. I do not desire to increase the total amount appropriated by the clause in the bill, because the lights on that part of the river will require only a few hundred dollars. Great losses have occurred annually on that river for the want of these lights, for the lack of the expenditure of a very small sum of money to provide these lights, while at the same time the Government is spending a large amount of money to improve the river.

I hope the suggestion will have no opposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I offer the following amendment, to come in immediately after the amendments of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], after line 119:

To pay assessment for replacing sidewalk for marine hospital, Detroit, Mich. $530.62.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I offer the following amendment, to follow the one just adopted:

For paving streets adjacent to the public buildings at Grand Rapids, Mich., $1,824.33.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to amend in the clause "for lighting rivers," on page 21, line 496, after the word "Missouri," by inserting the word "Tennessee;" so as to read:

At the mouth of the Red River, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, Tennessee, and Ohio River.

Mr. ALLISON. Where is that amendment to be inserted?

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 21, line 496.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that. It is not estimated for.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not make the point of order. It is not estimated for as far as I know; but there are over 700 miles of navigable water on the Tennessee, in the midst of which at Muscle Shoals is an obstruction dangerous to navigation, and the necessity is certainly quite as great for lighting it as for lighting any one of the rivers that the Senator and his committee have provided for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no estimate, and the point of order is well taken.

Mr HARRIS. I am sorry the point of order is insisted on.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the following amendment after line 115, on page 6:

For custom-house at Saint Louis: For reconstructing and paving Eighth and Ninth streets, adjacent to the Saint Louis custom-house, $4,053.26.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Missouri if that is estimated for?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes, sir; and the pavements on the other streets have already been made under the laws, and the appropriation on them is in the deficiency bill. These two streets are there unpaved. The estimate has been made, and it is a very low estimate for only one-half the cost.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 6, after the amendments of a similar character which have been just adopted:

For macadamizing one-half of two streets adjacent to property owned by the United States, at Portland, Oreg., upon which the Government building is situated, $1,500.

This is estimated for and the assessment has been made. In the city of Portland the cost of improving streets is assessed on the adjacent property, and there is no other provision by which the streets can be repaired or improved.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I offer the following amendment, to come in after the amendment just adopted on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH]:

For paving streets in front and rear of the custom-house in Atlanta, Ga., $1,323.

I will state that there is an estimate——

Mr. ALLISON. The estimate for this is:

Atlanta, Ga.: Court-house and post-office—paving alley in rear, $900.

Mr. BROWN. I had just commenced to make a statement when the Senator popped up.

Mr. ALLISON. I will make the point of order if I can on the amendment if the Senator does not offer it as estimated for.

Mr. BROWN. The $900 for the paving on one side of the house, the larger part of it is estimated for. The paving on the other side has been done since and has not been estimated for, though it has been recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I offered the amendment and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations. So I think, with all due respect, I come within the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Did the Senator report it from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BROWN. Yes; it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks it is order.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I offer the following amendment, to be inserted after line 2335:

To defray the expenses of making a Departmental exhibit at the Minneapolis exposition, to be held at Minneapolis, Minn., during the months of August and September, 1886, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $15,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that. It is not estimated for and not reported from any standing committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is made.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There is no estimate for this, but I suppose it is of the same character as the appropriations which have been made heretofore for expositions in other cities. I am not aware that points of order lie as to amendments of this character.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was this amendment reported by a standing committee and referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Was it reported by a standing committee?

Mr. MCMILLAN. A bill is pending in Congress to authorize the Government to contribute to this exposition by sending articles for exhibition at Minneapolis. I hope the Senator from Iowa will not interpose an objection here if it will lie. Appropriations have been made for contributions of this kind by the Government to the expositions at Louisville and at Cincinnati and other cities. I desire to have read a couple of paragraphs which will inform the Senate as to the character of this exposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order being made——

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask that the point of order be withdrawn.

Mr. ALLISON. We all know that this is a very great exposition. I regret exceedingly to be compelled to make the point of order, but we can not afford to appropriate for these exhibitions. If the Committee on Appropriations assented to this there would be at least four more applications of a similar character.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point being made, the Chair thinks it is well taken.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I offer the following amendment, which has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations and also estimated for in the Book of Estimates: On page 6, after line 125, I move to insert:

For paying for paving one-half of alley adjacent to Government property at Des Moines, Iowa, $514.42.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. After line 1442 I move to insert the following paragraph:

For the purchase of the Edison electric-light plant, including dynamo base and frame, engine, belting, steam pipes and fittings, wiring, lamps, sockets, chandeliers, drop-lights, shades, and all other appurtenances now and for some eleven months on trial in the Senate wing of the Capitol, including the cost of engineer for eleven months, $4,350.

Mr. BECK. Is there any estimate for that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is reported from a committee, it is understood?

Mr. MAHONE. Yes, sir; and recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HALE. It has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MAHONE. It was referred to the Committee on Appropriations. It is duly in order. It was reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Every Senator knows that the latter part of the last session we had an electric light introduced in our cloak-rooms here, and it is now in the Marble Room and in several of the corridors and other places. It was introduced here by permission and put on trial. The proprietors now come forward and ask that we shall take what there is of the plant, not yet fully complete for the whole Senate wing, at a fair cost as to all the fixtures.

I should observe that according to the estimate of the Architect the cost of gas for lighting the Capitol and the Capitol grounds when we had no electric light was $26,900 when there was a session of Congress for three months; and now when we have had so much of this electric light the cost is $25,000 for a session of over eight months.

I should also add that we have this light in the Government Printing Office building, and it gives the utmost satisfaction both as to cost and to comfort. It appears that while the electric light costs $2.84 per day, gas costs $7.20 per day. We have plenty of evidence that it is very much cheaper than gas; and that is more pleasant and agreeable in every relation I think no Senator here will doubt. I have in my hand a telegram just handed to me by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] from Boston addressed to him:

The cost of lighting the post-office and the subtreasury in Boston with gas for the year 1884 was $16,775.52. The cost for the year 1885, with electricity and some gas, was $8,539.95.

So it seems to me that we might as well undertake the matter of lighting the Senate wing by electricity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANSOM. After line 216, I move to insert:

For re-establishing the light at Harbor Island Bar, between Pamlico and Core Sounds, North Carolina, $20,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. RANSOM. I will state to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that it is estimated for. Here is the estimate——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a report from a standing or select committee?

Mr. ALLISON. It is estimated for, but it not reported from any committee.

Mr. RANSOM. It does not have to be reported from a committee when it is estimated for.

Mr. HARRIS. If estimated for it is within the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will look at the rule.

Mr. RANSOM. It is estimated for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has it been referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. RANSOM. Yes; it has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. There can be no question about its being in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it is in order if it has been duly referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I submit to the Senator from North Carolina that he ought not to ask the Senate, with all the lights and light-houses and light-ships and appropriations in the bill, to make a still further appropriation for this light-house.

It is true, probably, that it is in the Book of Estimates; but there are a vast number of light-houses estimated for which are not in the bill.

The Committee on Appropriations sent to the Light-House Board with a view of ascertaining what particular number of light-houses of this class estimated for were absolutely necessary, what were desirable, &c., and the light suggested by the Senator from North Carolina is not put among the lights which are absolutely necessary.

The bill has been loaded down, I submit, with a great many small amendments relating to court-houses and post-offices, &c., and if we are to add to all these every light-house estimated for, I submit that the bill will be swamped. I do not think the Senator from North Carolina ought to press the amendment at this time.

Mr. RANSOM. Of course I admire the earnestness of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations; I am glad to see it; but——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina is not strictly in order. The rule forbids a Senator from speaking twice on the same question.

Mr. RANSOM. I have not spoken at all, except to say a word on the point of order. I beg leave to say that I have been to the Light-House Board, too; and here is what the Light-House Board says about this:

It appearing from the papers before the committee—

That is, the light-house committee—that many small vessels running for Core Sound and the adjacent waters have been wrecked because there was no light at Harbor Island, that the trade in that section is growing and important, and that without this light no vessel can enter Core Sound from the northward at night, nor make a safe anchorage in bad weather after dark, and that a light on Harbor Island would be of great assistance in running Wainright Slue, the committee is of the opinion that the light should be established, and recommendation is made accordingly.

Very respectfully,

W. P. MCCANN,
Captain U. S. N., Chairman of the Committee on Location.

Further, I find in the annual report of the Light-House Board:

Harbor Island, on Harbor Island Bar, between Pamlico and Core Sounds, North Carolina.—The old light-house at this station is in such a dilapidated and insecure condition that its relighting, as contemplated, has been found to be impracticable. The necessity for the light is, however, so great that the board asks for an appropriation of $20,000 for its re-establishment.

Then in the Book of Estimates is this:

Harbor Island light-station, namely: For re-establishing the light at Harbor Island Bar, between Pamlico and Core Sound, North Carolina, $20,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COLQUITT (after having voted in the affirmative). I withdraw my vote, as I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Blackburn,	Gorman,	Miller,	Vance,
Brown,	Gray,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Van Wyck,
Butler,	Hampton,	Payne,	Vest,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Conger,	Kenna,	Ransom,	Whitthorne,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.
George,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Gibson,	Manderson,	Teller,

NAYS—17.

Allison,	Frye,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Berry,	Hale,	Jones of Nevada,	Spooner.
Call,	Harris,	Palmer,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Platt,
Dawes,	Hawley,	Plumb,

ABSENT—29.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Logan,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Edmunds,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Blair,	Eustis,	Maxey,	Stanford,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Voorhees,
Camden,	Fair,	Morgan,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cameron,	Hearst,	Morrill,
Chace,	Hoar,	Pike,
Colquitt,	Jones of Florida,	Sabin,

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. After line 1701 I move to insert:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to Len-ne-pi-ze-qua, alias Nancy Lafontain, an Indian woman residing in Miami County, State of Indiana, and of the band of Indians known as the Miamies of Indiana, the sum of $695.77, with interest thereon at 5 per cent. per annum for one year, equal to one per capita share paid to the said Miamies of Indiana by authority of the act of Congress of March 3, 1881, which appropriated the sum necessary to make the final payment to said Indians and directed the payment thereof, the sum herein directed to be paid to said Len-ne-pi-ze-qua being her per capita share in said payment; and the sum necessary to pay the same is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. HARRISON. In the Forty-sixth Congress in a deficiency bill there was an appropriation to pay the Miami Indians the balance due them under treaty stipulations. That act referred to a certain list which had been made up. When the payment came to be made this woman was held by the Secretary of the Interior not to be sufficiently described on the list. The mistake evidently grew out of the attempt to convert Indian names into English names. She had been recognized as a Miami Indian, she had received her annuity for years as a Miami Indian, but was left out at the final payment by reason of that discrepancy in the name.

Members of the tribe living in that county have petitioned that she might have her share, and they did so at the time. There was no question raised among the Indians as to her right. It is a small amount. She was the only one omitted, and I think it fair she should have this small sum.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. No point of order will lie against it. It was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. It is a claim.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As it arises under a treaty stipulation the Chair thinks it does not fall within the provision of the rule relating to a private claim.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. After line 202 I move to insert:

That the amount heretofore fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of a public building by the United States Government at Minneapolis, Minn., be, and the same is hereby, increased to $650,000, and that sum is hereby fixed as the limit of cost for the erection of said building.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order being made, it falls within the rule adopted last night by a large majority on an amendment of almost precisely the same character.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The amendment has been referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate decided last night by a large majority that where an amendment changed the existing law in respect to the limit it was not in order. The Chair is bound by that decision of the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am sorry.

Mr. TELLER. After the word "dollars," in line 1108, I move to insert:

No charge or deduction shall be made for transportation to the Treasury or coinage mints against, or collected from, any person who deposits bullion in any mint or assay office to be coined or sold under the provisions of sections 3549, 3544, and 3545 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that.

Mr. TELLER. What is the point of order?

Mr. ALLISON. It changes the existing law to begin with, and is general legislation, because if it does not change existing law it is not needed.

Mr. TELLER. It does not change existing law. It changes a rule of the Department.

Mr. ALLISON. It is not reported from any committee.

Mr. TELLER. No, it is not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it falls within the inhibition of general legislation.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say one word about the amendment if the chairman will allow me before he insists upon the point of order.

At the several assay offices or mints, as they are called, where the Government buys gold, it is in the habit of deducting from two to three and a half dollars a thousand for transportation. From January, 1883, to July, 1885, that charge was not made. Mr. Folger, the Secretary of the Treasury, held that it was contrary to law. Since July, 1885, it has been charged. It seems to me that it is a very improper charge.

Most people take their gold to the mint and sell it under the statute. I do not believe this charge for transportation can be supported under the statute, and I think there ought to be a provision put in the bill to prevent that. Of course, if the Chair holds it to be out of order I suppose that is the end of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that this is legislation intended to change the law.

Mr. SEWELL. After line 1349 I move to insert:

To enable the Department of State to pay Benjamin F. Stevens for a series of transcripts of original unpublished documents in the archives of Great Britain, France, and Holland relating to the peace negotiations of 1783, $7,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

I will say that this is reported from the Committee on the Library, after a thorough investigation of the matter at the request of the Secretary of State, and on an examination of the papers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DOLPH. After line 1211 I move to insert:

For the establishment of a salmon hatchery upon the Columbia River, its tributaries or their branches, and for the current expenses of the same for one year, $15,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that a point of order will lie upon this amendment. I believe it is reported from the Committee on Fisheries. It is not estimated for, and I hope it will not be agreed to. If I have the right to raise a point of order I will do so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Has the amendment been reported from a committee?

Mr. DOLPH. It was reported favorably from the Committee on Fisheries and sent to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose it is in order.

Mr. DOLPH. It is not only in order, but it is a very important amendment.

I see by looking at the bill as reported from the committee that the sum of $259,540 is proposed to be appropriated in connection with this subject for the Bureau of Fish and Fisheries under the charge of the Fish Commission. In the bill at the place where I propose this amendment to be inserted there is also an amendment reported by the committee making an appropriation of $10,000 for a fish-hatchery on Lake Superior.

I do not believe that there is a point in the United States where this amount of money can be expended with as much benefit as upon the Columbia River. It is well known that the Columbia River is the second river in extent, and the second great river upon the continent.

My colleague in discussing the river and harbor bill the other day referred to the growth of the salmon fisheries upon the Lower Columbia. He showed that in the year 1866 the product was 4,000 cases, which at their then cash price of $16 a case made a total value of $64,000, and that it had increased in 1883 to 630,000 cases, of the value of $5 per case, making a total value for that year of the catch of $3,150,000. That was salmon which was put up in cans and cases alone caught in the Lower Columbia River, not saying anything about the pickled salmon and the fish which were used in a fresh state.

I received a letter recently from the president of the Chamber of Commerce of Astoria, in which he informed me that there was a great falling off in the last year's catch and a greater decrease in the number of salmon which have been taken the present year. He says the prospect is, unless there is something done to replenish the supply of salmon in the river, this great industry, bringing $3,000,000 into the country, will be destroyed.

A few years ago the fishermen having canneries upon the river formed an association and voluntarily contributed money to construct a hatchery upon the Clackamas River, a branch of the Willamette River. That was maintained for a year or two, but they were unfortunate; their dam was washed away by a flood. The hatchery being sustained by voluntary contributions, they were unable to obtain the necessary money to keep it up.

The Columbia River forms the boundary between Washington Territory and Oregon, and it is difficult to get legislation which shall protect the fisheries and carry out any plan to replenish the supply of fish from the fact that it requires the joint action of the Legislative Assembly both of the Territory and the State.

While we are appropriating so large an amount of money for fish and fisheries as we appropriate by this bill, it seems to me that what is asked here, $15,000, to construct a salmon hatchery upon the Columbia River is very little. I am satisfied that there is no other industry that is so great as this demanding so little which would not receive attention from Congress. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. It may be that this is an important work on the Pacific coast. I do not know but that it is. Of course the Committee on Appropriations had not time to go into the whole investigation of the fishery question. But I wish to submit to the Senate that this is a new work. It is a new question not submitted by the Fish Commission, not submitted in the Book of Estimates, and if it is in order or if it is proper to pass this amendment it seems to be that the natural sequence will be that every public building which has been suggested at this session not now provided for by law is proper to be put upon the bill. I submit to the Senator from Oregon that it is not a wise thing to now embark upon this question of fish-hatching on the Pacific coast.

Mr. DOLPH. If the Senator will allow me a moment I will state that the Government has for some years been maintaining a salmon hatchery upon McCloud River, a tributary of the Sacramento, and in this very bill the committee proposes to enter upon a new work by the establishment of a fish-hatchery at Duluth.

Mr. ALLISON. If they can hatch salmon upon the McCloud River and upon the Sacramento, why should we make a special appropriation for this purpose?

Mr. DOLPH. The Senator well knows, I suppose, that the fish which are hatched in the McCloud and Sacramento Rivers go back there. They do not go to the Columbia River. The salmon, like any other fish, will go back to the river where they are hatched.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that fish hatched in the Sacramento will not very likely get into the Columbia. I have supposed all the time that the Columbia River was rather the home of the salmon, but now it seems it is necessary that we should establish there a fish-hatchery.

I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. BECK. I wish to say a word.

Mr. ALLISON. I withdraw the motion if my colleague on the committee will renew it.

Mr. BECK. One reason why I thought the amendment ought to be left out of the bill was this: The Sacramento hatchery has been abandoned, as I understand, and simply because it was for the use of a few canning establishments and we were planting fish for them to catch. The only complaint now on the Columbia River is that the canning establishments are not making as much money as they used to make, that the fish are getting scarcer, and we are asked to establish a fish-hatchery to raise fish for them to catch again.

It is not for a public use, but it is in the interest of a few corporations who have canning establishments there, and it is proposed that we shall assist them.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PALMER. If the Senator from Iowa will withdraw his motion for a moment, I would like to say a word on this question.

Mr. ALLISON. I will withdraw it for a moment.

Mr. PALMER. I will merely say that this amendment was reported favorably by the Committee on Fisheries, and that I had an interview with Professor Baird, who said that he thought it was advisable to establish a fish-hatchery on the Columbia River. He stated that the diminution of salmon there was already appreciable, and that in ten years it would take double the men and expenditure and effort to catch the amount that they are catching at the present time.

Mr. BECK. They catch them for private establishments.

Mr. PALMER. We thought it was advisable to establish a fish-hatchery there.

Mr. ALLISON. I renew my motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). I desire to announce that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but I am informed that he would vote "yea" on this question. I shall therefore vote. I vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 28, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—28.

Aldrich,	Camden,	Hale,	Saulsbury,
Allison,	Coke,	Harris,	Sherman,
Beck,	Dawes,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Walthall,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	Maxey,	Whitthorne,
Brown,	Gorman,	Plumb,	Wilson of Iowa,
Call,	Gray,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—24.

Blair,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Riddleberger,
Butler,	Hawley,	Miller,	Sawyer,
Conger,	Hearst,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Spooner,
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Palmer,	Teller,
Evarts,	McMillan,	Payne,	Van Wyck,
Hampton,	Mahone,	Ransom,	Vest.

ABSENT—24.

Bowen,	Eustis,	Jones of Florida,	Pike,
Cameron,	Fair,	Logan,	Platt,
Chace,	Frye,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Cockrell,	George,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sewell,
Colquitt,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Cullom,	Ingalls,	Morrill,	Voorhees.

So the amendment was laid on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire now to move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to offer an amendment before the recess, so as to have it pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to take a recess has a prior right.

Mr. ALLISON. I will yield to the Senator from Michigan of course.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from Iowa yields until I can offer an amendment. After line 2016, I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That this restriction shall not apply to the pay or commutation or expense of return from their stations to their homes of any enlisted men in excess of the four hundred and seventy men accruing prior to the passage of this act.

I suppose there will be no objection to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I will look into it after the recess.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I now move that the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. BECK. I know that. I move that the Senate adjourn. If we have a night session to-night no quorum will be here, and there are important questions to be decided by the Senate on the bill.

Mr. HALE. We can get through with the deficiency bill too if we come here. It will make two days' difference in the adjournment if we have a session to-night.

Mr. BECK. I do not believe it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it. The noes have it.

Mr. BECK. I insist upon a vote by yeas and nays, so that we shall see to-night who comes and who does not come.

Mr. ALLISON. One moment. I appeal to the Senator from Kentucky not to insist on his motion. If it were the desire of the Senate to go on for an hour or two and complete this bill I would not ask for a recess; but it is very important (and no one knows better than the Senator from Kentucky that it is important) that this bill should be completed to-night so far as the Senate is concerned.

Mr. KENNA. Let us go on and finish it now.

Mr. BECK. I have no objection to going on for an hour or two, but I have objection to a recess, as we shall be here to-night with barely a quorum, when a great many important questions are reserved which will have to be voted upon.

Mr. HALE. We have had a large attendance here at the evening sessions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The Senator from Kentucky demands the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. BECK. It is evident that a large majority is opposed to adjourning, and I do not want to take time by calling the yeas and nays. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The demand for the yeas and nays is withdrawn and the motion to adjourn is lost. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Iowa to take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate resumed its session at 8 o'clock p. m.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the sundry civil appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is any amendment pending?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No amendment is pending.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then let the bill be reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to reserve the amendments of which I gave notice in regard to the Denver public building.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the amendments will be concurred in unless there are some special amendments that Senators desire to reserve for a separate vote.

Mr. BECK. I am willing that all the amendments that are in the bill from the Committee on Appropriations may be concurred in.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I mean.

Mr. BECK. But the amendments that were offered by Senators on the floor came in so fast that I did not know even what they were. I should like to have some of them read so as to see what they are. It may be that they had better all go in.

Mr. ALLISON. I think they had better all go in. I watched them as closely as I could, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. BECK. Very well. I desire a separate vote on the amendments from line 435 to line 454.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the bill been reported to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. I hardly think——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is still open to amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. That I understand. I wish to say merely that there are more Senators than one who desired to offer amendments as in Committee of the Whole. I desired to offer one myself. I can offer it of course in the Senate, and I shall raise no question about the reporting of the bill to the Senate.

Mr. BECK. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] requested me to ask to have reserved the amendment in line 1465 in regard to protecting public lands.

Mr. HARRIS. I had that marked to request a separate vote upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments which have been reserved will be read, so that there may be no misunderstanding.

The SECRETARY. The first reserved amendment is that striking out lines 46, 47, and 48, which is in the following words:

For court-house and post-office at Denver, Colo.: For completion of building under present limit, $97,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are there further amendments to be reserved?

Mr. BECK. On page 19 I ask that the amendments be reserved from line 435 to line 454, inclusive.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, as the phrase is, about the Denver amendment. I wish to know where we stand about the Denver post-office and court-house building. I believe that the Committee of the Whole agreed to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out the clause.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations striking out the clause was agreed to by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not know but that it was the other way.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Colorado has reserved the amendment for a separate vote, and the Senator from Kentucky has reserved the amendments on page 19.

Mr. BECK. That is right; all from line 434 to 454.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What other amendments are reserved?

Mr. HARRIS. In line 1467 I reserve for a separate vote the amendment reducing the appropriation for the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation from $90,000 to $60,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Does the Senator also reserve for a separate vote the amendment from line 1462 to 1464 reducing the appropriation for discovering depredations on public timber?

Mr. HARRIS. No, that amendment was disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What was the amendment reserved by the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. BECK. From line 435 to line 454, all the amendments on page 19 relating to the silver question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no other amendments to be reserved, the question, if there be no objection, will be taken upon concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HARRIS. Had there not better be a call of the Senate?

Mr. ALLISON. I think not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us get on with the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I shall not ask for a call, but a number of Senators are absent who wished to reserve amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. They ought to be here.

Mr. HARRIS. They ought, I grant.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is a good quorum here.

Mr. HARRIS. Very good.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole which have not been reserved.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to reserve an amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has an opportunity now to do so. The Chair has not announced concurrence.

Mr. GEORGE. I refer to the amendment to appropriate $5,000 for the completion of the court-house at Oxford, Miss.

Mr. HARRIS. That is an amendment which you can offer in the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, yes; that is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be open to amendment. The question is on concurring in the amendments not reserved.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On page 3 is the first reserved amendment, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out lines 46, 47, and 48, in the following words:

For court-house and post-office at Denver, Colo.: For completion of building under present limit, $97,000.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that that be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment will be passed over.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to offer an amendment and to ask unanimous consent for its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the consideration of the amendments reserved, the Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to offer at this stage of the bill an amendment. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. At the end of line 180 I move to add:

For the completion of the public building at Montpelier, Vt., in addition to the sum appropriated by the act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Montpelier, Vt.," approved March 3, 1835, $50,000.

Mr. President, it will be observed by the Senate that I offer this amendment for the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] and not for myself. I some time ago gave notice of an amendment increasing the appropriation for a public building at La Crosse, in my own State, which I was exceedingly anxious should be adopted, but I can not challenge the wisdom of the Senate in the construction of the rule which was agreed to last evening precluding these "public-building" amendments. I hope, notwithstanding that action, however, that no Senator will object to the incorporation of this amendment in the bill. I ask unanimous consent that it be done.

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] was authorized by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to report this amendment favorably to the Senate. He was stricken down by a serious illness, as Senators know, and requested me to report it for him. Later, before he left the city, he asked me to "test the sense of the Senate" upon it; and I trust the sense of the Senate will be in its favor.

There was appropriated last year the sum of $75,000 for the construction of a public building at Montpelier. Fifteen thousand dollars of this have been expended in the purchase of a site, which leaves but $60,000 for the construction and finish of the building, an amount absolutely inadequate for the purpose. Montpelier is, I think, the only State capital in the Union in which the Federal flag does not float above a Federal building. This should not any longer be true of Montpelier. The Senator from Vermont was anxious about this, and it has seemed to me that it would be a graceful and handsome compliment to that Senator, who for the first time in twenty years of service here is absent from the Senate during its session, and who may justly be called the father of the Senate, if in his enforced absence this amendment is by common consent placed upon the bill; and I sincerely hope it may be done.

Mr. BECK. I do not want to violate the rule, but if the Chair will ask unanimous consent to have the amendment put in I hope it will be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope that unanimous consent will be asked and given.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to insert the amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is accordingly inserted.

Mr. BLAIR. I am aware that no such considerations can be urged with reference to the capital of New Hampshire as have touched the sensibilities of the Senate and induced a suspension of the rules and the unanimous incorporation of this amendment, which I have supported. I am delighted that the thing has been done; but the capital of my State is without any public building for the uses of the Government.

One is in process of completion now, and, as I said last night, there is immediate need of a slight additional appropriation for the purpose of fire-proofing the building. Unless the appropriation is made at this session the building must proceed under the contracts to completion with wooden finish inside, and the building itself, which otherwise will be a beautiful and durable structure, will lack the proper internal finish to correspond with its other appointments.

The Architect has recommended the additional appropriation. It is only $35,000 that is needed, and I ask the indulgence of the Senate to consider the amendment, which I now send to the desk and ask that it be inserted immediately after the one just adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. The capital of my State desired some new legislation with respect to a public building in an incomplete state, but I did not have the nerve and the energy to suggest a proper change in the law. Therefore I shall be obliged to object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the amendment is not now in order.

Mr. BLAIR. I am sorry the heart of my friend is so hard. I do not know but what that suggestion is true.

Mr. MAHONE. On page 59——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Virginia ask unanimous consent at this time to offer an amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The pending question being on page 3, in respect of the item for Denver.

Mr. TELLER. I want to pass that by. I have not any idea that the Senate is going to make an exception in favor of Denver. I rather want this appropriation made, but if the Senate will consent I wish that it may be made and left discretionary with the Treasury Department whether to expend it now or wait until the limit is changed. I want it in such a shape that if the bill now pending in the other House should pass it may be available. If that bill does not pass then I do not care about it being available.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What does the Senator from Colorado desire?

Mr. TELLER. I ask to have the amendment passed over for the present and I shall call it up when I prepare an amendment to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over if there be no objection. The next reserved amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 435, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the first word, "that," and inserted the word "and;" so as to read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, &c.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "of," in line 437, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the word "ones" and inserted "one;" and struck out the word "twos" and inserted "two;" so as to read:

Authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 437, after the word "dollar," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the words:

On all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury, in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BECK. I am not sure whether there is a quorum of the Senate here. I want a quorum of the Senate when that is voted on. I do not like to make any question of a quorum, but the attendance is very slim on this side.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is a quorum here all the time.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Kentucky if it is his wish to retain those words in the bill.

Mr. BECK. I should like very much to divide the question and retain the words, "on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury." I do not feel quite so well satisfied in regard to the words, "in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government.

Mr. SHERMAN (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Mr. President, I trust that no member of the Senate will feel called upon to enter legislation of the character embraced in this amendment at this stage of the session and at this stage of the bill. I would not vote for the bill, although it contained all the appropriations in the whole list and category of appropriations for the Government if this amendment were inserted in it. I believe it is a breach of public faith, contrary to the pledged faith of the nation; and to discuss this question at this time it seems to me is a mockery of legislation.

The silver dollar has been coined under an existing law passed in 1878, confessedly of a less value than the gold dollar. Without entering into a discussion of the dangers which may ensue in the hereafter as to the possibility of our coming to the single standard of silver, waiving all those questions which have been discussed so often, it is certain that all these dollars were issued upon the distinct understanding that they should be issued as a legal-tender coin, and whenever presented to the Government of the United States at its Treasury, any parts of them that were outstanding were to be redeemed by silver certificates as prescribed by existing law.

The coinage of the silver dollar goes on at the rate of $2,000,000 worth a month, nearly 2,000,000 ounces, because an ounce now is worth less than a dollar. It was to be coined, put in the Treasury, issued, and paid out from time to time, and whenever presented back to the Treasury silver certificates were to be issued in its place.

There are now in the Treasury from $60,000,000 to $80,000,000 not represented by silver certificates. Under existing law these certificates can only be issued when the silver or gold is brought to the Treasury to exchange for the silver certificates. At present there are from $60,000,000 to $80,000,000 of these silver dollars not represented by outstanding silver certificates.

To provide for the issue of paper money based upon those dollars, which are confessedly of less commercial value than the gold dollar—that is, the silver is worth 25 per cent. less than gold—to issue paper money based upon this inadequate and insufficient foundation, it seems to me at this hour of the session, would be a mockery of legislation.

I believe that the passage of such a proposition did not excite much attention in the House of Representatives, because I have no doubt it was generally believed and supposed it would not be acquiesced in by the Senate. To pass it now I think would alarm the public credit and do more to bring about a condition of affairs which every man would regret, when gold would disappear from circulation, when gold would be either hoarded or exported, and the gap be widened between these two standards of value.

Mr. President, I have no objection, but on the contrary I am in favor of issuing the one, two, and five dollar certificates instead of the larger denominations. From the first I believed that that would have been the best form to represent the silver, because as the silver was intended for the minor wants of commerce and trade, the representatives of silver ought to be in those denominations which could be most commonly used in place of ordinary silver. Therefore I approve of the amendment made by the Committee on Appropriations to issue the ones and twos and fives as a part of the silver certificates to be issued under existing law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What place has that in an appropriation bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. None whatever. Now, to introduce this subject at this stage, without the sanction of the Committee on Appropriations, or the Committee on Finance, which ought to have charge of this matter, against the common consent of the commercial classes of this country, against the almost united opposition of the great business interests of this country, merely from a foolish idea that it may tend to advance the value of silver, it seems to me is wrong. Although the Senator from Kentucky may be eager in this pursuit, and although a few other Senators may desire to enter into this great hazard, I beg them not to do it, at least not without the concurrence of a single committee of this body.

Sir, I need not tell you how this may be regarded in other quarters, because probably I ought not to do it, but it is sufficient to say that you propose a revolution in our currency which will endanger the whole foundation of our financial system, without the report of a committee, against the report of the Committee on Appropriations, without the sanction of the Committee on Finance, and without the subject ever having been considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And without any place in an appropriation bill at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; it has no place here. It is a change of existing laws. If the Senator from Kentucky was now offering the proposition as an amendment to this bill it would be rejected at once; first, because it is not reported by any committee of this body; next, because it is not recommended by any Department of the Government; next, because it is not only not provided for by existing law but it is against existing law, and besides that it is general legislation. So, on four grounds it would be excluded by your rules; and now simply because it has been put on by the House of Representatives, it is brought here without the advice of a committee and is to be thrust forward.

If I believed there was a danger—and I was somewhat startled with the vote on this question to-day on another less important provision—if I thought there was any danger, with my knowledge of the various laws that enter into and are modified by this proposition, I would feel it to be my bounden duty even from this time on to resist it to the uttermost.

I beg Senators to allow this to go over. Let this silver question stand.

I do not believe the time is far distant when by wise and judicious consideration we may solve it upon some basis which will secure to us a double standard of money, gold and silver of equal commercial value, but it is proposed to issue certificates now when the basis upon which they are issued, that which is proposed to be bought, is worth only 78 or 79 cents on the dollar, without the advice of a committee, without any forms of legislation, in violation of your rules, against the protest of the business men of this country, with the probability that it will prolong this session and endanger the passage of this bill.

I trust, therefore, that the Senator from Kentucky who expressed his opinions to-day in a speech that was not answered—although it would have been answered but for the lateness of the session on the spot—now that he has had his say even without a reply, will not attempt to force this most obnoxious legislation to the business men of this country merely because he has fixed opinions. Sir, he ought to have a reasonable deference for the opinions of others who have studied this question as much as he has, and not force us to this issue here in the expiring hours of the session.

I feel it my duty to say this much. To provide for the issue of from sixty to eighty millions of silver certificates not according to existing law but against existing law it seems to me is unpardonable legislation at this time.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the proposition that I insist upon retaining here is the proposition which came from the House of Representatives. It has been on the tables of Senators for a month, or nearly so. It has been before the Committee on Finance informally, at the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio himself, though never acted upon; and it has been called up time and again.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator say that I ever suggested the idea of the issuing of silver certificates based upon the excess in the Treasury?

Mr. BECK. No, never; but it has been brought up in the Finance Committee as a matter to be considered by that committee ever since this bill was sent here. Of course the Senator from Ohio opposed it. The Senator from Ohio when Secretary of the Treasury tried to get a construction of the law so as to have the bonds paid in gold in the face of the law; and in the book which was published when he got a decided opinion from the Attorney-General, the letter demanding the opinion was not even published in the book.

The Senator from Ohio when Secretary of the Treasury demanded that the legal-tender quality should he taken away from greenbacks year after year; and the Senator from Ohio when Secretary of the Treasury demanded that the coinage of silver should stop at $100,000,000, and predicted year after year all the results which he is now predicting would follow from it, that gold would flee from the country and leave us a single standard. It was the perpetual, the continual effort of the Senator from Ohio all the time while he was in the Treasury to destroy the silver coinage of the country by suppressing the coinage of that metal.

He said he would have answered me to-day but for the time being precious. He has had all this winter to answer a dozen of us who have made speeches upon the subject.

When he speaks of the business interests of the country, he may mean Wall street, he may mean a set of bankers and bondholders; but nineteen-twentieths of the people of this country do not intend that one-half of the basis of the circulation, the silver of the country, shall be destroyed to double the value of the gold in the hands of a few millionaires.

While he may resist it, and no doubt will resist it, as he always has done, a majority of the House have inserted this provision and a majority of the Senate in my opinion favor it. I know if this remains in the bill it will be kept here over his vote and against his protest; and whenever he undertakes to go into that argument I will bring his own reports, year after year, as long as he was in the Treasury, and show that the silver coinage of this country has never had a more inveterate enemy than the Senator from Ohio. I do not ask him to favor anything in that direction.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Kentucky, sympathizing with all his general statement, what place this question of disputed financial management has in a bill that professes simply to appropriate money to carry on the lawful operations of the Government?

Mr. BECK. I answer that only in this way: The House of Representatives in the exercise of its undoubted authority, so far as the Senate is concerned, inserted this provision. I agree with the House that the officials of this Government have no right to hold and hoard money in the Treasury without utilizing it, when men come before us, as our Treasurer did the other day, and insist (and I have his printed statement before me agreeing with the Senator from Ohio) that equity demands that the payment of the national bank issues shall be made either in United States notes or gold coin, although the law, the opinion of the Attorney-General, the face of the law, and everything agrees that the silver and gold coins of the country stand upon perfect equality. Still there is a body of men at the other end of the Capitol and in this Chamber, of which the Senator from Ohio is a conspicuous member, who are demanding gold and gold alone as the only coin in which our national obligations can be paid.

It is because I do not intend by my vote to say that that is the view of the Senate of the United States, after the House of Representatives have deliberately inserted it in this bill, that I ask to have the language retained which was placed there by the House of Representatives.

I agree that under our rules I could not have brought it up here, and I would not have attempted it. But it is here. Even striking it out does not get clear of it. It throws it into conference between the two Houses; no more, no less.

The provision being here, and believing that it is the right and the duty of our Treasury officials, and that it is good for the country that small silver certificates or coin certificates (which I think ought to be a proper use of them) should be issued, I shall vote to retain what the House of Representatives have inserted.

I say now and repeat, whenever the Senator from Ohio sees fit to come into this argument, either in answer to what I said to-day or what I had the honor to say six months ago, I shall be ready to reply to him to the satisfaction of the Senate and of the country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Kentucky has not answered my question so that I perfectly understand him. My question was, what place this evidently disputed question of the financial management of the country has in a bill which is to provide the means for carrying that Government on?

As far as the Senator from Kentucky responded to my question at all, he simply said it was in the bill, that the House of Representatives had put it in, and they had a right to put it in—to that I agree—and they have sent it to us.

We are, so far as I have heard or believe or know, a body equally independent in regard to legislation. We have our rules, which the Senator from Kentucky agrees would prohibit him or myself or the Senator from Ohio, no matter how strongly we might believe in it, from embarrassing the expenditure of money to carry on the obligations and duties of the Government by bringing into it a question of legislative difficulty and dispute and doubt, whoever may be right, that this proposition embodies.

Saying nothing about the House rules—and how under the House rules, which we have a right to take notice of, it could have got in in the House bill I can not understand—how the Senate with its rules, which prohibit all of us from doing anything in this way on a question of this kind, on the theory that we ought to do it by a distinct and independent measure, are going to say that we will allow this thing to stand in this bill and insist upon keeping it in when there is a division of opinion about it—not one of those little legislative amendments that everybody agrees to and that we wink at and let go by, but a great and disputed financial question to be retained on an appropriation bill simply because a body that has no more power than we have has a right to propose it to us, I am unable to understand."

On the theory of the Senator from Kentucky I could move on this bill a dozen propositions which are just as germane to it as this is, and which I believe are for the necessary interests of the public service; and yet I should not get three Senators, if I did one, to stand by me to do it. I might propose the bill which has passed the Senate in regard to the affairs in Utah; I would strip from it everything that any Senator in this body objected to; and then I would ask the Senate of the United States and every Senator to agree to a proposition that we are for, on all sides of the Chamber, and put it on this appropriation bill, and I should expect and I should deserve that every Senator would say, "However good your proposition may be, however perfectly it may have been considered in the Senate as it was, however unanimous we were in agreeing to it, you have no business to send this proposition to the House of Representatives as a rider on a bill appropriating money to carry on this Government."

That is the proposition; and I can name a dozen others of what I consider to be measures of great public moment and interest, as great as this; and yet I should be ashamed of myself if I stood up and asked the Senate to do it on a bill to appropriate money to carry on the ordinary operations of the administration of affairs in this Government.

The Senator from Kentucky does not dispute that. He only says that this is a good thing as he thinks, and the House of Representatives (in spite of its rules, and I think I do not transgress the proprieties in saying that, because its rules are public) has sent this bill to us with this provision on it, somehow or another. If it were proposed here, it is against our rules; but wherever proposed it has no relevancy to any of the objects of the appropriations named in the bill or any other sundry civil bill, which simply is to appropriate money that is in the Treasury to pay the obligations and to provide for carrying on the Government.

Therefore it is a forced, ingrafted rider, to be got through without discussion, or with short discussion, and to coerce somebody, somewhere, in some department of the Government, into swallowing it whether he likes it or not (no, I will not say that, because that goes beyond me), for fear if it shall fail to pass this bill that the Government will break down, and we shall be called upon to have a called session of Congress. Is that right?

I have said all this without reference to the merits of this proposition; and if I believed in it as thoroughly as the Senator from Kentucky does I should have been bound to say the same thing, because you are drawing in against what we all know to be the correct methods of doing business—you are drawing into the mere expenditure of money to carry out the existing laws of the United States a difficult and doubtful and disputed question, whichever side of it may be right, and to ride it onto an appropriation bill in order to get it through this body or some other or somewhere into a law.

If anything can be vicious that is vicious, and I say that without expressing any opinion. It may be that I should agree with the Senator from Kentucky. I certainly agree with him that the silver coin of the United States is just as good a legal tender for every bond and debt of the United States that does not say gold coin exclusively, if there be such a one, as the gold is, and so far and to that extent I am just as strong a silver man as my friend from Kentucky is. But what has that to do, here and now, on a question whether we will appropriate the money necessary to carry on the objects which are named in this bill under the established laws of the United States?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, a few words only in reply to the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK]. I have listened to the Senator from Kentucky often in talking upon this subject and never replied. He says that I sat here all of this session and did not reply. That is true. I never make speeches merely for the pleasure of repeating and airing my own ideas over and over again.

All I can say to the Senator from Kentucky is that had I at any time seen an opportunity to have this silver question brought up and fairly discussed in all its length and breadth, and seen the possibility of securing the passage of any measure which would tend to aid the parity between silver and gold and to maintain these two standards side by side with each other, I should have done all I could to secure the passage of such a law.

At the beginning of this Congress I thought perhaps it was possible, and I thought there was a growing concurrence of opinion which would enable us, instead of putting in an eighty-cent dollar as the basis of different silver certificates to put in a commercial dollar's worth of silver bullion as the basis of silver certificates. I believe in the end that will be the solution of it. It may be postponed to so long a time that Senators will force the single silver standard first; but when the time comes for the final settlement of this question, in my judgment it will be that gold and silver will have the same commercial value and go side by side with each other.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They have got to be corelated.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, they have got to be corelated by a change of ratio. But that is neither here nor there. I would postpone the time until I can see a proper solution of the question by consent of the silver men, because silver is a great product of our country and it ought not to be disfavored. The silver men who produce silver now sell their silver at its market value, about a dollar for 500 grains of silver. Therefore the measure which has been proposed to bring about this parity between these two metals could not injure them, but in my judgment would tend immediately to advance the price of silver bullion on the market, just as resumption tended to lift all forms of paper money to the standard of gold, and then made both gold and paper money more abundant than before. That is my idea.

The Senator says I am an enemy to silver. On the contrary, I introduced the bill under which the fractional silver coin was first issued, the first step toward resumption. I made no distinction at all between gold and silver. Indeed in those times, prior to 1872, I think in 1873 and 1874 and along there, the silver dollar was worth more than the gold dollar, and therefore no discrimination was made against the silver dollar.

The Senator says I wrote a letter to Attorney-General Devens. So I did. That letter was in the public archives. I have no doubt it has been published a hundred times. I think I have seen it in print often. There was no secret about it. He said it was not published with Devens's opinion. That is very probable, because the Attorney-General's opinion made in pursuance of a request from the head of a Department was the recognized law for the time upon that subject; and it is good law, and I believe in it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They never give a copy of the request with the opinion.

Mr. SHERMAN. In all the opinions of Attorneys-General I have ever read there is no printing with those opinions of the letters which called out the opinions. The Senator or the Senator's colleague, a distinguished member of the House of Representatives, had no difficulty in finding my letter upon the official files there in broad, plain language. I remember very well submitting that question. It was at the time we were about to issue 4 per cent. bonds, the beginning of the funding operation, at a time when it appeared to be pretty difficult to float 4 per cent. bonds, and the question was then in debate whether those bonds when issued were payable in gold coin or whether they were payable in gold or silver coin. That question was submitted to the Attorney-General, and the opinion of the Attorney-General was not only adopted by the Treasury Department, but ingrafted and printed upon the back of every bond that was issued, and it is there to-day.

So far from being an enemy to silver, the measure that I would propose would do more to lift silver out of its depreciation than all these wild schemes which my friend from Kentucky has fallen into. That is my belief. He thinks differently. He is just as honest in his belief as I am. But shall we decide on this bill at this period of the session this question, which has divided cabinets and kingdoms, which in Europe is acknowledged to be the great financial question of the age, and is so not only here but in all countries of the civilized world? We have been hoping and hoping and seeking to get by communication with foreign powers some proper ratio or some form of settlement of this silver question. England is agitated with it, Germany is agitated with it, and so is France.

Shall we undertake to settle that question here at the closing hours of this session, against our rules, by a chance vote in the Senate at the late hours in which we are now engaged in legislation? I trust not. I trust the good sense of the Senate, which can always be appealed to on practical questions, will see that that should not be done, whatever their opinions may be on this silver question. So far as the silver in the Treasury is concerned it is now equal to gold. It is maintained at par with gold by the power of the National Government, not by its intrinsic value. But because the Government redeems the silver, and receives it and gives the silver certificate for it and receives that silver certificate for all purposes, it does not follow that in violation of the existing law we should issue more silver certificates upon these coins which are commercially of less value than their face.

That is the question, and that is a question we ought not to deal with now. When the time comes, when with slow and deliberate consideration the Committee on Finance, of which my friend from Kentucky and myself are both members, shall take these questions up, having in view the interests of the people at large, having in view the interests of the whole civilized world, having especially in view the interest of the silver producers of our country, having in view our standing as a commercial and financial nation now growing to be the chief in the world—when we come to consider those problems in all their length and breadth by the quiet table in our committee-room and report a measure to this body which can be discussed and considered in all its length and breadth, then there will be time enough for the Senator from Kentucky and I to cross swords with each other; and he will not find me backward.

But I never want to fight a bootless task. I do not want to proclaim my opinions on this subject day after day, to repeat them over and over again with a little change of phraseology; but let the fight come on, and then I shall meet my friend from Kentucky, who always charges gallantly, though sometimes a little too rashly. We will meet together and we will discuss this matter fully, and I shall not shrink from the combat.

I hope the Senate will pass this by without respect to its merits, if you please, although if the time were opportune I would be prepared, I think, to show that this step above all others would be the most dangerous to the public credit, dangerous to the foundation of our present currency and our financial system. But that may be waived for the present. It is sufficient to say that it has no place here, and it ought not to be considered now.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana will suspend. The Chair, unmindful of the five-minute rule that was agreed to some time ago, has indulged debate beyond it.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think the Chair ought now to invoke the rule.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate now having heard the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Ohio, and as they have exhausted this question nearly, I hope the Chair will enforce the rule.

Mr. HARRISON. I did not rise to discuss this question, but rather to get some information. If I understand the effect of lines 435 to 440, as they come to us from the House, they require the Secretary of the Treasury to issue silver certificates upon all silver now in the Treasury. I notice from the remarks of Mr. Jordan before the Finance Committee a day or two ago that the surplus of silver dollars and silver bullion is something over $96,000,000.

I understand the second proposition contained in this amendment which comes from the House is that after the Secretary of the Treasury has issued silver certificates on this $96,000,000 of silver in the Treasury he shall from that time forward pay out for the appropriations contained in this bill and for other appropriations and obligations of the Government only silver certificates until he has paid them all out. If I understand the amendment he is not allowed to pay out silver, he is not allowed to pay out any gold or any greenbacks until, he has paid out the entire $96,000,000 of silver certificates which would be issued.

Mr. ALLISON. That is not only true, but he must pay them out in one-dollar and two-dollar and five-dollar bills.

Mr. HARRISON. So, if this amendment is adopted, until the $96,000,000 of silver certificates have been exhausted we shall be upon a silver basis alone of one, two, and five dollar bills, and it would not be lawful for the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out any other kind of money at all.

It does seem to me that that goes beyond anything the Senator from Kentucky would desire, and so I understood him to say, when the Senator from Iowa asked him whether he really desired these words retained, to express doubt as to whether the last requirement to which I have just alluded should be retained in the bill.

I wish to add that it appears to me to be unfair to the Executive that this change of the financial policy should be put into an appropriation bill, and that he should be forced to consider it, coerced to consider it in connection with a bill making appropriations for the support of the Government.

So I think this goes further than the Senator from Kentucky desires, and it is putting here in connection with this bill a proposition which must coerce the action of the Executive, and something that is not germane. Therefore it is apparent that this has not received that careful consideration which it ought to have even from the friends of silver money.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not propose to debate the question further. I understand the rule fully——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Kentucky being heard? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BECK. I only wish to say that I do not understand that this provision has any such effect. It has the effect of requiring one, two, and five dollar bills to be issued from the surplus dollars in the Treasury.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Kentucky will allow me, the Secretary of the Treasury would be compelled to issue them in payment.

Mr. BECK. There is a contraction now, as we know, of $80,000,000 of national-bank notes. There has been a destruction of $14,000,000 of one and two dollar greenbacks in the last six months. Those two items are nearly $100,000,000—more than all the silver dollars in the Treasury. It is proposed to use that money lying in the Treasury and to issue one, two, and five dollar bills as a substitute for that currency, $80,000,000 of national-bank notes, $14,000,000 of ones and twos of greenbacks which have been destroyed, to be used when it is issued like any other money. It is not a thing you can force men to take, and nobody proposes to do that. I said I was willing to stop with the surplus money in the Treasury and strike the other words out.

Mr. ALLISON. Do I understand the Senator from Kentucky to think that unless we pass this bill these appropriations will be provided for in the Treasury?

Mr. BECK. No, I do not undertake to say any such thing. I say the effort of the House was to keep up the currency as it has been for the last few years, and provide against the contraction caused by the withdrawal of $80,000,000 of national-bank notes and $14,000,000 small greenbacks.

There are enough silver dollars in the Treasury to issue one, two, and five dollar certificates upon, to be used as money among the people for the payment of the debts of the Government. That is what the House intend, in my judgment; and while I would not put in the last words, I do not think they are open to the construction sought to be given to them.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I only desire to occupy one moment on this particular provision of the bill. The clause which is now under discussion is intended, if it is intended for anything whatever, to compel the Secretary of the Treasury to issue one, two, and five dollar bills in payment of every obligation of the Government until the surplus silver in the Treasury is exhausted.

Mr. TELLER. It does not say so.

Mr. ALLISON. That is exactly what it means, or it means nothing whatever.

Mr. BECK. To simplify that and avoid any discrepancy, I am willing for the time being, until we meet with the House in conference, that the words "in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government" shall remain stricken out, and that the clause proposing to issue silver certificates on all the surplus dollars in the Treasury shall be retained. I am willing to do that.

Mr. ALLISON. I knew quite well that the Senator from Kentucky would not, when it came to the test, vote for the provision as it stands. He can not do it, nor can any Senator, because it means the exclusion of any payments whatever except the single payment of one, two, and five dollar bills. If I am a creditor of the Government, or an officer of the Government in San Francisco, it becomes the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury, as soon as he can issue these one, two, and five dollar certificates, to transmit them to the subtreasury at San Francisco and to the exclusion of everything else pay these out upon the obligations of the Government.

Mr. DAWES. Forty thousand dollars at a time.

Mr. ALLISON. Whatever it may be, $40,000 as the Senator from Massachusetts says, or a million dollars as the case may be, and pay them out in one, two, and five dollar bills.

It does not need any further argument from me to show that this is a crude provision, that it is a provision which has not been digested by any committee in either branch of Congress. It is a provision that is thrust in this bill for a single purpose only, and that is to coerce an unwilling President or administration to pay out money which it is thought has been accumulated to too great an extent in the Treasury.

If the Senators desire to change the existing law upon that subject, let them do it in a reasonable way after full and proper debate. As every one knows who hears me, we still have an opportunity of doing it within two or three days, because, although this measure was passed upon an appropriation bill and sent by the House of Representatives to the Senate, the House of Representatives reconsidering its haste, reconsidering what it had done upon this appropriation bill, very wisely in comparison with this provision provided that the surplus in the Treasury should only be paid out at the rate of $10,000,000 per month. Here is an absolute coercive provision requiring an immediate and oppressive execution, without delay and without limitation, upon one, two, and five dollar bills, to pay out in one case, depending upon the consideration, $96,000,000 and in another case $75,600,000.

The House of Representatives, itself retracing its steps with reference to this coercive provision upon an appropriation bill, passed a joint resolution only a few days ago which, compared with this provision, is a wise and conservative one, namely, that the Secretary of the Treasury should only pay out at the rate of $10,000,000 a month.

I ask the Senator from Kentucky and those who agree with him to wait until we can have an open, fair, and free discussion, divested of these questions of appropriations for light-houses, for all the necessary and proper operations of the Government, of the great question as to what shall be done with the surplus in the Treasury. Are not Senators willing to wait for one Sabbath day to pass, until we can have an opportunity of discussing that question divested of the necessities of the operations of the Government with reference to current appropriations, and when, unless we pass this bill and make it become a law before the 30th day of this month, the operations of our Government will be compelled to stop under existing law?

Yet we are asked now and here to adopt this extremely radical and as I believe dangerous measure, dangerous to the interests of those who advocate the silver dollar as a currency in this country. I do not yield to any man on either side of this Chamber in my devotion to silver as a part of the circulating money of this country. I have been for it in season and out of season.

I have advocated and devoted what little energy I could to the support of it. Yet I believe that this provision of a coercive character upon the Treasury of the United States will do more to depreciate and destroy the parity of value between silver and gold, which I believe is essential to the silver currency, than any other thing we could adopt.

Therefore it is that I finally ask Senators on both sides of this Chamber to allow the wise and judicious amendments to be made which a majority of the Committee on Appropriations—I say majority although I might say more—have agreed to with reference to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Kentucky as offering an amendment to the amendment agreed to as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BECK. I do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Dictate it to the clerks so that they may take it down and report it.

Mr. BECK. I am willing that the words from the word "in," in line 438, to the word "Government," in line 440, "in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government," shall remain stricken out, and I ask the Senate to retain the words, beginning in line 437, "on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator proposes simply to divide the question, and to strike out down to and including the word "Treasury," in line 438.

Mr. BECK. I oppose the striking out of the words down to "Treasury," in line 438.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the remainder that you consent to be stricken out?

Mr. BECK. Yes, so far as I am concerned, because I do not desire to give that construction to the language which some gentlemen seem to think it has. I only desire to say now that I introduced an amendment this morning and I made an argument in favor of it, and that I did not in that amendment agree either with the House or with the Senate committee, but my amendment was ruled out of order, and upon reflection I suppose it is not in order.

Therefore I desire now to retain this part of what the House have inserted, simply requiring the issue of silver certificates of one, two, and five dollars on the silver now in the Treasury. That does not force out any payment from the Treasury. It can be done in the legitimate course of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question being divided, the Secretary will report the first part of the amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Has this division of the question been taken by unanimous consent? It does not seem to me that it is a question divisible according to parliamentary law; it is one proposition from the House of Representatives.

Mr. TELLER. There are two propositions.

Mr. HARRISON. I think not.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me there are two propositions here; first, to issue a silver certificate upon all the surplus; and second, to pay that out upon certain indebtedness specifically named in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the amendment is divisible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Supposing it to be divisible and we have got the two questions, what will be the difference if we strike out the clause that the Senator from Kentucky now thinks ought to be stricken out from what it was before? Is the Secretary of the Treasury to issue these silver certificates to anybody who applies for them or is he to issue them to pay the public debt of the United States?

Mr. ALLISON. He must loan them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Loan them?

Mr. ALLISON. Loan them to individuals, if there is any difference.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If he is to loan them to individuals without security I rather think I am for the proposition.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to answer the Senator's inquiry.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator inquires what will be done. The Treasury Department would issue $96,000,000 of silver certificates. They have now probably on hand one-third of that amount of silver certificates, and they would put those silver certificates in their drawer, for the bonds, just as they do to-day, and hold them there. There is no obligation under the bill, if those words are stricken out, to pay out a dollar of them; and knowing the animus of the Treasury Department, it may be said that they will not pay out a dollar.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the use of having it then?

Mr. TELLER. Very likely it will not be of any use at all, but no harm can be done by it. There is no obligation on the Department to pay out a dollar unless they want to pay it, unless somebody goes there and demands silver certificates.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, Mr. President, we have got a large addition to our stock of information. We find this clause with a provision containing a totally untenable proposition that the Senator from Kentucky wishes to strike out as a little too tough even for him. Then we have a provision that the Secretary of the Treasury shall issue these certificates, stopping right there, giving the denominations. How? When? To whom? They are to be put out (unless, as the Senator from Iowa says, they are to be loaned to somebody) to pay the debts and obligations of the United States whether they are contained in the appropriations in this bill or any other bill. Everything that the United States owes shall be paid, so far as these certificates go, by these certificates.

That is where you stand. You have therefore precisely the same legal result, whether these words moved to be stricken out by the Senator from Kentucky are in the bill or out of it. Taking those out, the Secretary of the Treasury would be bound to do precisely the same thing that he would if they were in. Now, whether on an appropriation bill you propose to go into this subject, as I said before, is a question for the good sense of this body, irrespective of whatever may be the different views among gentlemen in this Chamber or elsewhere concerning the propriety of one movement about silver and another about gold and another about paper in any of the forms that it may be brought forward. If we are to block up the operations of this Government by going into a question of this kind on such a bill, then I shall be surprised. I should hope that the Senator from Kentucky and everybody else would agree that we should go on and appropriate money, and go home in time and come back again by the 1st of December, without raising these questions on an appropriation bill at this time. If they are to be raised, however, I shall have a good deal more to say on the merits of the proposition by and by.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first branch of the amendment proposed to be stricken out by the Committee of the Whole will be read.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. In justice to myself I should like to state what I understand to be the meaning of the lines in controversy. In the first place, as the law stands now, silver certificates are issued in denominations of $10 and upward. This provision would make it necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to issue certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars, and it makes it compulsory that he shall issue certificates of one, two, and five dollars on all the surplus silver now in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. BECK. I think the Senator from Arkansas fails to notice that when they were originally issued it was provided that the certificates should be receivable for taxes, customs, and all public dues, "and when paid into the Treasury shall be reissued." The Senator from Vermont asks, Are you going to give them away? The law now is that they shall be reissued. There is no difficulty about that.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The effect as I understand it of this law, if enacted, would be to require the Secretary of the Treasury instead of issuing ten-dollar certificates to issue ones, twos, and fives, and that they should be issued on all the surplus silver in the Treasury. The declaration in the words stricken out by the committee, it seems to me, would only make this money available just as any other money in the Treasury would be available, to pay any debts the Government might owe. It means no more and no less.

If these words are left in the bill I do not believe that any appropriation provided for in this bill will be necessarily paid in the surplus silver or in certificates issued for that silver which is now in the Treasury, any more than with any other money of the Treasury of the United States. If I believed so, I would not vote for the provision as it is. It seems to me it can do no harm, and I prefer to leave these words standing in the bill.

With this explanation of my vote, I leave the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter proposed to be stricken out in the first print of the clause will be reported.

The SECRETARY. After the word "dollars," in line 437, it is proposed to strike out:

On all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on striking out these words.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. Let the amendment be stated again so that it may be understood. I think I understand it, but there is some confusion about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on striking out the words in the House bill that have just been read.

Mr. BUTLER. How will the section read if they are stricken out?

Mr. FRYE. That is not what the Senate wishes to strike out.

Mr. BECK. I object to striking that out.

Mr. FRYE. And propose to strike out the other three lines?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Maine that the Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment striking out that language and other language in connection with it, and the Committee of the Whole agreed to that amendment. Now the Senator from Kentucky asks a division of the amendment. Being divided, the question is first upon the language which has just been read.

Mr. FRYE. But when the committee offers an amendment here striking out five lines and the Senator from Kentucky offers an amendment to that limiting the striking out to the last three of the five lines, why should not that be put first?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asked a division of the question, and the Chair was putting the question upon the first branch of the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But is there not a rule which says that a motion to strike out shall not be divided.

Mr. COCKRELL. A motion to strike out and insert shall not be divided.

Mr. FRYE. There is where the trouble with this proposition is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a rule prohibiting a motion to strike out and insert being divided; but the Chair is aware of no such rule as the Senator from Vermont suggests.

Mr. TELLER. I would like to know what we are going to vote on. I am a little at a loss to know how the question stands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The striking out of the language which the Chair has directed twice to be read, and the Chair will now direct the Secretary to read it again.

The CHIEF CLERK. Beginning in line 437, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out:

On all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury.

Mr. TELLER. That is not the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly not.

Mr. BECK. I oppose those words being stricken out. I vote "nay."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I want to vote intelligently on this. I understand the Senator from Kentucky to move to strike out that which the committee strikes out after the words read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is what the Chair understands the Senator from Kentucky to mean and what he proposed.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. But that is not the question as put to the Senate. The question is whether you will strike this out on the motion of the Senator from Kentucky. The question upon striking this out is upon the report of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. COCKRELL. The vote will be taken on the other.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is, will the Senate concur with the Committee of the Whole in striking out the language just read?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. But I want it understood distinctly that when I cast my vote on this bill I cast it for the proposition of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BUTLER. Then vote against this.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I understand, and I want to vote against this; but I do not want the proposition put in this way, that the Senator from Kentucky asks to strike out those words. They are stricken out in the printed bill in black lines by the Committee on Appropriations. What the Senator from Kentucky asks a division on is that which follows the word "Treasury," to wit:

In payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government.

His motion is to leave that clause out.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator allow me? I object to the words being stricken out down to the word "Treasury," in line 438.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. So I understand.

Mr. FRYE. Now, suppose the motion of the Senator from Kentucky should prevail and these words should be stricken out, and then on the other three lines no action should be had, the bill would be absolutely senseless. In my judgment it is all one amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations, it is not capable of division; and the only way to treat it is by amendment, and the Senator from Kentucky should have offered his amendment to strike out the last three lines of this amendment.

Mr. BECK. Allow me to say a word. I think I understand this. If the Senator does not agree with the action of the Committee on Appropriations and the Committee of the Whole in striking out these words and leaves the clause as I propose it will read:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury; and the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable, redeemable, and payable, &c.

I object to striking out those words.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is the motion of the Senator from Kentucky amendable?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not understand the Senator from Kentucky as having made a motion, except to demand a division of a question that the Chair has decided was divisible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then a motion to amend is certainly in order, and I propose to amend the words proposed to be stricken out and the rest of the amendment together by striking out the whole of it after the word "on," down to and including the words "Government. That," in line 440.

Mr. TELLER. That is the question now pending, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Vermont restate his amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Senator from Kentucky asks a division of the question in striking out from line 437, after the word "dollars," to line 440, including the word "That." Am I right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky asked a division upon the question of striking out "on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury," as one branch; and as another, "in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures as obligations of the Government. That."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly. Now, in order to perfect the text that is proposed to be stricken out, before the matter is divided, I move to amend the whole paragraph by striking out all after the word "on," on line 437, down to and including the word "That," in line 440.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator proposes to leave the word "on" in the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is precisely what I propose to do.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment is in order the Chair holds, striking out a part of the language but not the whole.

Mr. ALLISON. What shall we do with "on" after we get that done?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We shall see.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. As we are to pass on the committee amendment, or on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, and it seems to be the intention here to leave the preposition "on" in in order to defeat a fair consideration and fair vote on a great and growing question like this, I move to amend the proposition of the Senator from Vermont by striking out all after the word "Treasury" down to and including the word "that," in the four hundred and fortieth line.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is in the third degree and not in order.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. No, sir; it is not in the second degree quite.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is in the third degree and not in order.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I want the judgment of the Chair on that proposition, and not of gentlemen who are on one side of this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator restate his proposition?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I understand the Senator from Vermont to offer a new amendment after the word "on," which is stricken out in the committee amendment. He offers a new amendment after the word "on," in line 437, that all shall be stricken out down to and including the word "that." That is evidently a new amendment, because he leaves in the word "on," which is marked off in this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is an amendment to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I then propose to amend that new amendment by striking out all after the word "Treasury" down to and including the word "that."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment would not be in order at this time because there is an amendment to an amendment pending.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Chair to pardon me on this point. The Senator from Vermont distinctly stated that he did not offer an amendment to an amendment, but he moved to strike out all after the word "on," and then he was asked what he would do with the word "on," and he said, "I will tell you further on, after a while."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia did not understand the Senator from Vermont. He distinctly stated that he did offer an amendment to an amendment.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. But if he does not do it, what becomes of what he tells you? If the fact is here and the statement is here, which will the Chair be governed by? He leaves "on" in here when the amendment strikes it out. I submit on the statement of facts and not on anybody else's say so, upon the record made here, he proposes to leave in the little word "on" in order to make a new amendment, and then he can forsooth call it an amendment to an amendment.

Now I undertake to say on this proposition that while I am ready to be defeated I want to be defeated on a fair fight. I do not want defeat in the way the silver money has been beaten here. I do not want to go back to a people who I know are oppressed for the want of currency and let them understand that I stood up and listened to the Senator from Vermont making statements that are not borne out by the record, when they are panting for money that will fix some price for their products.

I say, sir, that if the Chair can rule this to be in order it will rule in violation of every principle that ought to control parliamentary bodies. The Senator from Vermont distinctly stated, he has stated the second time, and yet the Chair rules that he can have the opportunity of leaving in a word that is stricken out by the original amendment, and then offering an amendment after that word and call his an amendment to an amendment.

I do not propose to discuss the proposition itself. I should like to do so even under the five-minute rule; but I want to have a fair and open contest, such as the Senator from Ohio has bid for on this floor, such as the chairman of this committee has bid for on this floor when he said the intervention of the Sabbath would not help this proposition a particle, his purpose being if possible to carry this bill to its consummation to-night before 12 o'clock.

I am ready now to ask the Senator from Ohio if he means a fair fight on an open field. If he means it, then do not call that an amendment to an amendment. No man who is capable of a fair fight will do it or can do it.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, it strikes me, I humbly submit, that the logic of the situation is precisely this: The Senator from Kentucky desires to perfect the text before taking the vote on the committee's proposition. In order to perfect the text he wishes to strike out the words "in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government. That"——

Mr. BECK. I have no objection to their going out now.

Mr. HAWLEY. Having stricken out those he would resist the proposition of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Kentucky had offered such an amendment the Chair would have held that it was in order just as the Chair held that the amendment of the Senator from Vermont was in order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have just consulted the Senator from Kentucky, and he has no objection to that form, which is logical and fair.

Mr. BECK. No; I will take it in that way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment is not in order unless the Senator from Vermont shall withdraw his amendment, which is an amendment to an amendment. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to strike out all after the word "on."

Mr. TELLER. That is practically the committee's amendment to all purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It leaves one word of the committee's amendment, and therefore falls within the purview of the rule.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that; but it is practically for all purposes the committee's amendment. It is taking the committee's proposition in another form. Of course if we do not want it we can vote it down.

Mr. HARRISON. So I understand; and I think the Senate should understand the amendment of the Senator from Vermont practically leaves the bill where it would be left if the Senate agreed to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it.

Mr. DOLPH. Is that amendment of the Senator from Vermont to strike out of the text of the bill all after the word "on," in line 437, or does it leave the committee's amendment to be simply to strike out all after the word "on?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont proposes to perfect the text of the bill by striking out all after the word "on." Is the Senator ready for the question on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. CAMDEN'S name was called). On this question my colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I was paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS], but I have taken the liberty of transferring my own pair with that Senator to the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL], and I shall therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN] is paired on this question with the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR].

Mr. EDMUNDS (when Mr. SAULSBURY'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. MORRILL] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 28, nays 17; as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I move to strike out the word "on," if there is no special objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question, Will the Senate agree to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, that word "on" being the only part of it remaining in the bill?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object to striking out the word "on." The proposition now is to strike out the word "on." The first amendment which came here was from the committee, and that included the word "on." The amendment of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] substantially and effectually was an amendment to the amendment of the committee. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] could not have interposed his amendment, in his own judgment as an old presiding officer of this body, unless he had changed the amendment of the committee, which was the original proposition, by leaving the word "on" in there, and that, in effect, left his an amendment to an amendment to a committee amendment.

The committee proposed the amendment which has been stricken out, the Senator from Kentucky proposed an amendment to that amendment, and then the Senator from Vermont came in and proposed an amendment to that amendment of the Senator from Kentucky, which was an amendment to the proposition reported by the committee. I say, therefore, there has not been a fair and square contest on this question.

It is of no consequence to me whether or not Senators shall get up here and endeavor to protect a Democratic President. I think he can take care of himself. I admit his record rather beats that of any President we have had in the veto line. This is a proposition to relieve the pressure on the business interests of this country by throwing into circulation money that is hoarded up in the Treasury. That policy has been pursued here long enough by the friends of gold, by New York millionaires, and even by New York Secretaries of the Treasury. The money should be thrown out among the people, increasing the circulating medium to the extent of $96,000,000.

The proposition is put in the only bill in which I believe it could have any hope of ever passing; and we here find ourselves the same Senate that the United States has had for years past, until it now realizes that the Republican party finds itself in the attitude of protecting a Democratic administration by striking out of the bill this simple provision. You are protecting it by taking this provision out. I am willing you shall take it out; but I want you to give the credit to those who do take it out. They ought to be permitted to die a natural death.

There is not a day that we do not have Senators on this floor talking about hard times and making speeches of that sort, and now when we come to relieve the pressure, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] talks about the business interests as I have always heard him talk. What constitutes the business interests of this country? The millionaires, the corporations, the banks, the large importing merchants? These are the men who come to you as representing the business interests in the opinion of some people. The men who constitute the business interests, in my judgment, are those who produce that which lies at the very foundation of all values in a country like this.

Mr. President, of course after the vote just taken this whole question has the go-by, far beyond the Sabbath that we heard of in the persuasive manner of the Senator from Iowa, and it will not be brought back to sunlight after he has had communion to-morrow. It is dead now. It has been killed by means which the Senator from Ohio at the outset suggested should not be employed, for he said he wanted free, fair, and open combat. If he had killed it in that way, it would have been another thing; but it has been killed here by a dodge on a little preposition, and I believe, with all deference to the Chair, by a ruling that will never be sustained by parliamentary rules. Even the Senator who offered it would not rely on that.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not think the word "on" should be stricken out, and I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the proposition I make.

The language which was covered by the motion of the Senator from Vermont is a part of the text of the bill, and the amendment adopted by the committee was to strike out the word "on" and all that followed down to and including the word "that," in line 440. The Senator from Vermont moved to strike out all after the word "on." Strike it out of what? Out of the proposed amendment, not out of the text of the bill; and when the proposed amendment is amended by striking out certain language which is a part of the text of the bill, in my judgment the effect of the motion is to leave that text still a part of the bill. If that is so the word "on" should be left there in order to complete the text.

I have no doubt about what the parliamentary effect of the action taken by the Senate is. I reserved my vote until the close of the roll-call, being in doubt as to the effect of it, but after voting I was persuaded that I was right in regard to it, and that the effect of the motion of the Senator from Vermont is to leave all that was covered by his motion standing a part of the text of the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the last four lines, all after the word "on," were stricken out of this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. One moment. How does the text stand? I understand now that the amendment of the Committee of the Whole striking out the words "all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury, in payment of the appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government. That" has been concurred in to that extent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That was the action of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I hope that we shall concur in striking out the word "on" also, and I think that will end it.

Mr. FRYE. If we do that, it simply restores the text of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator is entirely mistaken. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out these words, and the Senate has now concurred in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, except as to one word.

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will look at it he will see that the Committee on Appropriations offers an amendment to this bill to strike out all after the word "dollars," in line 437, down to and including the word "that," in line 440. That is an amendment of the committee. The Senator from Vermont moves to amend that by striking out all of it after the word "on."

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all.

Mr. FRYE. That is the amendment exactly. That has been stricken out. Now the Senator moves to strike out the word "on;" and if that is carried, your whole amendment is stricken out and the original text remains.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator from Maine is entirely mistaken. The Senate as in Committee of the Whole struck out all these words, and the Senator from Vermont moved to concur—practically that was the effect of his motion—in the committee amendment, except as to the word "on."

Mr. FRYE. No, sir, that was not it at all. The other lines were stricken out.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am a little surprised that my friend from Maine does not understand it. Here we had the simple or the compound proposition in this bill, as the case may be, of the text of the bill. A committee of this body, just as if it had not been reported from a committee at all, and a Senator in the body move to strike out a certain number of words in that text.

I moved to amend the proposition in order to perfect the paragraph proposed to be stricken out, by limiting that motion to strike out, which had been made before my motion, so that it would not apply to the whole of that text to strike out a part of the words and leave the others stand. On that the yeas and nays have been taken, and the Senate has voted to strike out the words except those that are left in the proposed amendment as stated. So far we have gone.

Therefore, I submit, with great respect, that it is perfectly clear that the Senate has voted to strike out of the text of this bill the words that I proposed to strike out, instead of striking out all the words that the preceding proposition of a committee or of a Senator sought to do. That leaves the word "on" in.

Mr. FRYE. Now, suppose the Senator from Vermont withdrew his second amendment, which was to strike out the word "on," and then the Chair put the question, what would the question be? It would be on the amendment of the committee as amended; and what is that amendment as amended? It is "five dollars on," the rest of it having been stricken out from the amendment is restored to the text of the bill. How can the Chair put the proposition in any other way?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the proposition pending at the time the Senator from Vermont offered his amendment was a simple amendment striking out four lines, the text of this bill. The Senator from Vermont distinctly stated that he proposed to perfect the language proposed to be stricken out before the question to strike out should be put. The Chair held that amendment to be perfectly in order.

Mr. FRYE. It was in order. I have no doubt about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment was proposed and the question taken upon it, and a majority of the Senate has agreed to that amendment. Now the remaining part of the amendment proposed by the committee is before the Senate for its action.

Mr. BUTLER. If in order, I should like to make a motion to strike out all of that clause from line 435 down to and including line 454, so as to strike out the whole question from this bill.

I make that motion upon the ground that this is general legislation upon an appropriation bill; and however much I might be in favor of the proposition itself, or of any part of the proposition, I should vote to strike it out; and I make that motion if in order.

Mr. PLUMB. Would it be in order to perfect the clause before striking it out? If so, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "on," these words:

All the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. I raise the point of order on the amendment of my friend from Kansas. Those words have just been stricken out and can not be reinserted.

Mr. PLUMB. But they have been stricken out in connection with other words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the amendment of the Senator from Kansas is in order. Those words have just been stricken out, it is true, but they were stricken out in connection with other words.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I move to amend by inserting, after the word "on," in line 437:

All the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be reported from the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Kansas will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 437, after the word "on," it is proposed to insert:

All the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury.

Mr. DAWES. Let the clause be read as it will be after it is amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the clause as it would stand if amended as proposed.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury, and the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable, redeemable, and payable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character," &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLAIR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN].

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] has returned to the Senate Chamber, and I therefore announce my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. FAIR'S name was called). The Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] is paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. CULLOM (when Mr. PALMER'S name was called). I am informed that the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when Mr. VANCE'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. VANCE] is paired with the Senator from Michigam [Mr. PALMER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DOLPH (after having voted in the affirmative). I inquire whether this is a motion to amend the amendment of the committee or to amend the text of the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is to insert a part of the language of the text of the bill which was stricken out by the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. DOLPH. And insert it as part of the amendment of the committee?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As part of the bill.

Mr. DOLPH. I change my vote then. I vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN].

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] announced that he was paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and therefore declined voting. I am quite certain that the Senator from Alabama, if present, would vote "yea" on this amendment. I feel warranted in saying that upon this amendment the Senator from Kansas is at perfect liberty to vote.

Mr. PLUMB. After that statement I ask that my name be called. I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—19.

Beck,	Cockrell,	Kenna,	Teller,
Berry,	Coke,	Maxey,	Van Wyck,
Blackburn,	Harris,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vest,
Brown,	Jones of Arkansas,	Plumb,	Whitthorne.
Call,	Jones of Nevada,	Riddleberger,

NAYS—27.

Allison,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Butler,	Gray,	Mahone,	Sherman,
Dawes,	Hale,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Dolph,	Harrison,	Miller,	Walthall,
Edmunds,	Hawley,	Payne,	Wilson of Iowa.
Frye,	Hoar,	Platt,	Wilson of Md.
George,	McMillan,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—30.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Jones of Florida,	Ransom,
Blair,	Eustis,	Logan,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Evarts,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Fair,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Morrill,	Vance,
Chace,	Hampton,	Palmer,	Voorhees.
Colquitt,	Hearst,	Pike,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it in order now to move to strike out the whole clause? The text is perfected, I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. Let us get the word "on" out first if we can.

Mr. BUTLER. From line 435 to line 454 inclusive I wish to strike out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's amendment is in order, but any amendment proposing to change the text proposed to be stricken out would be in order first.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we shall get rid of the word "on" now.

Mr. BUTLER. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole striking out the word "on?"

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I want the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FRYE. Will the Chair, before the roll is called, have the Chief Clerk report what the amendment now is?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 437, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out the word "on."

Mr. ALLISON. That is, to concur with the recommendation made by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FRYE. What was the vote just had? Was it not on the motion of the Senator from Kansas to strike out the words "on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the contrary, it was to insert certain language beginning with the word "all."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. If the Senator from Maine will allow me to interrupt him for a moment, I wanted to show the importance of this word and try to impress it on the Senate. I will, however, by unanimous consent, withdraw the call for the yeas and nays, provided the Senator from South Carolina will make his motion to strike out the whole clause; which, of course, I shall vote against.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the order for the yeas and nays will be withdrawn. The Chair hears none. The question is, Will the Senate concur in that part of the amendment not disposed of?

Mr. FRYE. Before the question is put, I want to know what part of that amendment is not disposed of. I want it read in words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read that part of the amendment not yet disposed of.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 437, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to strike out the word "on."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in this amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next reserved amendment will be read.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are no other amendments reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that there are no other reserved amendments.

Mr. BUTLER. Then my motion is in order, and I renew it.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is a reserved amendment in another part of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a reserved amendment, the Chair is now advised.

Mr. COCKRELL. On page 60.

Mr. ALLISON. We have not finished this paragraph yet. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, recommended to strike out all after the word "character," in line 446.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amendment was concurred in. It was not reserved.

Mr. ALLISON. Do the Secretary's minutes so show?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So it appears.

Mr. ALLISON. If those words are out now, as there has been some confusion about it, I ask the Secretary to read the paragraph as it stands now in the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be done.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two and five dollars, and the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable, redeemable, and payable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character:" Provided, That said denominations of one, two, and five dollars may be issued in lieu of silver certificates of larger denominations in the Treasury, and to that extent said certificates of larger denominations shall be canceled and destroyed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 60, line 1467, before the word "thousand," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out the word "ninety" and inserted the word "sixty."

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent, if that be necessary, to insert "seventy-five" instead of "sixty."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is open to amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe that will remove the objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to amend the amendment by striking out "sixty" and inserting "seventy-five;" so as to read:

Protecting public lands: For the protection of public lands from illegal and fraudulent entry or appropriation, $75,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was concurred in.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, I propose to go back to the paragraph on page 19.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee of the Whole have been disposed of. The Senator from South Carolina moves to strike out a clause.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to strike out, on page 19, from line 435 down to and including line 454.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves to strike out the paragraph from line 435 to line 454 inclusive. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Secretary read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

And the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars; and the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable, redeemable, and payable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar, and to restore its legal-tender character:" Provided, That said denominations of one, two, and five dollars may be issued in lieu of silver certificates of larger denominations in the Treasury, and to that extent said certificates of larger denominations shall be canceled and destroyed.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move to insert, after line 1349, the following amendment:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Charles A. Ruffee, from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,350, being the balance due to him for pay as agent of the White Earth agency consolidated, from July 1, 1879, to September 30, 1881, inclusive.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point that that is a deficiency, if anything.

Mr. MCMILLAN. This matter has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, who reported a bill covering it which is now on the Calendar. It has also been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs as an amendment to the pending bill, and that committee reported the amendment, and had it referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that this is subject to objection, as being a private claim.

Mr. COCKRELL. No doubt of that.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to state the facts in regard to this matter, and I think it will strike the Senate as an item that ought to be put in this bill.

Mr. Ruffee was appointed Indian agent at the White Earth agency in Minnesota. The salary of that agency was $1,600 per annum. After his appointment and during his term of office the agencies of Mille-Lac, of Red Lake, and Leech Lake were consolidated with the White Earth Indian agency under the title of "the White Earth agency of Minnesota." That was done under authority of law by the President of the United States. The salary of the consolidated agency was fixed at $2,200 per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the duty of the Chair to inform the Senator that unless he takes an appeal he is not at liberty to debate the question.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I did not know the Chair had decided the question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair held that this was clearly a private claim, the payment to an individual of a specific sum of money.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If the Chair has so decided I suppose I must submit.

Mr. COCKRELL. In line 1483 I move to amend by inserting:

For furnishing transcripts of records and plats and paying therefor, $5,000.

That meets the wishes and requirements.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to add "to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. COCKRELL. That is right.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say with reference to that amendment, that while I agree to it, when we had under consideration the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill it was claimed that the clerical force in the Land Office could be reduced, and we did reduce the clerical force some five or six, and now in this indirect way it is to be restored. I merely want it understood.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be reported as modified.

The SECRETARY. In the clause making appropriation for "reproducing plats of surveys," after the word "dollars," at the end of line 1488, it is proposed to insert:

For furnishing transcripts of records and plats and paying therefor, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. PLUMB. If I were wickedly disposed, I should say that this was a manner of getting around the civil-service law; but I do not say that.

I do not rise for the purpose of objecting to this amendment, but simply for the purpose of saying that I think I know the force now employed in the General Land Office has not work enough to keep it going; that there is an excess of clerical force in that department. Whereas under former administrations there were issued three thousand patents a month, the issues now amount to only about three hundred, and in every way there has been a decrease of the ordinary business of that office, which has served to keep a large number of the employés unemployed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE. On page 59 I move to insert after line 1436:

For gilding in gold the statue of Freedom on the Dome of the Capitol, including base, and the scaffold, to be done under the supervision and direction of the Architect of the Capitol, $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. If I can I reserve the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. MAHONE. The amendment has been recommended by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I believe it is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. It is for gilding in gold. If it was silver I might have been disposed to report it, but I do not like this discrimination. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAHONE. You are not much of a silver man to-night. [Laughter.] The necessity of this is manifest. We are advised that this statue is corroding and that this work is necessary for its proper preservation. We all must admit that it is very necessary, for its appropriate relations to the Capitol. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. Is the amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sees no point of order that can be raised against it.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe the Senator stated that it was reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That makes it in order. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HARRIS. In line 1472, on page 61, I propose to strike out the word "ten," before "thousand," and insert "twenty;" and I will ask the Secretary to read a letter from the Commissioner of the General Land Office, indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1472, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

Expenses of hearings in land entries: For expenses of hearings held by registers and receivers, under instructions from the General Land Office, to determine whether alleged fraudulent entries are of that character or have been made in compliance with law, $20,000.

Mr. HARRIS. That is in accordance with the estimate, I will say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 22, 1886.

SIR: I beg to call your attention to the paragraph in the sundry civil appropriation bill, lines 1468, 1472, reducing the amount of appropriation for "expenses of hearings in land entries," from $20,000, as estimated and as previously appropriated, to $10,000. The expenses necessary to be appropriated for under this head are the expenses of publication of notices and costs of witnesses for the Government. The hearings are ordered upon application of parties to show cause why their entries should be sustained, and it is imperatively necessary both for the protection of claimants and for the interest of the Government that such hearings should be proceeded with. It has heretofore happened that the Government has been unable to go on with these hearings after parties were prepared and witnesses summoned, because of the want of funds to meet costs on the part of the United States. This has resulted in a double expense to private parties and frequently to a duplication of all the expenses of investigation by special agents, cases having to be begun de novo when, as it often occurs, the agents who made the original investigation have left the service or it has been necessary to transfer them to other fields of duty. Meanwhile witnesses have disappeared, and embarrassment to the operations of this department arises on every hand.

The amount estimated for, $20,000, averages barely $200 to a land district, and is insufficient for the needs of the service. The amount appropriated ought to be not less than $30,000, and my estimate of $20,000 was made only because I desired to keep the appropriations down to the lowest limit at which the service could go on in any manner. To further reduce this small sum to $10,000 is to so cripple this office as to render it practically impossible to extend to claimants whose entries have been investigated the privilege of controverting the evidences in possession of the Government upon which their entries are held for cancellation. I earnestly urge that the amount of $20,000 be restored to the bill.

Very respectfully,

WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

Approved:
L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
Chairman of the Committee on Appropriations,
Senate of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. This matter was all submitted to the committee of the House of Representatives, presumably in sympathy with the administration of this office, as it is with the entire administration, and that committee, after a hearing, and presumably for good reasons, made the amount $10,000 in place of $20,000. If the Senator from Tennessee is satisfied that he has information on this point that the amount ought to be $20,000, I shall not oppose his amendment.

It is a little remarkable, I may say, in matters of this kind, in regard to which there has been so much clamor and so much has been said, that the House of Representatives should have so disregarded the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury and the recommendations and solicitations of the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior as to have cut the amount down from $20,000 to $10,000.

Mr. HARRIS. All I have to say on the subject is that I submit this question to the Senate without knowing or caring what has been done elsewhere. The Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office say the public service will be seriously crippled if this appropriation is cut down to $10,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask for the adoption of the following amendment, to be inserted at the end of line 108, page 5:

Five hundred dollars to repair walks and fountain in United States grounds surrounding post-office building in Lincoln, Nebr.

Mr. ALLISON. I find that the Secretary of the Treasury recommends that as absolutely necessary to preserve the grounds.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I reserved the question on the appropriation for the public building at Denver. I do not desire to offer the amendment that I offered in committee, but I desire to offer an amendment which I believe is acceptable to the chairman, namely, strike out, in line 47, the words:

For completion of building under present limit.

And after the word "dollars," in the next line, to add:

Said sum shall be available only when the limit of expenditure fixed by an act entitled "An act to erect a public building at Denver, Colo.," approved May 8, 1882, shall by act of Congress be extended.

I will state why I do that. Should this bill pass, say early at the next session, the money would be available without waiting for the next annual appropriation bill. Otherwise it would not.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TELLER. And then the committee's amendment should be disagreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 47, strike out the words:

For completion of building under present limit.

And after the word "dollars," at the end of line 48, insert:

Said sum shall be available only when the limit of expenditure fixed by an act entitled "An act to erect a public building at Denver, Colo.," approved May 8, 1882, shall by act of Congress be extended.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I desire to say, before the vote is taken on that amendment, that the appropriation is within the present limit.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 2016, on page 83, in the clause making appropriation for pay of the Signal Corps.

Mr. TELLER. We are not through with my proposition, I understand. Having amended the text, should we not now disagree to the amendment to strike out?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that was already the action.

Mr. TELLER. Very well.

Mr. COCKRELL. The provision on page 83, line 2014, is—

Or for the pay and allowances of exceeding four hundred and seventy enlisted men of the Signal Corps.

Unless there is some proviso put in there that might cause an immediate discharge of a number of enlisted men who have been regularly enlisted for the term of five years, and who may be at distant stations. I propose, in accordance with the suggestion made by the Secretary of War, that an amendment be added there after the word "Corps" to this effect:

And there shall be no new enlistments or re-enlistments in the Signal Corps until the number of privates is reduced below two hundred and ninety, and thereafter there shall not be in the corps more than four hundred and seventy men.

I understand that according to the ratio of decrease and enlistment in the service about one hundred changes occur each year by expiration of enlistment, discharge, death, and so on. So it will only take three or four months for the service to be reduced in regular order down to four hundred and seventy, without doing injustice to any one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri will send up his amendment in writing.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that I will not object to this amendment going in, but I want to reserve the right, if I have anything to do with the future fate of this bill, to examine it further; and, if I find that there is some mistake about it, I want the privilege of correcting it in conference.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. I make that statement, because it is rather an extraordinary thing to do. I would be glad to reserve the right to overlook the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the amendment agreed to in line 2016 it is proposed to insert:

And there shall be no new enlistment in the Signal Corps until the number of privates is reduced below two hundred and ninety; and thereafter there shall not be in the corps more than four hundred and seventy men.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer the following amendment, to come in on page 105, after line 2572:

For payment of sixty-five printers regularly employed on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, $90 each, for time unemployed during the present session, $5,850.

Mr. ALLISON. I want to suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that that is a proper thing for the deficiency bill, for if it is anything it is a deficiency for the last fiscal year. I hope the Senator will not offer it on this bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. If I can have any assurance from the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that it has received or will receive the consideration of his committee I shall accept his suggestion. I introduced it as an amendment to the sundry civil bill, and as such it went to the Committee on Printing and received their approbation.

Mr. ALLISON. I can assure the Senator it has received already quite a considerable consideration at the hands of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MANDERSON. Favorably?

Mr. ALLISON. We had it in and out once or twice. We have had a great deal of discussion concerning it; but I think its present status is that it is not in the bill.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am afraid if offered to the deficiency bill that it would be subject to a point of order that will not be raised here. It is offered as an amendment to the sundry civil bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I will agree for one to waive the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. Let there be unanimous consent that this amendment may stand in relation to the deficiency bill as it now stands in relation to this bill.

Mr. HALE. The invariable practice of the Committee on Appropriations is where an amendment is referred to that committee to be considered in connection with the sundry civil bill it is proper as a deficiency to consider it on that bill and to consider that it is not subject to the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska withdraw his amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. No point of order shall be made.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask unanimous consent that the point of order shall not be made when I offer the amendment to the deficiency bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is understood.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to amend, on page 50, after line 1211, by inserting:

For the establishment of a salmon hatchery upon the Columbia River, its tributaries, or their branches, and for the current expenses of the same for one year, $15,000.

The question being put on the amendment, the Chair declared that the "noes" appeared to prevail.

Mr. DOLPH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. PLUMB (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], and withdraw my vote.

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. KENNA. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR] is paired on this question with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—29.

Blair,	Harrison,	Manderson,	Teller,
Butler,	Hawley,	Miller,	Van Wyck,
Call,	Hearst,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vest,
Dolph,	Hoar,	Ransom,	Walthall,
Evarts,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Iowa.
Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Sawyer,
George,	McMillan,	Sewell,
Gray,	Mahone,	Spooner,

NAYS—17.

Allison,	Coke,	Harris,	Sherman,
Beck,	Dawes,	Kenna,	Whitthorne.
Berry,	Gibson,	McPherson,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Maxey,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Platt,

ABSENT—30.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Brown,	Eustis,	Morrill,	Stanford,
Camden,	Fair,	Palmer,	Vance,
Cameron,	Hampton,	Payne,	Voorhees,
Chace,	Ingalls,	Pike,	Wilson of Md.
Colquitt,	Jones of Florida,	Plumb,
Conger,	Logan,	Pugh,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. On page 60, line 1452, I move to strike out of that paragraph all succeeding the word "dollars."

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

All fees collected by registers or receivers, from any source whatever, which would increase their salaries beyond $3,000 each a year, shall be covered into the Treasury.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state briefly in regard to it that this provision does not work a limitation upon the salaries of receivers. The only possible effect of it is to take away from them the fees which are paid by contestants in land contests, and which now they use to pay for clerk-hire for the doing of the work necessary to carry on the contests. In all the land districts of the United States where there are many contests of entries the work is behind. If this provision remains in the bill the contests can not be heard, and they are not only burdensome to claimants themselves, but they result in the holding of a very large amount of public land from settlement and use because of the doubt about the title.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to say one word and then offer an additional amendment.

The Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasurer of the United States wrote me a day or two ago that if the provision with reference to small silver certificates should prevail the issue and distribution of these certificates would be from the subtreasury in New York, and that it would be absolutely necessary to increase to a small extent the clerical force there. I ask now to offer an amendment increasing the clerical force, after line 1083, by inserting:

For additional clerical force for the assistant treasurer at New York, $6,400, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. 3186) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2871) for the relief of Semon, Bache & Co., reported it without amendment.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 3186) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent—I suppose there will be no objection—to take up the general deficiency appropriation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9726) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that then the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be first acted on as recited in the reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that suggestion, and that order is agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BLAIR. I desire to say to the Senate that on Monday morning I will ask part of the morning hour to attend to pension legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 10 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, July 26, 1886, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 24, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by Rev. Dr. BULLOCK, of Washington, D. C.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FURLOUGHS, INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior in reply to a resolution of the House asking for information in regard to leaves of absence and furloughs of employés in that Department; which was referred to the Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WALLACE, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. OWEN, until Tuesday next, on account of sickness.

To Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, until Monday.

To Mr. MCKINLEY, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, for four days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 901) to grant to the Astoria and Winnemucca Railroad Company the right to construct bridges over navigable waters.

VETO MESSAGE—MARY ANDERSON.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted a report from that committee upon the bill (H. R. 7436) granting a pension to Mary Anderson, vetoed by the President; which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Invalid Pension, submitted the following report:

[To accompany bill H. R. 7436 and Ex. Doc. 322.]

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, on a review of the case, would submit the following statement of the facts:

The claimant is the widow of Richard Anderson, who at the time of his death was receiving a pension on account of chronic diarrhea contracted in the service. On the day of his death he was at Sparta, Wis., by order of the Commissioner of Pensions, for examination by a board of surgeons on his application for an increase of pension. The surgeon's report in relation to his condition on that day is as follows, to wit:

"Soldier's pulse soft and compressible; tongue red, smooth, and glossy, with deep lines extending through and over it; muscles soft and flabby; abdomen at present distended and tympanitic, with some tenderness upon pressure; that there is at present considerable gaseous rumbling; find external hemorrhoids; that soldier appears poverty stricken, and evidently can not labor at all. His hands are soft, and he states that he has almost lost all control of his bowels, which statement the examining surgeons credit from the condition of his clothing and person, and rate him total third grade."

This shows a pitiable condition indeed; a condition resulting from his faithful service in the defense of his country, for his military record shows that he was a brave and faithful soldier during the whole war of the rebellion.

Your committee are reliably informed that said Richard Anderson was and had been for about five years before the commencement of the war a soldier in the regular Army of the United States, and at the breaking out of the rebellion was stationed in Texas, under the command of General Twiggs; that when that officer joined the rebellion, Anderson with many other private soldiers refused to do likewise, and worked their way north, and reported to the United States military authorities, and served from that time faithfully in the Army of the United States until peace was declared.

The President is of opinion that the circumstances indicate that Anderson committed suicide. In this we are of opinion, first, that there is no evidence even in the circumstances to indicate that such was the case, and, second, if it is true that he committed suicide, it was under such circumstances as to show that he was in irresponsible condition of mind caused by his disease contracted in the service and in the line of duty.

That there is no circumstance indicating suicide we submit is established from the facts known and set forth in the original report of this committee. That report sets forth that—

"He was, in consequence of his disability, so weak at the time he started to Sparta as to make it unsafe for him to go alone. He arrived in Sparta in the evening, reported to the examining surgeons at 9 p. m. for examination, in order to take the morning train home. When the examination had taken place it was so late that the hotels had been closed, and he went to the depot of the railroad and was in the room of the night operator, where he sat for a few moments; having occasion to go out some time in the night, in the morning he was found dead, supposed to have been struck by a passing freight train."

This is all that is known of the manner of his death. Is there anything in these circumstances that indicate suicide? We think not. He was, as shown by the surgeon's report, very weak and sick, in a most deplorable condition. Is it not much easier to believe that his death was caused by his condition rendering him unable to get out of the way—a condition which undoubtedly existed, and which originated in the service in the line of duty, and which, we think, was the cause of his death by rendering him incapable of taking care of himself while obeying the order of the Pension Office in presenting himself before the surgeons at Sparta for examination.

Second. If the President is right in his supposition of the cause of death, we think the case is still stronger for the granting of a pension, and it appears to your committee that under the unbroken decisions of the Secretary of the Interior, the Pension Office under such circumstances should have granted the application of claimant for a pension. The man was in such physical condition as to show that his mind was enfeebled and probably dethroned; that suicide, if it occurred, was the act of a diseased mind, caused by a terribly diseased and enfeebled body. Claimant is entitled to this presumption, if presumptions are to be indulged in.

The following decisions of the Interior Department will show the usual rulings of the Government in relation to presumption of facts, to wit: Pension laws should be construed and executed in the liberal and generous spirit which prompted their enactment, and when doubts can not be resolved by evidence, presumptions should incline towards the claimants; following this view in the case of a man who was found dead in his tent with a bullet wound in the head, the fact that he committed suicide can not be presumed, it must be proved before the claim of his widow for pension can be rejected. (Vimont, Mary Jane, application No. 65251; Harlan, James, Secretary, January 17, 1866, vol. 1, page 50; Benner, Mary A., application No. 137738; Delano, C., Secretary, January 29, 1874, vol. 3, page 94); and so if it is presumed that he committed suicide, it should under the circumstances in this case be presumed that his disease made him insane.

The claimant and her family of eight little children are, as the message of the President admits, in a pitiable condition. He says: "His wife and family present pitiable objects for sympathy." As your committee are still of the opinion that the death of the soldier is fairly attributable to his military service; that his disease, contracted in the service, was such that it either rendered him too weak to avoid destruction by the passing train, or deprived him of reason whereby he, in a demented or crazy condition of mind, threw himself under the train, and that if his death had thus occurred he could not have long survived.

The committee believe that the pitiable condition of the claimant should be relieved, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass notwithstanding the objections of the President.

[House Ex. Doc. No. 322. Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

Message from the President of the United States, returning House bill No. 7436, with his objections thereto.

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith without approval House bill No. 7436, entitled "An act to grant a pension to Mary Anderson."

This claimant is the widow of Richard Anderson, who at the time of his death was receiving a pension on account of chronic diarrhea contracted in the service.

On the 7th day of February, 1882, the deceased pensioner went to Sparta, in the State of Wisconsin, to be examined for an increase of his pension. He called on the surgeon and was examined, and the next morning was found beheaded on the railroad track under such circumstances as indicated suicide.

The claim of the widow was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the cause of the death of her husband was in no way connected with his military service.

His wife and family present pitiable objects for sympathy, but I am unable to see how they have any claim for a pension.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

[H. R. 7436. Forty-ninth Congress, first session.]

An act to grant a pension to Mary Anderson.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary Anderson, widow of Richard Anderson, late a private in Company I of the Seventeenth Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry.

JOHN G. CARLISLE,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.
JOHN SHERMAN,
President of the Senate pro tempore.

I certify that this act originated in the House of Representatives.
Attest:

JNO. B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the regular order.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committe of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider the special order fixed for to-day, the bill providing for an increase of the naval establishment.

Mr. COBB. I want to raise the question of consideration upon that bill with a view to taking up the Northern Pacific land grant.

Mr. RANDALL. The Committee on the Public Lands will have to-night.

Mr. COBB. I raise the question of consideration.

The SPEAKER. The question of consideration can not be raised in that way to defeat the consideration of this bill. The only way to do that is to refuse to agree to the motion to go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question in connection with this matter [cries of "Regular order!"] whether or not under the rules of the House the question of land forfeitures may not be taken up at any time [cries of "Regular order!"], and the naval bill has only to-day?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded on all sides of the House.

The motion of Mr. HERBERT was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 88, noes 27.

Mr. PAYSON. Before the House formally resolves itself into Committee of the Whole, I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PAYSON. Has the Committee on Rules reported any resolution giving the Committee on Public Lands the session for this evening?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. PAYSON. I understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania to say that the Committee on the Public Lands would have to-night.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not say the Committee on Rules had reported it back; but the House by its vote on yesterday fixed to-night for that committee.

Mr. PAYSON. But I understand it requires a report from the Committee on Rules.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not say it had been reported.

Mr. PAYSON. I know the gentleman did not state that, but I understood him to say that the committee would have to-night.

Mr. RANDALL. I said so. The House has fixed this evening by its vote on yesterday for that business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the Committee on Rules could make no change in the resolution which instructed them to do a certain thing. If there be no objection, the order will be made now.

Mr. PAYSON. My inquiry was whether the committee had or had not acted in pursuance of the order of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again state that the Committee on Rules, if they had a meeting, could do no more than report back the resolution under the instructions.

Mr. RANDALL. The understanding was that at some time during the day the Committee on Rules would obey the order of the House.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Why not do it now?

The SPEAKER. It will be done some time during the day.

INCREASE OF NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

The House, in obedience to the vote just taken, resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill which is a made a special order for to-day.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6664) to increase the naval establishment.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, the development in the art of making war at sea in the last twenty years is simply wonderful.

We all remember the bombardment of Alexandria by the British fleet in 1882. Stone forts like ours at Boston and New York afforded no protection. Before modern artillery they were as if made of cardboard.

Two years ago, in the Minn River, China, the Chinese fleet was attacked by the French under Admiral Courbet. The Chinese had eleven vessels, mounting forty-five guns. The French fleet was about twice as strong. It was thoroughly modern—ships, guns, and torpedoes. The Chinese were anchored under their forts.

Lieutenant Osterhaus, who witnessed the battle, in his report, says:

In less than half an hour the entire Chinese fleet was destroyed, and all that could be seen of the fine fleet were hulks in flames or sunken vessels.

It was simply a massacre. The loss of the French was seven men. The loss of the Chinese from eight hundred to fifteen hundred.

Against such a fleet as the French had in that battle our ships now in commission would be utterly worthless.

As a fair sample of our Navy I may state that the Alliance, one of the eight wooden ships suddenly built when we were in dispute with Spain about the Virginius affair in 1873, recently refitted and furnished with new engines, has just reported her speed as 9 knots an hour. A first-class modern cruiser makes 18 knots. Even an armored vessel makes 16 and 17. In all our Navy we have but one that makes 13 knots—the Trenton.

The truth is that our Navy could neither run away nor fight. We have not afloat a single high-power gun—not a gun that could pierce the armor of the Brazilian steamer Riachuelo. This vessel carries four 9-inch and four smaller modern breech-loading rifles. She is protected by armor 10 to 11 inches thick and makes over 16 knots an hour.

At sea, against any of our vessels or all of them, she could choose absolutely her own distance for battle. It is humiliating to say it, but if all this old navy of ours were drawn up in battle array in mid-ocean and confronted by the Riachuelo it is doubtful whether a single vessel bearing the American flag would ever get into port. And if in the mêlée and the chase which followed some ship by leaving its fellows should escape into port, the Brazilian could follow and destroy it under the guns of any fort we have. We have not even a safe harbor of refuge for a fleeing vessel.

Mr. Chairman, your committee having this matter in charge have been deeply impressed with the defenseless condition of our country. If we could believe that the days of war had passed we would be glad to abolish our Naval Academy, discharge our naval officers, on some terms that would be just to them, make a bonfire of such of our vessels as we could not sell, and go home and tell our constituents we had economized. For one, I believe unless we are prepared to take steps to render our Navy more efficient, which it is not now either for purposes of peace or war, we ought to abolish it.

Your committee were not ready to recommend this step, so we framed with care a bill to increase our naval establishment and brought it into this House on the 10th of March.

Every President this Government ever had, from Washington down to the present day, recognized the necessity of putting the country in a condition to resist attacks by sea. I will not stop to quote from them all.

In his annual message December 2, 1834, Andrew Jackson said:

The wide seas which separate us from other governments must of necessity be the theater on which an enemy will aim to assail us; and unless we are prepared to meet him on this element we can not be said to possess the power requisite to repel or prevent aggressions. We can not, therefore, watch with too much attention this arm of our defense or cherish with too much care the means by which it can possess the necessary efficiency and extension.

Here is Jackson advising Congress to "cherish" the Navy in order that we may be prepared to "repel or prevent aggressions," and here we have had a distinguished gentleman on this floor arguing that we ought not to consider a bill to increase that Navy even in its present pitiable plight, because "we do not represent a timid people." Let me commend also to the consideration of this House the words of President Tyler, who in his first annual message said:

It is due not only to the honor but to the security of the people of the United States that no nation should be permitted to invade our waters at pleasure and subject our towns and villages to conflagration or pillage. Economy in all branches of the public service is due from all the public agents of the people, but parsimony alone could suggest the withholding of the necessary means for the protection of our domestic firesides from invasion and our national honor from disgrace. I would most earnestly recommend to Congress to abstain from all appropriations for objects not absolutely necessary, but I take upon myself without a moment of hesitancy all the responsibility of recommending the increase and prompt equipment of that gallant Navy which has lighted up every sea with its victories and spread an imperishable glory over the country.

All our recent Presidents have recommended the increase of our naval establishment. President Cleveland is very emphatic. He says in his message:

All must admit the importance of an effective navy to a nation like ours, having such an extended seacoast to protect. And yet we have not a single vessel of war that could keep the seas against a first-class vessel of any important power. Such a condition ought not longer to continue. The nation that can not resist aggression is constantly exposed to it. Its foreign policy is of necessity weak, and its negotiations are conducted with disadvantage, because it is not in condition to enforce the terms dictated by its sense of right and justice.

The recent patriotic letter of our great statesman Mr. Tilden, too, is fresh in our minds.

But it is urged with great persistency that we ought not to expend money in building a navy because improvements are constantly being made in the material of war.

But ships to go to sea will always be necessary. In shape there has been little change since the days of the Phenicians. We build them stronger and larger, but the limit of practicable size seems to have been reached and passed long ago in the Great Eastern. We build them of better material, but are we now to stand still until some other substance shall supplant steel? Improvements are still going on in the application of motive power, but what gentleman here is willing to leave our seacoast undefended while he waits for something to supersede steam?

Again, guns as offensive weapons, heavy guns for long range and lighter guns for rapid firing at close quarters, must always be in use. Torpedoes may and I think will become more effective for some purposes, but guns will probably never be superseded. In fact there has, strictly speaking, been no revolution in the art of war, simply a development; and in the opinion of the best authorities the advance has reached a point beyond which the development is not likely to be so rapid as in the past.

But if this argument, that we must not build ships and guns and torpedoes at this time because the future will develop something superior to what we know of at present, is good now it will always be good; for improvements will continue till human ingenuity shall fail. Washington, Adams, Madison, Monroe, Jackson, Polk, and Pierce listened to no such argument as this. They waited not on other nations, but took the lead in developing and improving ships and guns and fortifications. They held themselves always in readiness to defend and maintain the rights of our fellow-citizens, native and adopted, at home and abroad.

What American is there who does not remember with pride how in 1853 the gallant Captain Ingraham saved Martin Kostza from an Austrian prison? When the liberties of this foreigner, who was not even an adopted citizen, but had simply declared his intention to become such, were endangered, there was an American ship to offer him refuge and the American flag to welcome and protect him.

It was the old Democratic idea that while a large standing army was dangerous to the liberties of the citizen, an efficient navy was the right arm of the nation.

It was its broad policy, its bold aggressiveness, its ever readiness, with the will and the means to defend our rights, that attracted to the standard of Democracy equally the generous youth of the land and the liberty-loving foreigner who sought our shores. If we who belong to this grand old party were looking no further than to party advantage, the same elements are with us to-day and the same reasons would impel us to a similar policy.

But, Mr. Chairman, this is not and ought not to be made a party question. I have seen some indications here that there was a disposition on the part of a few gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber to put impediments in the way of this bill in order, as it occurred to me, that party capital might be made by reason of a failure of the Democratic majority here to answer the demands of the country; but, sir, I can not believe that any such motives will actuate gentlemen, now that the question is up for consideration. This bill is not for party, but for the country—a bill for the "common defense"—the great purpose for which the Union of these States was formed. It is a reasonable bill and both sides must be for it. The Republicans have been demanding an increase of our naval establishment, they claim to be friends of the Navy; and as for Democrats, they certainly will not desert the traditions of their party.

I have said, sir, that this bill was reasonable. It provides for a very moderate increase. Our Government has never sought to have the largest navy in the world. Our insulated position always gave us advantages which rendered this unnecessary; but it was deemed essential by the statesmen of the past that we should keep pace with all the improvements in maritime warfare, that our ships should be among the best that floated, that our guns should be equal to any in the world, and that we should demonstrate our capacity rapidly to increase our Navy to any required extent. All this we accomplished.

It is now just thirty years ago since we put in commission four ships which with their guns were superior to anything that floated—the Wabash, the Merrimac, the Niagara, and Minnesota. The Wabash went to England and became the sensation of the day. English sailors and merchants and ship-builders crowded her decks.

The Prince of Wales came down to see the vessel and the guns which proclaimed that America was foremost among nations—not in the number, but in the character of her ships and their armament.

Why should we abandon the policy approved by the statesmen of the past? What security have we against the recurrence of war?

Our true policy is peace, but a defenseless nation often finds it difficult to maintain its neutrality in time of war. It was the violation of our rights as a neutral that forced us into the war of 1812. In case of war now between Great Britain and any other great maritime power our immense carrying trade, most of which is at present in foreign bottoms, would seek our flag, and I ask gentlemen to think—how could we protect it without a navy?

Sir, even while I speak there are unsettled questions with Canadian fishermen. These questions are not without their dangers. To add to the complication the English doubtless feel some offense at the sympathy shown by Americans for the Irish in their struggle for home rule.

And it was only last year we had occasion to use our Navy on the Isthmus of Panama. Great Britain claims treaty rights and Frenchmen have interests there. What if France or England had forbidden our interference and war had resulted? Sir, it is not too much to say that our Navy would go down before that of France or England or Germany or Italy in half an hour, like that of China before Admiral Courbet.

War in this age of steam is short, sharp, and terrible. Austria was defeated at Sadowa, seventeen days after her emperor had issued his war manifesto. Napoleon III surrendered himself with one hundred thousand men at Sedan within forty-seven days after he had declared war against Prussia.

If a naval descent upon our coast cities were planned it would come almost like the lightning. It would be upon us before breakfast.

Sir, I can not understand gentlemen who shut their eyes upon the lessons of experience and philosophize themselves into the belief that war will never come again.

Twenty-six years ago I listened to a great orator theorizing in that manner. He was the most eloquent man I ever heard. He stood by a cotton bale, which was on end before him, as he spoke. He was arguing that secession would be peaceable; that there would be no war; that Europe could not afford to let the North coerce the South. After discoursing eloquently upon the distress that would come upon the industrial world if the supply of cotton should be cut off by a blockade he brought his hand down upon it and proclaimed with triumphant emphasis, "This cotton bale will command the peace."

Within four years and a half mighty armies had swept over the spot where he spoke, leaving death, desolation, and despair behind them, and the great orator had sunk broken-hearted into his grave.

The old Democratic idea, as expressed by James K. Polk, was that our Navy should be increased in proportion "to the growing interests to be protected" by it.

Let us contrast our present expenditures with those made thirty years ago for the Navy.

In 1856 our population was 27,000,000, our exports and imports combined six hundred and twenty-five millions, and our wealth eleven and a half billions of dollars. That was the day of wooden ships and cast-iron guns. Our expenditures for the Navy in that year were $14,074,000. And this was not an exceptional expenditure. The appropriations for the Navy were more than fourteen millions in 1858 and more than fourteen millions in 1859.

Now in this day of steel ships and steel guns, incalculably more expensive, with a population of 55,000,000, with exports and imports combined amounting to thirteen hundred and seventy-two millions, and wealth equal to $54,000,000,000—in other words, when our population has more than doubled, our exports and imports more than doubled, and our wealth quintupled, we have just passed in the House a bill appropriating for the expenses of the Navy less than $13,000,000.

If we should carry out President Polk's idea and increase our naval establishment in proportion to the magnitude of the interests to be protected (and certainly a due proportion of all this increase is in the cities on our coast), we should spend on the Navy more than $28,000,000. This would give us for the increase of the naval establishment $15,000,000 per annum.

Sir, it would be an easy matter to put our Navy back where it belongs, to give it that place among the navies of the world assigned to it by the wise statesmanship of the past. We have but to make moderate appropriations from an overflowing treasury, avail ourselves of the experience of other nations, the results of which are all at hand, and rely on the enterprise and talent of our people. In no other field has American genius shone more conspicuous than in fashioning material of war. Look back at some of its achievements.

In 1861 the confederates, almost without workshops, armored the Virginia, and hearing of the progress of the work on that vessel, in ninety days the Federals built the Monitor to match it.

The noise of the conflict between these two vessels in Hampton Roads reverberated around the world and as the echoes came back to us they were mingled with the sound of the hammers that had been set going in the workshops of Europe. From these two American inventions and from the development of the torpedo by the confederates have come the modern ship of war and the modern torpedo. The Yankee has make the best pistols, the best small-arms, and the best rapid-firing guns in the world, the Gatling and the Hotchkiss. And see what we have already accomplished in ordnance here at the navy-yard in Washington. We have only just begun, and yet we are making guns which are not copies of, but improvements upon, the best guns in the world. The highest velocity ever imparted to a projectile from a 6-inch gun was obtained from a piece tested at Annapolis on the 30th of last March.

If we are ever to undertake the work of rehabilitating our Navy we ought to begin it now, in a time of profound peace. Every step ought to be taken with great care and deliberation. The modern vessel, like the modern gun, is a work of high art. To plan it in detail is a great labor and requires time and patience; to build it requires time and patient labor.

The act of March 3, 1883, authorized the construction of three cruisers and a dispatch boat. These were the first modern vessels ordered by Congress. Secretary Chandler began at once to devise them. On the 28th of April he advertised for offers. The contracts were closed in July, 1883, and the vessels were to be built all within eighteen months, and still these ships (the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin) are not completed. They will all, however, be ready for sea before March next—that is, within four years from the passage of the act authorizing them. The $186,000 necessary to their completion is carried in the annual appropriation bill. The delays in the construction of these ships, those which occurred before the failure of the contractor, resulted from alteration of plans after the vessels were begun. This has been a frequent cause of delay in the construction of such vessels.

A careful study of the history of recent naval ship-building in England shows that delays in the construction of modern vessels are inevitable. They occur if not in maturing plans, then certainly afterward in altering them. The Ravensworth report sets this forth clearly.

The act of March, 1885, authorized the construction of two more cruisers and two gunboats and appropriated for that purpose $1,895,000. With the experience before him gained from the construction of the Boston, Chicago, Atlanta, and Dolphin the new Secretary went very carefully to work. His purpose has been to perfect plans before giving out work. He believes it is better that delays should occur before than after construction begins, and he hopes by taking great pains with plans to avoid the necessity for alterations. It therefore results that invitations for proposals have not yet been advertised. Such advertisements, however, will be out in a few days. One of these vessels the Secretary proposes to build after the plans of the Nani-wa-kan, a 4,000-ton cruiser, recently built by an English firm for the Japanese Government. This vessel is the fastest of her class in the world, making 18.9 knots an hour. It is the last and best result of twenty years of costly experience in the building of metal ships in England. The Secretary bought from the builder the plans and working drawings all complete.

With one accord American ship-builders and their designers, who have examined these plans approve the project, and they believe that, having these plans to work from, we will hereafter improve upon them. Utilizing information gained from the experience of other nations is precisely what we have already done in our Ordnance Bureau, and it is the theory upon which the Navy Department has always proceeded—that to be abreast of the times we should have accurate knowledge of all improvements abroad. It is what every engine-builder and ship-builder in this country does. Prior to 1882 each bureau in the Navy Department obtained this information for itself. March 23, 1882, Secretary Hunt established the office of Naval Intelligence. Secretary Chandler continued and fostered it, and Secretary Whitney has still further utilized it.

I feel sure that the result will vindicate the wisdom of the Secretary's course.

Your committee does not believe, as I have before said, that we are called upon to build a navy equal to that of England or France. At the same time we should not utterly disregard what has been done and is doing elsewhere. We do not believe we have yet passed entirely beyond the wisdom of President Polk, who in his first annual message December 2, 1845, said:

> Considering an increased naval force, and especially of steam-vessels, corresponding with our growth and importance as a nation and proportioned to the increased and increasing naval power of other nations of vast importance as regards our safety and the great and growing interests to be protected by it, I recommend the subject to the favorable consideration of Congress.

Let us look a moment at the fleets of other nations. Great Britain has available, armored and unarmored vessels, including torpedo boats and all other classes:

This list comprises only those now available for service—not those that are being built nor those unserviceable. And still these nations are building other vessels.

When the committee had decided to recommend a further increase the next question was what vessels we should recommend and how should we build them. None of us claim to be experts. So we took the testimony of ship-builders and naval officers and of the Secretary of the Navy, and we consulted the best authorities. The vessels we recommend the construction of are those in favor of which we found a decided preponderance of testimony. I think I may say the committee were all agreed as to the class of vessels we should construct.

Since the bill was reported, finding that the appropriation proposed was larger than many members of this House were willing to vote for, and that the number of vessels proposed was greater than the House seemed disposed to authorize, the committee have empowered me to propose a substitute. Every member of the committee agrees, as I understand it, that every vessel mentioned in the substitute ought to be built; that they all should be constructed in the manner provided in the substitute. In other words, we all agree on all that is in the substitute, but the minority think that we should build more vessels.

In explanation of the action of the majority I have this to say: We have not changed our views. It is, I am sure, the individual opinion of each of us that it would have been well to pass the bill as originally reported. But we recognize the fact that as a committee we are but the organ of the House, and that it is our duty when principle is not involved, and the question is one simply of the amount of money to be expended on an enterprise, to frame a bill that will accord with the sentiment of the House. This we have done willingly and without reservation because we most sincerely desire to increase our naval establishment.

I appeal most earnestly to every friend of the Navy on this floor, Democrat and Republican, to every one who really desires to increase the Navy, to stand by the committee on these amendments and on this bill. Remember that there is not a ship or a boat in the substitute that does not have the assent of every member of the committee, Democrat and Republican. Every one here knows that at this stage of the session and in the present temper of the House it will be an easy matter, if members so desire, to defeat the bill by loading it down with amendments. I sincerely trust that the friends of the measure will see to it that this is not done. It can be defeated by parliamentary tactics, but the country will know who does it. If Democrats defeat it the responsibility will be on them. If Republicans do it they must take the responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not take time here to repeat what is said in the report in explanation of the class of ships we recommend. But in view of what was said by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] about the monitors of which we recommend the completion, I beg the indulgence of the House while I speak briefly to that point.

For myself I am free to say I began the investigation of the question what to do with these monitors with a prejudice against them. They had been begun as I believed without authority of law, and nearly $5,000,000 had been expended on them altogether. But we were all determined to do what was best and cheapest for the Government if we could ascertain it, and we concluded that as so much money had been expended upon them and as they would make effective coast-defense vessels when clad with modern armor, it was best to complete them. We did not conclude they would be the "finest of their class," as the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] stated in his speech on the naval appropriation bill. Here is what the gentleman said:

> Now, these much-abused vessels, these double-turreted monitors, the construction of which was commenced in 1874 and has been dragging along from that time to this with occasionally a small appropriation, and often none—these ships are to-day conceded by Secretary Whitney and the officers of the Navy Department to be the best ships of their class in the world. The Secretary of the Navy in his testimony before the Naval Committee concedes that these vessels, which have been thus shamefully treated for years, and referred to as worthless, as not fit to finish, are the finest of their class.

The gentleman is mistaken and must have quoted from memory. What the Secretary did say was as follows:

> By the CHAIRMAN:
> Q. Give us your opinion as to whether this Congress ought to appropriate money to complete these monitors.
>
> A. It would be my opinion that they ought. It was not my opinion originally when I first began to think about it. I think there has been considerable prejudice against these ships. They have been taken up piecemeal and carried on by little contracts and drawn on through a great many years, and I don't think perhaps in a business-like way. I think there is some prejudice against them from that. When you think what we have spent on those ships——
> By Mr. HARMER:
> Q. You base your opinion upon what their usefulness would be to the Navy?
>
> A. Yes, sir. We have already spent nearly $5,000,000, and they require about four million two hundred and odd thousand to complete. So, of course, it is not as if it were an original question.
> By Mr. NORWOOD:
> Q. How many ships?
> A. Five. As I have said, the Miantonomoh is nearly completed. She only requires about $200,000, and that entirely for her armament. I don't suppose for the expenditure of $4,000,000 you could expect to get the same amount of fighting qualities anyway other than by completing those ships, and that I suppose is about what the question is just now.
>
> By Mr. THOMAS:
> Q. Before you leave the Miantonomoh I would like to ask you if you have made a personal examination of these vessels, especially the Puritan.
>
> A. No; I have not.
> Q. You have examined the Miantonomoh?
>
> A. Yes, sir.
> Q. For the purposes for which they are intended, do you not regard them, if completed according to your proposed plan, as first-class vessels?
>
> A. I suppose they would be quite formidable vessels.
> Q. Would be successful vessels, as far as one can judge now, for coast and harbor defense?
> A. I should suppose so.

So here we see that the Secretary was distinctly invited by Mr. Thomas to say they would be "first-class vessels" and that he distinctly refused to say so, but answered, "I suppose they would be quite formidable vessels."

The views of the Secretary were shared by the majority of the committee. We recommend the completion of these monitors, not as an original question but because we believe that they will be quite formidable and effective coast-defense vessels. We may believe they were begun without authority of law, but we can not now remedy that. Neither is it profitable to discuss the question whether the work was extravagantly done. Nearly $5,000,000 have been expended upon them.

We think it economy to complete them. They will present a small surface as a target, they are admirable gun-platforms, and will carry heavy guns.

The turret system is still in favor. The British are now building two turreted ships, the Nile and the Trafalgar, but the turrets are different from those of our monitors, and in many other respects they are on widely different principles. We could never recommend, and not a single person that I know of has proposed, we should build new vessels like these monitors. But the overwhelming sentiment of naval officers is that as they are started it is economy to complete them; and such is the opinion of the naval boards which have examined them. There is one vessel in the substitute which was not in the original bill—the pneumatic torpedo cruiser. This is not explained in the report, and it is too important for me to pass it by. The inventor of the pneumatic gun seems to have solved the problem of projecting a dynamite bomb from a gun. It is done by using instead of powder compressed air as the motive power. The explosive shock from powder explodes the dynamite in the gun, and therefore powder can not be successfully used to propel bombs containing large charges of dynamite.

The pneumatic gun overcomes this difficulty, and the contractor guarantees to throw 200 pounds of dynamite at least a mile. The radius of destruction of such a bomb is claimed to be about 33 feet; that is, it is claimed that such a bomb exploding in the water within 33 feet of a vessel will destroy it. It is also claimed that compressed air is a more uniform motive power than powder; that the bomb thus thrown is superior to and cheaper than the Whitehead or any other torpedo, and the company guarantees that the boat it is to construct will make 20 knots per hour.

If these claims be well founded, and they seem to be, this pneumatic gun will become a leading feature in coast defenses. But it is believed that nothing will ever supersede entirely the necessity of having ships and guns for a navy. The substitute we offer for the bill carries only $3,500,000. It must be remembered that to plan and construct the vessels we propose will require nearly or quite four years. So that in estimating the cost of the vessels included in our proposed bill we must divide the appropriations into four parts. The limit to the final cost of the vessels the substitute carries is as follows:

First. Two sea-going armored vessels, to cost not more than $2,500,000 each	$5,000,000
Second. One protected double-bottom cruiser	1,500,000
Third. One first-class torpedo boat	100,000
Fourth. For the completion of the Puritan, Amphitrite, Monadnock, and Terror	3,178,046
Fifth. One dynamite pneumatic cruiser	350,000
Present bill	10,128,046
Add for the four vessels, under act of 1885, necessary to complete	1,100,000
Total necessary for vessels under both acts	11,228,046

The estimate of the chief of the Bureau of Ordnance for the armament of all the vessels in the bill, for the Miantonomoh, for which no armament has been provided, and for the four vessels under the act of 1885, likewise without any appropriation for armament, is as follows:

Vessels authorized by act of March 3, 1885:
One cruiser (type of the Naniwa-kan)	$380,000
One cruiser, ordinary type, between 3,000 and 5,000 tons	315,000
One gunboat, 1,700 tons	190,000
One gunboat, 800 tons	90,000
The vessels now proposed:
Two armored vessels carrying each four 10-inch and seven 6-inch guns	1,236,700
One large cruiser (say 6,000 tons) carrying four 10-inch and twelve 6-inch guns	625,000
Dynamite gunboat, secondary battery only, no torpedoes	62,600
Five monitors, including the Puritan	1,735,000
Total for all vessels authorized, including those in this bill	4,634,300

This includes main and secondary batteries, torpedo outfits, searchlights, defense-nets, and equipments complete.

Adding together the estimates required to complete all the ships I have mentioned and all their armaments and we have the sum of $15,862,346 to be spent in four years, which is less than four millions per annum. This is a liberal and an outside estimate, for the reason that if we pass this bill we shall allow our old ships to drop out. We will spend on them less money for repairs, and the annual appropriation bill, excepting out of it the items here estimated, would be less than thirteen millions. But counting it at thirteen millions and adding the four millions each year, the annual appropriations for all purposes of the Navy need not exceed seventeen millions. Even if we add, to be spent during these four years, one million for plant and another for torpedoes, our annual bill for four years would be only seventeen and one-half millions. The appropriation for 1876, ten years ago, was $18,963,309.82—in round numbers, nineteen millions. With one and a half millions less per annum we can in four years complete all the ships in this bill and all now authorized. For ten years prior to 1877, including that year, the appropriations averaged twenty-one millions.

As to the material of which we propose to construct these ships and how we shall procure it, I can not do better than to read from the report of the committee:

It will be seen that we propose in section 2 of the bill herewith reported that all the vessels "shall be built of steel of domestic manufacture, having a tensile strength of not less than 60,000 pounds per square inch and an elongation in 8 inches of not less than 25 per cent." Experience derived from the construction of the Chicago and other vessels recently provided for shows there will be no difficulty in procuring such steel, and that the competition therefor is likely to be considerable. Should there be any combination, however, in this or in any other matter against the Government, such a contingency is amply met by the provision in section 6 of the bill, giving the Secretary of the Navy power "to reject any or all bids made under the provisions" of the act.

The tests of tensile strength and elongation provided in section 2 are a little higher than those in use by the English, but will probably secure about the same quality of steel.

In section 4 of the bill it is provided that the armor used in constructing the armored vessels provided for, and in completing the monitors, shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture, provided contracts for furnishing it in a reasonable time, at a reasonable price, and of the required quality can be made with responsible parties; otherwise the Secretary may import it. The armor heretofore used in completing the Miantonomoh was imported. It is hoped, however, that in view of the very considerable quantity of armor required to carry out the purposes of this bill, responsible American firms may be induced to enter upon the work of making such armor as shall be needed. It is well known that such is the wish of the present Secretary of the Navy, who is invested with large discretion by this and other sections of the bill.

Your committee have not considered it prudent, in view of the fact that no such armor is now made in this country, to limit the Secretary in this matter absolutely to the American market. This would be to place the Government in the hands of those who might bid. We feel quite confident that if the Government, by the passage of the bill reported, shall enter upon the work of creating a respectable navy, holding out all the time such inducements to make armor-plates as are provided in this bill, the needed workshops will grow up along with the Navy. It is matter of history that all such great establishments as Whitworth's and Armstrong & Co.'s, in England; Schneider's, at Le Creuzot, in France, and Krupp's, in Germany, have been creatures of gradual growth. We hope to see such establishments in the United States at no distant day. Their existence is essential to our complete and perfect security. But the attempt to create such an establishment suddenly might prove to the Government a costly experiment.

As an instance of natural growth in this direction, we cite the Midvale Steel Works, in Philadelphia. These works made, first, steel for 6-inch guns equal in quality to the best English article. Next they produced steel for 8-inch, and now they will soon, it is believed, manufacture forgings for the construction of 10-inch guns. Side by side with, and as part of, this development, the Government shops in the navy-yard at Washington have progressed with the manufacture of guns, using steel imported from Whitworth's, in England when necessary, and that made at the Midvale Works when obtainable. In like manner your committee confidently hope that using competition as an aid and not in hindrance, the arts of forging heavy steel and of building guns and ships of war will, under the policy indicated in the bill of your committee, develop in America side by side, and that in a few years we shall have that feeling of national security which can only result from the conscious ability to beat back all invaders, whether they come by land or sea.

I will also read from the report as to

HOW THE SHIPS SHALL BE BUILT.

Another question your committee have considered with great care, was whether the ships provided for in the bill should be built by contract or in the Government yards. There seems to be no serious question as to having all repairs done in Government workshops. The difficulty of defining and valuing the work to be performed renders the contract system so impracticable that all important naval powers have repairs and refits done in their own shops. Some, as England, even establish government workshops in their colonies. The plant necessary for repairs and refits is almost, if not quite, sufficient for the construction of vessels; and navy-yards and docks are certainly in better condition to do such work when also engaged in construction.

The bill reported, therefore, provides that one or more of the new vessels contemplated by the bill shall be constructed in one or more of the navy-yards of the United States. Power is also given to the Secretary to build or complete in Government workshops all the vessels included in the bill, in case it shall become apparent to him that contractors have made a combination against the Government. This provision will, it is believed, operate as a security for the Government, and will at the same time result in having most of our naval vessels procured by contract. The weight of evidence is that contract ships are cheaper; but there is some very strong testimony tending to show that Government-built ships are better.

In a table recently prepared by Maj. W. A. Jones, Engineer Corps, United States Army, it appears that the annual cost of repairs per ton of hull of British naval vessels built by contract is £1.2 per annum, and of vessels built in the Government dock-yards the cost is £0.08; but the report of a special mixed committee appointed by the English admiralty in 1884, to inquire into the building and repair of ships, known as the Ravensworth committee, recites that the unanimous testimony of witnesses was that the quality of contract work in the construction of ships "as performed under admiralty supervision" was "in no way inferior to that performed in the dock-yards." Ships have heretofore been built in England, almost in equal numbers, by contract and in the Government dock-yards. This committee also found that it was "expedient to extend the practice of building ships of war by contract."

One of the desirable results to follow from this policy, with us, will be the encouragement of private building of naval vessels, and the consequent multiplication of the means of rapidly increasing our naval strength in case of need.

I read now another extract from the report, showing that as the responsibility is with the Executive Department, and as we desire to utilize all the mechanical genius of the country, we have given the Secretary a discretionary power over contracts:

The general policy pursued in framing the bill reported by the committee has been to leave a large amount of discretionary power in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy, who will thus be held responsible for results. One leading consideration urging to this policy is that changes in the mode of constructing vessels, engines, and ordnance are still occurring, and it is desirable not to embarrass the Executive Department of the Government by unwise restrictions. We think it better to leave it free to select what may seem at the moment to be the most desirable plan.

In another respect the present bill is a departure from precedent. Instead of requiring that before making contracts for vessels or engines the Secretary should have provided or adopted "full and complete detail drawings and specifications," it is required only that he shall have provided or adopted "drawings and specifications," thus leaving him power to dispense with such details as it may be impracticable to require. To what extent detail drawings and specifications should be required has been a much mooted point in the construction of modern engines and vessels.

It has been contended before us that it was impossible to furnish full and complete detail drawings and specifications beforehand of either vessels or engines, and the practice of the English Government has been cited. There it has not been the custom to insert in the contract detail specifications and drawings. But it will be seen by consulting a form given, pages 61-83 of the appendix to the report of the Hawley committee, that, though the admiralty contract for results, the specifications in an English contract for engines are quite minute. The Ravensworth committee say on this point as to ships:

"It has been represented to the committee by several witnesses that the incomplete and meager character of the specifications furnished by the admiralty to contractors not only increases the time during which ships are under construction, but also materially enhances the cost of the work, the contractors being under the necessity of framing their estimate without possessing full knowledge of the extent and details of the work they may be called upon to perform. The contractors, in conjunction with the admiralty, ought, in the opinion of the committee, to complete the specifications and designs, so that the plans may be as far as possible agreed upon before the work is commenced. This opinion is strengthened by the evidence submitted that, in the case of several ships of war which have been recently built in this country for foreign powers, specifiations and drawings have been so prepared as to enable the vessel to be completed without important changes and in a reasonable time."

The considerations urged in this extract, as well as others which will readily occur, render it very desirable that the Secretary of the Navy should always have drawings and specifications as minute and specific as practicable. This the committee does not doubt will be done.

The latitude allowed by the proposed bill to constructors of engines permits the Government to utilize all the constructive genius of the country. The bill further purposes to have all our engines constructed by contract. Americans have had comparatively little experience in the construction of naval engines. In many other classes of engines we excel the world, and it is hoped that by the adoption of the policy of this bill we shall soon build the best naval engines afloat. It will be observed that in this as in other respects the bill arms the Secretary with a check upon contractors. It provides that in case he can not contract at fair prices he may construct the engines in Government workshops.

And now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, permit me to say a few words about the personnel of our Navy; for the bravest ships that ever stood out to sea are worthless unless manned by brave officers and brave men.

There are in history no brighter pages than those which record the deeds of our naval heroes. There is not a generous youth in all the land who does not warm with emotion and aspire to great deeds as he reads of Paul Jones during the war of the Revolution lashing his vessel, inferior in force, alongside the British Serapis, and winning victory with a sinking vessel; of Preble in the war with Tripoli, and of Perry and Hull and Macdonough and Lawrence in the war of 1812.

And look at our civil war—at Federals and Confederates—Americans all. There was Catesby Jones in the Merrimac at Hampton Roads; Buchanan on the Tennessee in Mobile Bay; Brooke, who designed the great ironclad; Hunter Davidson constructing torpedoes; Maffit, with a genius born of audacity, running the blockade in open day in the presence of a hostile fleet whose officers could not believe, until the feat was almost accomplished, that an enemy would dare to attempt it; and there was Waddell in the Shenandoah, and Semmes, bold rover of the seas, who developed that branch of warfare inaugurated by the United States in the war of 1812, and whose wonderful career was cut short only when those two American game-cocks met—the Alabama and the Kearsarge. All these were officers trained in the American Navy.

And on the Union side there were the passage of the batteries at Vicksburg, the capture of the forts on the Mississippi, the exploits of the fleet at Fort Fisher, and many other engagements in which officers and men distinguished themselves by their gallantry. There was Porter, bold, indefatigable, fertile in expedient; John Rodgers, chivalrous and cultivated; Jouett, full of dash and courage; and Dupont and Truxton and Farragut; and there were Worden and his men, whose courage in trusting themselves to go down in the untried Monitor and out to sea, while the waves dashed over it, even surpassed if possible the gallantry with which they fought that vessel when it was in that great contest with the Merrimac. All these are but representatives of gallant veterans whose names even I have not time to call. Those who won the greatest names in those days that tried men's souls have most of them passed away; but many of their gallant comrades are with us, still in the prime of life. And as our old veterans drop away, young men replace them—young men gathered together as boys from the North and the South, the East and the West—young men worthy to share in the glorious memories of the past, and given, in order to fit them for the demands of the future, a still higher culture than their predecessors.

These constitute the personnel of our Navy. Give them the guns and the ships—the matériel of war—and they will protect the honor and the rights of this nation on the high seas as securely as the millions of citizen soldiers, ready to spring to arms, like the clansmen of Rhoderick Dhu, at the sound of the bugle, would defend us from assaults by land.

Mr. McCREARY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question before he sits down? I do not understand from the remarks of the gentleman which I have heard just what amount he desires to have appropriated. The bill shows an aggregate appropriation of $3,500,000, but the items contained in it added together make much more than that. I wish the gentleman would state to the committee just how much he desires to have appropriated under this bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Three millions and a half.

Mr. McCREARY. The bill covers much more than that.

Mr. HERBERT. But the gentleman has not seen the substitute.

Mr. McCREARY. I have the substitute in my hand.

Mr. HERBERT. Well, the substitute on its face purports to appropriate only three and a half millions.

Mr. McCREARY. I understand that; but in the body of the bill appropriations are made which go much beyond three and a half millions. I wish the gentleman would explain that.

Mr. HERBERT. I have been unfortunate if I have not already explained it satisfactorily. I said that the bill itself carried $10,128,046, that it would require about four years to plan and complete these vessels, and that that amount had to be divided into four annual appropriations. Then I added the other things necessary to arm the vessels, to provide docks, &c., and stated that the appropriations would be about four millions a year. In the substitute, the appropriation is only three and a half millions. This simply begins the work.

Mr. DINGLEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I wish he would explain one other point before he sits down. Do I understand that the bill authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to construct all of these vessels in the navy-yards of the United States?

Mr. HERBERT. I will answer that question after we have limited debate.

Mr. DINGLEY. I would like a definite answer on that point now.

Mr. RANDALL. The bill itself answers the question.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, in very plain terms—in section 5.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to construct all these vessels in the navy-yards, if he so desires.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, if he so desires; but the bill contemplates that he will not do so—at least, will not construct more than one in a navy-yard.

Mr. DINGLEY. Nevertheless he is authorized, in his discretion, to construct all in the navy-yards.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Now, I desire that the Committee of the Whole rise for the purpose of limiting debate. I will ask my friends on the other side who are upon the committee whether we can agree upon a half-hour more of general debate.

Mr. BOUTELLE rose.

Mr. HERBERT. I would like very much to limit the debate. I am satisfied that all of us at least who are on the committee desire to get through with this bill.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman has already taken twenty minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. I am willing to deduct that from our share of the debate after debate is limited.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What does the gentleman propose as the limitation of debate?

Mr. HERBERT. I propose half an hour more of general debate, and will deduct from my part of that the twenty minutes, or not quite twenty minutes, which I have already occupied.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, Mr. Chairman, it strikes me this is a proposition on which there should be an opportunity for more debate than the gentleman indicates.

Mr. HERBERT. There will be opportunity for debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The committee has spent eight months on this subject, and it is a very remarkable proposition that it should now be disposed of here without any opportunity to discuss it at all. I certainly desire to make some observations in regard to this bill.

Mr. HERBERT. That is all very true; but I suggest to my colleague on the committee [Mr. BOUTELLE] that it is very apparent this is the only day we shall have, and that insisting on debate kills the bill, which I am satisfied he does not want to do.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I certainly have no desire to kill the bill. On the contrary, if proper time be allowed for discussion I propose to show the House that I not only do not propose to kill the bill, but desire to give you a great deal more bill than you seem to want.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir; that is what I understand. I think, however, that we ought to be able to get along with half an hour more of general debate. I will give the other side twenty-five minutes and occupy only the concluding five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. There are two or three gentlemen on this side who desire to speak on this question.

Mr. McADOO. There are three or four gentlemen on this side also who desire to make speeches, but they are afraid a prolonged debate might imperil the bill, and they are not going to speak.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is now only quarter before 12 o'clock.

Mr. HERBERT. I know; but dilatory motions may be made. Would not the gentleman be satisfied——

Mr. BOUTELLE. What other business is there to supervene to-day?

Several MEMBERS. Oh, lots of it.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not know anything that will necessarily interfere with this bill to-day; but the bill is subject to amendment and discussion under the five-minute rule, which will occupy considerable time.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Do you propose not to allow any general discussion?

Mr. HERBERT. I propose that half an hour be allowed, all of which can be occupied on the other side except five minutes, which I will occupy myself.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It seems to me that is preposterous.

Mr. HERBERT. If the gentleman from Maine, who knows all about the rules of this House, will reflect for a moment, I think he will see that to insist on a longer time for general debate will endanger the passage of the bill, and the gentleman certainly does not want to do that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Certainly it will not endanger the bill. The idea of passing a bill like this without any discussion——

Mr. HERBERT. It has been before the House for four months with an elaborate report.

Mr. REED, of Maine. "Before the House!" It has not been before the House in any sense involving discussion. Gentlemen of the House are busy about a thousand things and depend upon the discussion on a bill to understand what it is. Now at the very outset the statement is made here that the Secretary of the Navy under this bill can not construct these vessels in the navy-yards, yet the bill shows he can.

Mr. HERBERT. I never said he could not.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We want to discuss these points and see where the difficulties are. We want to understand what the bill means.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We can not vote intelligently on this subject without some discussion.

Mr. HERBERT. How much time do you want?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to occupy an hour myself on this question.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting debate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT. Will the gentlemen on the other side accept an hour——

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole has voted to rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. CLEMENTS reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 6664) to increase the naval establishment had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HERBERT. I move, Mr. Speaker, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of this bill; and pending that I move that all general debate be limited to one hour and fifteen minutes, intending that the gentlemen on the other side shall control the hour and that the fifteen minutes shall be under my control.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the gentleman from Alabama will not press that motion. This is a very important measure.

Mr. RANDALL. Not so important as the forfeitures of land grants.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, it is not nearly so important; and it is remarkable that this has been taken up to-day to the exclusion of the forfeitures. But I trust the gentleman will consent, inasmuch as this day will be consumed for this measure, to allow a reasonable time for debate. I move to amend by making it three hours.

Mr. HERBERT. That motion is just made to kill the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move two hours, then.

Mr. HERBERT. That is made with the same purpose.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend the amendment by making it one-half hour. We want to get on with the land-grant-forfeiture bills.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. COBB, the House divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 100.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The question recurring on the amendment submitted by Mr. HOLMAN, the House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 77.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted, I believe.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. HERBERT were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 60, noes 105.

So the amendment was rejected.

The motion of Mr. HERBERT was agreed to.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the debate was limited; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The motion to go into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

INCREASE OF NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the pending bill, and by order of the House all general debate is limited to one hour and fifteen minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. The agreement was that the gentleman from Maine should be recognized in his own right to control the hour, and I will control the fifteen minutes on this side.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, my desire to obtain a reasonable time for the discussion of this measure has been based solely upon my conception of the importance of the subject and my belief that the House ought to understand the proposition which is submitted; not that I expect to influence the action of any member by any argument that I may submit, but because I believe there are circumstances connected with the shape and phase in which this proposition comes before us that ought to be disinctly stated.

On the Calendar of the House since the 10th of March last there has been reposing a bill to increase the naval establishment of the United States (H. R. 6664), representing the deliberately formed conclusions of the Naval Committee of this House, arrived at after months of careful and painstaking investigation of the subject. That bill embraced the results of information obtained as to the views and wishes of the Navy Department, and was supposed to be, as reported here, a practical embodiment of the contribution that the present administration believed this Congress should make toward the great work of rehabilitating the Navy of the United States.

There has been no subject connected with the Government concerning which more of controversy and discussion has taken place during the past few years than in regard to this matter of the condition and needs of the Navy. It is within the knowledge of members of the present House that during several Congresses the efforts that have been made by the Republican party in the direction of adding to the effective force of our Navy have been hampered and obstructed by an indisposition on the part of our Democratic brethren to intrust to what they held to be the incompetent hands of a Republican administration the great work of rebuilding that important branch of our military service. We had a right, therefore, to expect upon the accession of the Democratic party to power that we should see some substantial and energetic progress made in the direction in which they had so constantly asserted their desire to advance whenever their own party should obtain control.

The message of the President of the United States in its reference to the Navy Department, describing the Navy as "a shabby ornament to the Government;" the official report of the Secretary of the Navy, in which he declared that we have nothing that deserves to be called a navy; the speech and report which accompanied the regular naval appropriation bill when introduced into this House by the chairman of the Naval Committee, all prepared us for a feeling of confidence that the Democratic party, being in control, having full swing in regard to this matter, was about to attempt at least to rise to the plane of the public demands and show the people of the United States what Democracy could do in a field in which it had claimed that the Republicans had made so conspicuous a failure. I desire to say also, Mr. Chairman, that the Democratic party in dealing with this question has been relieved from the chief embarrassment which beset the Republicans in dealing with the same subject. Instead of having its efforts beset by the nagging and harassing of an opposition with its appetite keenly whetted for partisan advantage, I am justified in saying that from the beginning of this session to the present time the Republican minority of the Committee on Naval Affairs, representing their associates on this side of the House, have been ready and willing to co-operate to the fullest extent in every legitimate and wise effort for the improvement of our naval establishment.

Within a few days after the beginning of this session, at a gathering of distinguished representatives of the Army and Navy of the United States, in response to a sentiment which had been assigned to me, I freely took the responsibility of pledging in advance of the session that the party, of which I have the honor to be an humble member, finding itself in a minority in the House of Representatives and with the scepter of power in the executive branch departed from it, would not emulate the bad example of its political opponents but would be found as honestly and sincerely striving throughout this session of Congress to build up the two great military arms of the Government as it had been when it controlled the administration of public affairs.

I think I may claim that that pledge has been fully redeemed. While exercising, as we had the right to do, the free privilege of criticising details and of endeavoring to perfect, so far as we could, the measure to be submitted by our committee, the minority have endeavored in no way to thwart or to impede any efforts of the Naval Committee or of the administration towards putting our Navy on a footing that would be creditable to our nation. As I have said, Mr. Chairman, the result of those deliberations was this bill, No. 6664, providing for the construction of a number of vessels of different classes; providing for the completion of the monitors; providing for the construction of torpedo vessels, and in its entirety embodying what was believed to be a wise, prudent, and essential contribution at this time to the strengthening of the naval establishment.

That bill has rested upon the Calendar until to-day. Yet with that expression on file as the deliberate judgment of the committee of this House selected to formulate recommendations in regard to the Navy, we find the chairman of the Naval Committee (again acting upon a majority vote of the committee) practically saying to the House to-day that we ought not to pass the bill that the committee reported; practically saying to the people to-day that the Democratic party through its chosen exponents has reconsidered its purpose of making a substantial contribution to the increase of the Navy establishment; practically saying that the Government of the United States, with its coffers alleged by the Democrats to be so overflowing with money that resolutions are introduced here and forced through, in despite of the counsels of the financial officers of the Government, to rid the Treasury of what is claimed to be its teeming surplus—in spite of that alleged redundancy of cash, the majority of the Naval Committee of the House of Representatives come in here to-day with a declaration in effect that the Government ought not at this time to appropriate so much as $6,425,000 to supply the deficiency in what the Chief Magistrate of the country declares to have become "a shabby ornament to the Government."

We are asked to say to the people of this country that the Government does not need the ships that the Naval Committee in March said we ought to have. We are asked to-day to proclaim to the people that there is no need for the defense which only a few months ago we were urging as essential to the maintenance of the dignity and safety of our Government. We are asked to take up here and pass at the very heel of the session, as a lame and impotent conclusion of all the grand fanfaronade of what the Democracy were going to do for the Navy, a substitute for the original measure, so hacked and slashed and emasculated that its parent would not recognize the offspring in its present guise.

Now, why, Mr. Chairman—why this change of front? I desire, so far as I am personally concerned and on behalf of my colleagues of the Republican minority, to divest myself and them of every vestige of responsibility for this change in the attitude of the committee upon this great question. Why is it that we are considering here to-day a substitute bill appropriating $3,500,000 in place of the bill appropriating $6,425,000?

Why is it that the three hundred and twenty-five Representatives of the American people have not been permitted to take up this carefully formulated bill of the Naval Committee and express in regard to its provisions their assent or dissent, according to their convictions? How is it that the committee's original bill has not been brought up here for discussion and amendment? Why, Mr. Chairman, I understand that the reason is because the Democrats in this House, distrustful of themselves in open legislation, fearful of what they might do if left to their untrammeled course, have delegated the entire power to control the legislation of this body to three distinguished members of the Democratic party; and that those three eminent gentlemen, for all of whom personally I entertain a very high degree of respect, have been invested by the Democratic caucus with dictatorial power, have been set up as a triumvirate who can say in effect to a committee of this House: "You shall not be permitted to bring your measure before the Representatives of the people to be acted upon; you shall not be permitted to test the sense of the House upon the proposition that you have formulated. We know that the Naval Committee, with practical unanimity, has declared that $6,000,000 ought to be appropriated and certain vessels ought to be built; that there is a very general opinion afloat that something in that direction ought to be done at this time; but we will not permit you to take the expression of the House upon your proposition; we will not let you take up your own bill; we will say to you what you shall submit, and unless you consent to have your bill cut and carved according to our notions you shall not bring it before the Representatives in Congress."

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This substitute appears to be proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have undertaken to state, Mr. Chairman, that while this substitute comes here practically with a proclamation that it represents the second thought of the Naval Committee and is indorsed, as I understand, by a majority of that committee, I reserved for myself the right to express the dissent of the minority upon that subject, and I am endeavoring now to show that the Republican members of that Naval Committee are in no way responsible for this emasculating process.

Mr. SAYERS. May I ask the gentleman from Maine a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAYERS. Is not the only difference between yourself and the Democratic majority of the committee as to the number of vessels rather than as to the organism of the bill? Is not that the difference?

Mr. BOUTELLE. My friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] asks me if the only difference between the committee and myself is not as to the number of ships rather than as to the organism of the bill. As the bill is simply a proposition to build ships, the difference in the number of ships to be built strikes me as a very important element in the matter.

Mr. SAYERS. Is not that the only difference between yourself and the majority of the committee, that you want more ships built and the majority of the committee think it advisable under the circumstances to provide for the building of the number indicated in the substitute bill?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have been exceedingly unfortunate, Mr. Chairman, in my endeavor to explain my views if I have failed to make it clear that that is exactly what I have been talking about. I have stated heretofore that there are some minor features of the original bill upon which I desired to indulge in some criticism and to which I would possibly have offered some amendment, but I say that upon the general proposition that we need a navy, that we need it now, that the people are able and willing to construct it, and that we ought to begin its construction to-day, the Republican members of that committee have uttered their voices and given their votes with no uncertain purpose. And what I am complaining of is that our Naval Committee, after reporting to the House an appropriation of $6,425,000 to build and complete a certain number of ships, should now turn about and come before the House with bated breath, without a whisper of support for their original proposition, but practically saying that they made a great mistake, that we ought not to appropriate six millions of dollars; that we ought not to build these ships which a few months ago they said were necessary; and that they think on the whole that about all the United States can afford this year is to appropriate $3,500,000 for the Navy, or about one-half of the amount in the original bill. Mr. Chairman, if the great effort on behalf of the construction of a Democratic Navy was so soon to be done for, we might well ask "what on earth it was begun for?"

But I was adverting to the manner in which this measure comes before the House, to the peculiarly undemocratic and unrepresentative manner in which it appears here. I have no right to speak for the majority of the committee. I have no right to say that the majority have not been thoroughly converted from the views they expressed last month; but yet I have a conviction, based upon the bill which they did formulate, that there has been a time within a few months when they thought the Government of the United States ought to do something more toward building up its Navy than appropriate $3,500,000, and I want to put the responsibility for the change of base just where it belongs. I do not want my Democratic friends to bear one ounce of responsibility that is not justly placed upon them, for we all know they are heavily enough handicapped already; but there is no propriety or justice or reason, under the conditions that exist to-day, when the Democrats of the House have had full control of this subject, with a Democratic Secretary of the Navy behind them and a Republican minority to re-enforce them—if they utterly and abjectly fail to come up to the measure of public expectation, there is no reason why they should be permitted to share the responsibility with those who are not justly chargeable with it. My understanding is that the reason why we are to-day considering this emasculated and unsatisfactory substitute for the original bill is that organized Democracy in its concrete form—the tripartite Executive of the Democratic party—has put its mailed hand upon the bill of the committee and said, "Gentlemen, you shall not add $6,000,000 to the appropriations in the off-year before the Congressional elections. Wait until another year; not this session, some other session. Unless you permit us to run a pencil through one-half of the appropriations in this bill, starting out with a 'horizontal reduction' of one-half of its total and then indicating the particular portions that we want eliminated, you shall not consider the bill at all."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe if it is wise for us to do anything toward building up the Navy, that after these eight months of incubation we ought to make at least a respectable addition to our ships of war. Everybody familiar with the subject understands that this matter of building ships is not one that can be accomplished in a moment. The authorization has got to antedate by a long time the completion of the vessels. I understand that it requires at least three years to complete the ordnance for one of these ships, and if we are to have a modern navy, if we are to fulfill the pledge, the promise, the boast of the Democratic party that it is going to rehabilitate the Navy during the Democratic administration of the Government. I certainly think the gentlemen on the other side have reason to "hurry up their cakes," for, according to the present outlook, Democratic administration in this country does not promise to be sufficiently protracted to warrant the belief that they will succeed in rehabilitating the Navy at the rate of $3,500,000 a year. [Laughter.]

I want to show in brief and without going into details some of the changes that have been made from the original bill.

The first clause of the substitute provides, as the former bill did, for two sea-going double-bottomed armored vessels of about 6,000 tons displacement, to cost, excluding armament, not more than $2,500,000 each. But in the original bill $1,250,000 is specifically appropriated toward the construction of these vessels, while in the substitute no specific appropriation is made.

The second paragraph of the original bill provided for three protected double-bottomed cruisers from 3,500 to 5,000 tons, to cost in aggregate not exceeding $4,000,000, and appropriated $1,100,000 toward their construction. The Naval Committee, under the tutelage of those distinguished marine architects, the gentlemen composing the Democratic "steering committee"——

Mr. FINDLAY. Being "steerers," they ought to know something about ships. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Possibly. The Naval Committee, Mr. Chairman, after consultation with those distinguished gentlemen, have come to the conclusion that, on the whole, we need only one double-bottomed protected cruiser, and they have cut down the appropriation accordingly. The original bill provided for four first-class torpedo boats—and on this matter of torpedo boats we had volumes of testimony as to the importance of that arm of the service and the immediate necessity of strengthening it as an intermediary mode of defense pending the time when we shall have some ships—the Naval Committee have reconsidered that and have concluded that, on the whole, a nation with only 3,000 or 4,000 miles of seacoast does not really need three or four first-class torpedo boats, but that one will answer every purpose.

The original bill provided for one torpedo cruiser; and that has been stricken out. The original bill provided—and I understood at the time that the provisions were made upon the recommendation of the experts of the Navy Department—for the completion of the monitors, with a specific appropriation indicated for each. For some reason—possibly a good one, but involving a mistake either in the first bill or the present—the specific appropriation to the different vessels of the sum required to complete them has been stricken out, and the appropriation left in block to be applied to the completion of the monitors as the Secretary of the Navy may see fit.

Mr. SAYERS. You do not complain of the amount appropriated for the purpose, do you?

Mr. BOUTELLE. This was the original amount?

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir. You do not complain of the appropriation?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I was heartily in favor of it.

Mr. FINDLAY. Is it understood that the three million and a half of dollars appropriated by this bill is to be spread all over these different vessels the construction of which is provided for in the bill?

Mr. BUCK. It can be.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am not sure that I understand the question of the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. FINDLAY. Here, for instance, the first paragraph provides for "two sea-going double-bottomed armored vessels;" the second paragraph provides for "one protected double-bottomed cruiser;" then there is a torpedo boat; in addition to that provision is made for the completion of the monitors Puritan, Amphitrite, Monadnock, and Terror; then there is provision made for armament, and the total amount appropriated in the bill is three and a half million of dollars. Is that amount to be spread all over these different vessels? That is what I understand.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand that these various vessels contemplated by the bill are provided for at a limited cost, but that the appropriation here made is considerably under the aggregate. We do not in this bill or in the substitute appropriate for the entire cost of these vessels.

Mr. FINDLAY. The appropriation would not meet one-fourth of the expense.

Mr. HERBERT. That is the estimate of the Department for the completion of the monitors; it was always so understood.

Mr. BOUTELLE. We are not speaking about that particular item. Let us have this matter understood. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY] wants to know whether the $3,500,000 appropriated by this substitute is to cover the construction of all the vessels provided for or authorized by it. I understand not. I understand that this appropriation of three and a half million dollars is an appropriation on account.

Mr. HERBERT. On account.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Have you made an estimate of the entire cost?

Mr. SAYERS. Ten million five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. HERBERT. The entire work contemplated by the bill carries an expense of $10,000,000 and a little over.

Mr. SAYERS. About $10,600,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman states that the provisions of this substitute, when entirely carried out according to the present estimates, would involve an expenditure of something over $10,500,000.

Mr. FINDLAY. But this bill appropriates only about three and a half million dollars.

Mr. HERBERT. Because it will take over three years to do the work.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Exactly. Three and a half million dollars is appropriated in this bill toward operations which are to carry an expenditure of $10,500,000. Now, I do not know why that is done; I suppose, of course, there is a good reason for it.

Mr. SAYERS. The reason is that the amount appropriated in this bill is all that can be advantageously expended during the coming year.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I suppose one good reason is that there are exigencies which require that the aggregate of appropriations should appear small upon given occasions.

Mr. MCADOO. Has it not always been the custom——

Mr. BOUTELLE. During my brief experience in Congress I think it has been. I believe appropriations have very largely been conducted upon the principle that the first thing to be considered was to make the expenditure appear as small as possible before the people.

Mr. MCADOO. Has not Congress frequently provided for the building of a vessel without appropriating anything at the time, the object being that the work should be started, and that Congress should make the appropriation afterward?

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is a very poor way to do. But I will answer the gentleman's question specifically. His statement is true; but no better illustration of the fallacy of that sort of proceeding could be presented than the condition in which we found ourselves during the last Congress. Gentlemen who are now present will recollect that at the close of the last Congress, having failed in our efforts to get an appropriation for the Navy, we were only enabled finally to get a provision for building the vessels for which designs are now in course of preparation by hunting up a law which had been passed at a previous Congress providing for building certain ships, but making no appropriation whatever. If that law under which these cruisers are now being designed at the Navy Department had carried with it originally the appropriation required to complete the ships those vessels would probably have been afloat to-day. But a Democratic House refused to provide a dollar of appropriation. While the authorization was put upon the statute-book—they were always willing to make the promise to the people—they would not appropriate a dollar. That provision for building the vessels rested upon the statutes until in the last hours of the last Congress the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. Talbott—and I am glad to give him the credit for it—by dint of persistent effort succeeded, by aid of Republican votes, in getting an appropriation based upon that authorization for those vessels.

Mr. HEWITT. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HEWITT. What provision for those two vessels was made in the Forty-seventh Congress, which was a Republican Congress? No appropriation was made by that Congress.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know what Congress it was.

Mr. HEWITT. It was the Forty-seventh Congress, a Republican Congress. The last one did appropriate money.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not know what Congress it was. I know the votes by which Congress was prevented from making appropriation for the Navy in that Congress, the Forty-seventh Congress, were Democratic votes. And I know also that the votes in the Forty-eighth Congress against the proposition of the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. Talbott, by which we got the ships now being designed, were also Democratic votes.

Mr. HEWITT. That may be, but the Forty-seventh Congress was controlled by Republicans.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Without discussing the matter of control, I need only say that the people of the country are sufficiently intelligent to know the difference between placing the responsibility for legislation upon either party in Congress because it is nominally Republican or Democratic, and placing responsibility which belongs to them upon the men who voted for or against a proposition. I affirm that in the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh, and Forty-eighth Congresses, as in the Forty-ninth Congress, the votes of the Republican representatives of the people have been in favor of liberal appropriations for the Navy, and that the obstruction to such legislation has come from the gentleman's side of the House. That, sir, can not be disputed.

Mr. SAYERS. Is it not true that day before yesterday a majority of those who voted against the consideration of the bill for an increase of the Navy were Republicans, and did not they vote to take up the oleomargarine bill instead?

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman asks that question I will remind him that more voted on this side than on that to take up the naval bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Did they not have a vote on it yesterday?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The gentleman referred to day before yesterday. That was entirely a question of the order of business. I say to my friend from Texas that before we get through with the discussion and disposition of this bill I trust we will have a vote that will advertise to him how people stand on this matter of building up the Navy. I propose, when the time comes, if under our remarkable system of parliamentary procedure, which I do not pretend to understand——

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont. Nobody does.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I say I will take an opportunity at the proper time to offer as an amendment, if you like, or as a substitute, or as a substitute for the substitute, or in whatever shape I can get it in—I propose to offer the original conclusions of the Naval Committee in regard to the matter of building ships before they were wrestled with by the conerete will of the Democratic party as exercised by the steering committee. And on that we will try to have a record made.

Mr. REED, of Maine. How does this matter come up now? Is it not on the original bill?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand this original bill, reported with prayer and hopefulness on the part of a practically unanimous committee, unanimous as to substance, with only the reservation of criticism as to matters of detail—I understand that devoted bill No. 6664 has sunk into some obscure crevice or cranny from which the power of the House is unable to extract it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I wish to say that was not the understanding of the Committee on Rules when permission was given to this committee to come here. The understanding was the original bill was to be brought up. I never heard of any change until this morning.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am afraid my friend has never been admitted to the holy of holies.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I was admitted to very nearly that, the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BOUTELLE. There is a Committee on Rules, but behind the veil are the seraphim and the cherubim.

Mr. REED, of Maine. There is evidently a difference between them. I do not know whether the seraphim or the cherubim differ or not, but there is evidently a difference.

Mr. BOUTELLE. "You pays your money and you takes your choice." [Laughter.]

Mr. HEWITT. A trinity.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes; a Democratic trinity.

Mr. BUCK. I ask the gentleman from Maine to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] said the Forty-seventh Congress was a Republican Congress and controlled by the Republican party. That is true. He said further that, while they authorized the construction of these cruisers, they did not appropriate any money. I wish to read the law on that subject passed March 3, 1883, by the Forty-seventh Congress. It is as follows:

For the construction of the steel cruiser of not less than 4,300 tons displacement now specially authorized by law, two steel cruisers of not more than 3,000 nor less than 2,500 tons displacement each, and one dispatch boat, as recommended by the naval advisory board in its report of December 20, 1882, $1,300,000.

These are the cruisers, the Boston, the Atlanta, the Chicago, and the dispatch-boat, the Dolphin.

Mr. HEWITT. We do not disagree——

Mr. BUCK. And we appropriated more than a million of dollars for that purpose.

Mr. HEWITT. We agree fully upon that point.

Mr. BUCK. We agree fully now, but we did not before.

Mr. HEWITT. Yes, we did before. It is not these ships that the gentleman from Maine referred to, not the Boston, the Atlanta, the Chicago, and the Dolphin, but he referred to two other ships which were authorized to be constructed but were never begun.

Mr. BUCK. Then there is a further correction to be made, for the Forty-seventh Congress had nothing to do with the appropriations for these ships, and if the gentleman referred to the appropriations of the Forty-seventh Congress he could have meant nothing else than the four cruisers.

Mr. HEWITT. The gentleman from Maine referred to two other ships which had been authorized but were not appropriated for at all.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not proceed further in the comparison of these two propositions. I think I have made it clear to the committee that this measure which is now before us is a mere makeshift. It is not a respectable response to the demands of the people of this country that a Congress which has control of the people's money, and which is intrusted with the protection of the public interests and national security, should on this question make a reasonable and a wise contribution toward strengthening our naval force. There is no need, Mr. Chairman, there should be no need, to go into a discussion as to the necessity and the importance of increasing our naval establishment.

Any man who reads the newspapers of the day must be duly impressed with the humiliation of the attitude occupied by a great government with sixty millions of people, so weak in its naval power that it would be incompetent to cope with the naval force of any of the petty nations of the earth.

I will not plead the weakness of our naval power as an excuse for any failure to uphold the dignity of the Government in its relations with the nations of the world, because the people of this country do not expect of those who are intrusted with maintaining the dignity and honor of the United States that they should be governed at every stage of controversy by the consideration of how much of a naval force we could bring to bear in behalf of the assertion of the clear, plain, unquestionable rights of our citizens.

But I am very much afraid that it may have had some influence in controlling the action of our present authorities. I can conceive of no other excuse for the present halting, indecisive, and impotent policy of our Government in regard to rights which at one time in the history of our country were jealously guarded by the Democratic party of the United States. There is hardly a newspaper which reaches the desks of members of Congress which does not contain some account of a petty outrage perpetrated upon vessels of the United States by the so-called improvised navy of a mere province of Great Britain on our Northeastern border. We are told that Canada, after fitting out her armed schooners and steam-tug cruisers with their pop-gun armament to harry and obstruct our fishermen and legitimate traders, has sent over into the United States to buy a steam-yacht and is going into the commerce-raiding business on a wholesale basis. And yet with this kind of reminder brought home to us daily and hourly, with this knowledge of the present needs of our Government in regard to its maritime defensive power forced upon us, not hypothetically but by the actual occurrences of the day, the Congress of the United States, the House of Representatives, with a large Democratic majority, with its "great Jacksonian President in the White House, and a Secretary of the Navy representing in himself all the beauties of Jeffersonian simplicity with Jacksonian energy combined, have dodged and evaded and hid away from their responsibility in this matter until at the close of the session they come creeping in with this substitute behind the coat-tails of three members of their party to whom they have delegated the power to say what kind of legislation the three hundred and twenty-five Representatives of the people ought to permit themselves to consider.

I say that the passage of such a substitute under the circumstances will be regarded by the American people as an affront to the necessities of the hour. If the measure had been brought in here as an original proposition the people might have said they were surprised that the Democratic party had been willing to do even so much. But when we have had a bill brought in here after months of incubation; when we have had the telegraph wires of the country burdened with hymns of praise as to what the Democratic party was at last going to do to build up the Navy, it is an astonishing proposition and one which will not fail to make its proper impression upon the public mind, that here on the 24th day of July the Naval Committee changes front in line of battle, committing in its official capacity an offense similar to that which if committed by an individual in the Army or Navy would subject him to court-martial and to be shot. And unless I mistake all the signs of the times, Mr. Chairman, the members of the dominant party in the House of Representatives and in other branches of the Government, who take upon themselves the responsibility of forcing that substitute through under this sort of coercion, will, before the ides of November, be called to face something a great deal more formidable than this contribution which they propose to make to the Navy.

I would like if I had time to refer to some of the features which have cropped out in the discussion and management of this question which indicate, more clearly than even this remarkable performance with regard to the bill, the peculiar disposition of the Democratic party toward this subject.

When the regular naval appropriation bill was under discussion I asked the chairman of the committee if he could tell me how many thousand dollars had been expended in Europe to purchase plans and designs from Sir William Armstrong or some other British constructor. He was unable to give the figures. But it has since been developed that the Secretary of the Navy, following at first in the beaten track of his predecessors, who have been, I may say for years, obtaining very full and complete information in regard to naval matters in all parts of the world, went a step farther and bought a complete set of detailed drawings and specifications of a steam-vessel designed by Sir William Armstrong. It has been recently promulgated that one of the vessels already provided for by the last Congress, and the designs for which have been so much delayed, shall be built upon these designs of the Na-ne-wa-kan, a cruiser designed by Sir William Armstrong for the Japanese Government; probably a fine vessel, and undoubtedly containing features that would be worth our while to examine, to imitate, and, in accordance with American precedent and habit, to improve upon.

But there has seemed to be all through this matter of Democratic dealing with our naval establishment a desire to imitate foreign models, an overweening desire to depend almost unquestioningly upon English precedents, a distrust of American capabilities, a feeling that the best can only be obtained across the water. This disposition cropped out in the proposition to buy the engines for one of the new cruisers in England and import them as an "object lesson" to American engine-builders. And now we are informed that the Department has decided to build in this country, line upon line, and rivet upon rivet, a duplicate of a vessel built by Sir William Armstrong at a period of development and evolution in naval construction in which I venture to say that Sir William Armstrong would never think of thus duplicating his last ship. But we are to have something "English, you know." We are to have something we can set up and make a comparison with. And so in the Navy Department they have placed upon the wall a beautiful model of this British-built cruiser as a sort of fetich before which the officers of our Navy may be led to bow down, and from which they are expected to derive inspiration. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not affected with Anglophobia to the extent of being unwilling to take a good thing because it is from abroad. I have none of that in my composition. But, Mr. Chairman, this is the first time in the history of our country that it was ever proposed that in anything connected with maritime excellence or achievement the American people should slavishly copy from any nation or any people on the face of the globe.

It is the first time in the history of maritime development that it has been proposed to place the American standard anywhere below the pinnacle of superiority. Never before has the idea been entertained that the United States flag should be hoisted by the Government at any mast-head except where it would float as a challenge of American skill to the admiration of the world.

From the time of our early colonial struggles, when our fathers boldly grappled with the mistress of the seas, and with American-built and American-manned vessels fought Britain's most formidable war-ships broadside to broadside and won the victories that are cherished in song and story; from the hour when Perry sent from Lake Erie the immortal message: "We have met the enemy and they are ours," all through the glorious history of our early naval prowess, in which stand out in bold relief the achievements of the grand "Old Ironsides," the Constitution, frigate, to whose venerated remains I wish our present Secretary and some of his advisers might make a pilgrimage as to a shrine of American inspiration—in every field of commercial enterprise and every phase of maritime progress, the Stars and Stripes of the American Union have led the advance and left the world to follow.

The birth of steam navigation dates from the hour when Robert Fulton's little Clermont made her trial trip on the Hudson in 1806.

A year later the Phœnix, built by John Stevens, made the first ocean trip of a steamboat, from New York to Philadelphia.

In 1818 the first passage across the ocean by steam-power was made by the Savannah, built in New York, which made the trip from that port to St. Petersburg via Liverpool, reaching the latter port in twenty-six days, and making the return trip across the ocean.

Following up this experimental voyage, the first regular passages made by steam-vessels across the ocean were by the American vessels Sirius and Great Western, in 1838.

Next to the application of steam itself to ocean navigation the most important change has been the substitution of the screw-propeller in place of the paddle-wheel. And here, again, while tentative experiments were made in Europe, the practical introduction of the propeller was made by that Ericsson who has since become famous as an American inventor, and the second screw-steamer ever built was constructed for an American citizen in 1839.

The history of our mercantile marine in the early days is full of interest and a source of pride to every American citizen.

Immediately after the war of 1812–'14 had secured the rights of American commerce, the famous Black Ball line of packets was established in New York, sailing once a week between that port and Liverpool. The ships then employed were only of 400 or 500 tons, but at that time were deemed large vessels. The average passage eastward was twenty-three days and homeward forty. One ship, the Canada, made the outward trip in fifteen days and eighteen hours, which was considered very remarkable. In 1821 the Red Star line was organized, and soon after Grinnell, Minturn & Co. established the Swallow-tail line, so named from the shape of the signal-flag of the firm. New York then had weekly packets to Liverpool, carrying the mails and passengers.

Then came the famous Dramatic line, founded by Capt. E. K. Collins, who afterward organized the splendid line of steamships that bear his name. Among his sailing packets were the Shakspeare, Siddons, Garrick, and Roscius, all of them greatly admired on both sides of the Atlantic. Grinnell, Minturn & Co. entered competition with what were known as the Statesman fleet, and the ships by this time had grown to double the size of the packets of 1816—the Patrick Henry, of 1,000 tons; the Ashburton and Henry Clay, of 1,250 tons; and in 1846 the New World, of 1,400 tons, was launched for this line from the yard of Donald McKay, of East Boston, and created a great furore on her arrival in England as the largest and finest vessel afloat. She was followed in 1848 by the Constitution, of the same tonnage, and a splendid vessel. In 1852 the Spofford & Tileston line put afloat the Orient, followed by the new Henry Clay, the Webster, and Calhoun, built in New Hampshire, the former being still afloat a few years ago. Then there were the beautiful ships of Williams & Guion's Black Star line, the Havre line, the London line, Enoch Train's famous Boston Diamond line, the Philadelphia line, and others, which whitened the seas with American canvas and won credit for their country wherever they displayed their colors.

At this time no maritime nation thought of competing or comparing with American vessels, whose beauty of model, superior speed, and luxury of appointments were unapproached by any other craft. They had a monopoly of the passenger business, and their superiority was everywhere conceded.

The discovery of gold in California and the development of the tea and silk trade with China created a demand for the application of the Baltimore clipper model to ships of larger size, and W. H. Aspinwall's Rainbow, Helena, Houqua, and Sea Witch, ranging from 700 to 900 tons, were followed in 1852 by the launching from the yard of William H. Webb in New York of the clipper ship Challenge, of 2,000 tons, which became famous under the command of Capt. Bob Waterman. Then came the Invincible, 2,150 tons; Comet, 1,209, and Sword Fish, 1,150; the latter sailing from Shanghai to San Francisco in thirty-one days, an average of 240 miles a day.

Closely following came the Flying Cloud, Tornado, and Sovereign of the Seas from the Boston yard of Donald McKay. In 1852, of one hundred and fifty-seven arrivals at San Francisco, seventy were clippers, and in 1853 more than $8,000,000 in tea was imported into New York in these vessels. Their achievements in regard to seaworthiness and speed continue to be marvels of maritime history. The Samuel Russell for thirty days averaged 226 miles per day. The Flying Cloud, Capt. Josiah P. Creesy, made the fastest trip on record, eighty-four days from New York to San Francisco. Lieutenant Maury, of the Naval Observatory, reported that the greatest distance ever made by a sailing vessel from noon to noon, 433½ miles, was covered by the Flying Cloud on that voyage.

In 1853 the Dreadnought, built in Newburyport, Mass., commanded by Capt. Samuel Samuels, beat the Cunard steamer Canada one day on the trip across the Atlantic, the Dreadnought sailing from Liverpool to New York and the Canada from Liverpool to Boston. The same clipper made the trip from Sandy Hook, New York, to Queenstown, 2,760 miles, in 9 days, 17 hours.

The Red Jacket, built by George Thomas, at Rockland, Me., in 1853, made the passage in 1854 from New York to Liverpool Bar, 3,000 miles, in 13 days, 1 hour, 25 minutes.

The Lightning, built by Donald McKay, made the passage from Liverpool to Melbourne in sixty-two days and back in sixty-four. Also sailed from Boston to Liverpool, 2,827 miles, in thirteen days.

At this period the glory of the American merchant marine was at its height. Our ships were the acknowledged sovereigns of the seas, and nothing more beautiful or inspiring will ever be seen on the ocean than the picture presented by one of the great sailing packets, or one of the magnificent clipper ships of that era from the ship-yards of New England or New York, dashing along under a cloud of canvas.

Not satisfied with laurels won on the outer ocean, American enterprise determined to compete with John Bull in a field where he had long boasted pre-eminence; and in 1851 the little yacht America, built by James R. and George Steers, of New York, sailed across the ocean and boldly entered for the Queen's cup in the regatta of the London Royal Yacht Club. Although ruled out by a technicality as to ownership the Yankee yacht sailed over the course, beat the English yacht squadron out of sight, and was presented by Queen Victoria with a duplicate of the Queen's cup, which has been held by the New York Yacht Club ever since against all comers, the latest trial for it having been won by the Boston sloop Puritan, which defeated the British cutter Genesta last year.

The victory of the America created the most profound sensation in England; it was deplored in the newspapers and made the subject of speeches in Parliament. As a direct result of that race and the achievements of our clipper ships the English began to imitate our models and to buy many of our ships. I well remember seeing in one of the docks of Liverpool a fleet of American-built ships flying the Cross of St. George and the private signal of James Banes & Co., a great shipping firm, which my friend from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has undoubtedly known. At a time when Great Britain was subsidizing its commerce for the transportation of its overcrowded population to fill up the colonies of Australia; when the English ship-builder had every advantage that government aid could give, people came from all parts of the kingdom and the continent to admire the superb fleet of American ocean racers, purchased by that British house from the ship-yards of Massachusetts and Maine, the Blue Jacket, the Red Jacket, the Donald McKay, the Lightning, and other triumphs of naval architecture, such as no other nation in the world had ever produced.

The superiority of American models and types of war vessels was no less conspicuously maintained so long as our ship-building industries continued to flourish. In his recent interesting article on the United States Navy, Rear-Admiral Edward Simpson, than whom there is no higher authority, says:

> Our wooden ships that sailed the sea from 1840 to 1860 were the finest in the world. The old frigate Congress, in 1842, was the noblest specimen of the frigates of the day, and the sloop-of-war Portsmouth was unsurpassed as a corvette. The clipper ships of that period need no eulogy beyond their own record. Those ships were the models for the imitation of all maritime nations, and among the constructors of the period may be recalled, without detriment to many others omitted, the names of Lenthall, Steers, Pook, and Delano. The poetry of sailing reached its zenith during this period.

The Princeton and San Jacinto were among the first war ships fitted with screw-propellers, and were fine ships of their time. The Merrimac frigate, built in 1856, was greatly admired by foreign architects, and the British admiralty at once proceeded to imitate the type in vessels that became the crack ships of the British navy. The Wabash, Minnesota, Roanoke, and Franklin were of the same class and all splendid ships. A few years later the corvettes of the Hartford class were built of live-oak and proved famous vessels, the Hartford being identified with the glory of Farragut as his flag-ship. Admiral Simpson says these vessels were reproduced by England and France when they made their appearance upon the ocean. And so I might enumerate the noble ships that have borne our flag in honor to every sea, and show that they were the pride of our people and the envy of all others.

At the time of the outbreak of our civil war England and some other European powers had been experimenting with heavily armored ships, and had expended vast sums in their construction. At that time the advantage over us in facilities for iron-clad ship building, as to machinery and experience, was vastly greater than it is to-day, and in the spring of 1862 few would have believed that we could produce anything in this country that could attempt to cope with the great wall-sided castles of iron that were the boast of the British navy. An awakening came on the 9th of March, 1862, when the little turreted Monitor defeated the rebel iron-clad Merrimac at Hampton Roads, established the fame of Ericsson, and proclaimed a revolution in naval warfare.

Again America took the lead in naval development, and again the naval constructors of Europe abandoned their latest designs and set at work copying the new and formidable type of war vessel that the Yankees had produced. At no period in the naval history has there been so sudden and complete a revolution wrought in plans and methods of construction as that which immediately followed the success of the "cheese-box on a raft" in 1862. An eminent naval officer has told me that on visiting the office of the chief constructor of the British navy just after our war he found all the models on the walls were adaptations of our Monitor type, and the most formidable iron-clads of England to-day are designed on the same general principles.

The war also furnished another and most conspicuous illustration of American superiority in the destruction of the Alabama by the Kearsarge in the English Channel, June 19, 1864.

The Kearsarge was built at the navy-yard at Kittery, Me., in 1859, and during the progress of the war was sent to cruise in search of the rebel privateer Alabama, which was engaged in capturing and destroying our unarmed merchant vessels.

The Alabama was built for the confederate government in 1862 in the famous Laird ship-yard at Birkenhead, and, being designed three years later than the Kearsarge, represented the best effort of one of the greatest ship-building establishments of Europe in the production of that type of vessel.

In point of size, armament, &c., they were remarkably well matched, as the following figures will show:

	Alabama.	Kearsarge.
Length over all.....feet...	220	232
Length of keel.....do...	210	198½
Beam.....do...	32	33
Depth.....do...	17	16½
Tonnage.....tons...	1,040	1,031

Alabama's battery: Eight guns—one 68-pounder pivot smooth-bore, one 100-pounder pivot rifle, six heavy 32-pounders.

Kearsarge's battery: Seven guns—two 11-inch pivot smooth-bores, one 28-pounder rifle, four light 32-pounders

The Kearsarge, Commander John A. Winslow, lay off and on, outside of Cherbourg, France, for several days until the Alabama, which was in port, made all preparations for the fight and steamed out on Sunday morning, the 19th of June, 1864, under command of Raphael Semmes, accompanied by some English friends in the yacht Deerhound, who had come out to see the Yankee gunboat captured or destroyed.

The Alabama commenced firing first, and the Kearsarge steamed up to close quarters and opened fire, the two vessels circling around a common center and plying their guns until within an hour and a half from the firing of the first shot the rebel cruiser flung her bow high into the air and disappeared forever.

The executive officer of the Alabama, Mr. Kell, in a recent article in the Century magazine, says of that vessel:

The Alabama was built for speed rather than battle. Her lines were symmetrical and fine; her material of the best. In fifteen minutes her propeller could be hoisted, and she could go through every evolution under sail without impediment. In less time her propeller could be lowered; with sails furled and yards braced within two points of a head wind she was a perfect steamer. Her speed independent was from 10 to 12 knots; combined and under favorable circumstances she could make 15 knots.

Yet, after this high praise of his British-built ship, largely manned by seamen from the British navy, Mr. Kell, in accounting for the swift and utter defeat concedes to the Kearsarge superiority of speed and also pays a tribute to the effectiveness of the American guns, saying:

The 11-inch shells of the Kearsarge did fearful work, and her guns were served beautifully, being aimed with precision and deliberate in fire. She came into action magnificently. Having the speed of us, she took her own position and fought gallantly.

In another article in the same magazine Mr. Haywood, one of the Alabama's crew, sums up the the matter as follows:

One grim old tar who had been quartermaster in the British navy and was saved with me, said to the point: "We was whipped because she was a better ship, better manned; had better guns better served. That's about the size of it."

Thus, during the progress of a great civil war, American genius not only revolutionized the construction of armored vessels, but we also demonstrated the superiority of an American wooden sloop of war over a similar type of vessel built three years later by one of the foremost naval constructors of England.

For various reasons, since the war, less has been done to keep up the pre-eminence of our Navy. Our ocean commerce having been largely destroyed, the most of our great wooden-ship building establishments have fallen into decay, and with the attention of our people being more and more directed to internal development, we have failed to make adequate provision for the maintenance of our prestige on the high seas. Yet there has been good work done, and our naval corps is capable of designing as good ships as can be built in any country. There is too much of a tendency to belittle and detract from the ability of our own constructors and engineers. I believe that the bureaus of our Navy Department are capable to-day of furnishing as fine models and as excellent designs for the hulls, engines, and armament of modern warships as can be produced anywhere under the sun. The flippant slurs at the Engineer Bureau which are indulged in by those who want us to buy our ships and our machinery abroad find no warrant in the history of the service. It is a well-known fact that the Wampanoag, built in 1868, made an average speed of 16¾ knots for thirty-eight hours at sea; an average of 17 knots for twenty-four hours, and a maximum speed of 17¾ knots—the fastest time that had ever been made by any ship of war.

The Inconstant, built by the British navy on a similar model and intended to beat the American ship, succeeded in making only 15 knots an hour.

Of another of our vessels, the Vandalia, whose machinery was designed by the Bureau of Steam Engineering under its present accomplished Engineer-in-Chief, and concerning which criticisms have been made, the following commendation was expressed by Sir Thomas Brassey in The British Navy, volume 1, page 545:

The record of the Vandalia affords a good illustration of the efficiency of the type of machinery employed for her. This ship was first commissioned in 1875, and returned home, after a full three years' cruise, late in 1878 in good order, having steamed during her absence the very unusual distance of 26,230 knots. During the entire interval she was never detained a single day in port on account of repairs to the engines or boilers, or for work required in the engineer's department. A record equal to this can rarely be found on the logs of any other American ship of war. There can be no more convincing proof needed that the engines and boilers were properly designed and well built, and had excellent management and care during the cruise.

That is an English indorsement, and on this side of the water we have that of Secretary Whitney's advisory board, who have accepted the designs of the bureau for the machinery of the new steel cruisers.

The present administration seems to have started out with so intense a determination to discredit the new ships commenced under Republican auspices, that no effort has been spared to convince the public that they are failures. The effort was so strong that it overreached itself, and the public has been convinced only of the injustice and recklessness with which the Department drove into bankruptcy in his old age one of the greatest ship-builders in the world, and practically broke up the most important ship-building establishment in the country. The people have looked into this matter and public sentiment has determined that the crusade against John Roach was the most cruel and unjustifiable persecution of which a government was ever guilty toward one of its own worthy citizens.

The people were quick to note and condemn the manner in which one board after another was "organized to convict" the Dolphin of failing to meet the conditions of the contract; and the systematic publication of everything unfavorable, while everything favorable was suppressed, added to the popular conviction that Mr. Roach was not receiving "fair play."

Take the matter of speed. The advisory board reported that it satisfied the conditions of the contract, but the Belknap board was ordered to make a special test. In the Secretary's report in November he gave the official report of the Belknap board, dated June 15, 1885, in which they said:

The board witnessed her performance on the smooth waters of Long Island Sound on three occasions. The conditions were most favorable but the speed attained was not in excess of 15 knots per hour, a result far from promising a like speed at sea, under the conditions she must always be ready to meet in actual service.

In response to a call from the Senate the Secretary recently sent some correspondence, among which appears in print for the first time the following dispatch sent to Captain Belknap nearly a month previous to the date of the report above quoted:

[Telegram.]

NEW YORK, May 28, 1885.

HON. SECRETARY OF NAVY,
Washington, D. C.:

Dolphin ran six consecutive hours to-day without mishap of any sort, averaging from 72 to 76 turns per minute; all conditions very favorable; steam pressure from 84 to 89 pounds; average speed 15½ knots; speed for two hours 15.9 knots per hour; approximate mean collective horse-power, 2,240. As ship was aground on reef on Wednesday, she ought to be docked before sea trial.

G. E. BELKNAP,
President of Board, Astor House.

This shows that she did make an average speed of 15½ knots and a maximum of nearly 16 knots per hour. It will be remembered that the Belknap board also severely denounced the construction of the vessel in many respects, and especially on account of "structural weakness." The naval advisory board, however, very effectively answered the criticisms made, although the Secretary would not publish their report to offset the Belknap strictures that had been promptly given to the press. Finally Capt. R. W. Meade was put under confidential instructions to give the Dolphin another trial at sea. From the experiments to which he subjected the vessel one would infer that he had been ordered to destroy her if possible, but she passed safely through an ordeal that few steamship owners would select with a view to benefiting their vessels.

But Captain Meade's report was withheld, and for months the public could only surmise that his findings were favorable to the devoted craft or the Secretary would have promptly advertised them. A few weeks ago the report saw the light under a resolution of the Senate, and it will make some old salts open their eyes to learn the sort of tests that the Secretary of the Navy deemed it necessary to apply to determine the stability of a vessel. Captain Meade says:

When about 65 miles east by north of Cape Hatteras encountered a moderate gale from the southward, the force of the wind being recorded as from seven to eight; sea rough.

The proposition I made to the civilian experts in order to test the ship was acceded to, and is substantially as follows:

To run the Dolphin under full steam power (draught forced) two hours head to wind and sea; two hours with the wind and sea four points on the starboard bow; two hours before the wind and sea; and, finally, two hours with the wind and sea on the port quarter.

He reports the result of these experiments as follows:

At 7.50 a. m. the trial commenced, the revolutions of the screw being sixty-eight per minute; steam pressure, 75 pounds; speed per log, 11.1 knots; the ship very uneasy, pitching through large arcs and taking large quantities of water forward, necessitating the battening down of the hatches.

The lack of a proper number of freeing ports now became painfully evident. The angle of pitch was 20°; S'cend, 15°; roll to starboard and port, not over 5°.

At 10 a. m., just as the first part of the proposed trial was over and I was about to subject the vessel to the second test of running with wind and sea on the bow, instead of directly ahead, she plunged and took a solid green sea over the bows, which carried away bridge-ladders and gratings, started the frame-work of the bridge, filled the pilot-house and forward fire-room ventilators, and left 2½ feet of water fore and aft the deck, which passed off through the scuppers and filling ports very slowly (on reducing the speed), the ship trembling under the increased weight—which must have been quite 40 tons—and manifestly suffering.

Not desiring to strain the vessel unnecessarily, I slowed the engines until the ship became dry and easy; the revolutions were then forty per minute and the speed by log 3 knots, the ship being still head to wind and sea.

I am satisfied, however, that had I continued to urge the Dolphin to full speed she would speedily have been in great jeopardy from the vast amount of water which would have continued to come on board owing to the absence of the usual "turtle back" fitted to small vessels required to run at high speed in rough water.

Yet under like conditions of wind and sea the steamers of the Ward, Alexandre, or Cromwell lines, and even the small channel packets (half the size of the Dolphin), could have made their schedule speed without any difficulty. The gale was but a moderate one, and just before the heavy sea referred to was shipped I noticed several merchant vessels running before the wind under top-gallant sails. The sea, however, was rough for a small vessel.

The Dolphin, as at present fitted, can not safely be driven at full power even in moderately rough water, and my opinion is, she is merely useful for smooth-water dispatch.

Under these circumstances it seems rather a misnomer to call her a "dispatch vessel."

And comparing her with sea-going yachts she appears to great disadvantage, since she is too large, too expensive, and much too ill-arranged and inconvenient for use as a pleasure craft. (See Inclosure C.)

About 2.30 p. m., with the acquiescence of the civilian experts, I altered the course to the westward to close with the land, and ran the vessel in the trough of the sea to test her rolling powers. I soon found I could not run her over forty revolutions per minute without endangering the boats, and forty revolutions under the circumstances only gave a speed of about 6 knots. The engine-room pendulum showed the greatest roll to be 26°, but the pendulum in the pilot-house marked 40° to leeward and 34° to windward. Yet the roll was easy, and she shipped no water so long as the revolutions were kept down to forty. The experiment of increasing them to fifty caused her to roll quickly and uneasily, and I slowed again.

During this time neither myself or officers observed any lack of strength in hull or machinery, and through the voice-tube from the pilot-house I was in constant communication with the engine-room. If any structural weakness exist it did not exhibit itself; and the engines ran smoothly, and were only stopped once in sixty-four hours, and then merely to sound. There was but slight tendency to heat reported, and no unusual amount of oil or water, for a new ship, used on bearings or journals. The ship arrived at Hampton Roads the next morning.

By separating the statements of fact from the expression of opinions in the above report it will be seen that this much-criticised vessel was subjected to most extraordinary tests of her stability, and that she ever reached port to tell the story of how she had been driven into a heavy head-beat sea at the rate of over 11 knots an hour, and then run "in the trough of the sea to test her rolling powers," is in itself an ample refutation of the charge of "structural weakness."

It will also be seen that the criticism of Captain Mead, as he says, "concerns the designer rather than the builder." In other words, he raises a question of judgment as to the design between himself and the other eminent naval officers and civilian experts who designed the vessel. Such a dispute would be likely to arise between any two sets of persons and is a matter of opinion.

A strenuous effort seems to have been made to figure the speed of the Dolphin down to the lowest point, but the statistics given in the log reports of the various trials show indisputably that the vessel developed more than the fifteen knots claimed by her designers; and Admiral Simpson says, in an article printed since all the trials were made:

She (the Dolphin) has proved herself eminently successful, and is the fastest sea steamer of her displacement built in the United States, with perhaps the exception of the steam-yacht Atlanta. She is a staunch vessel of great structural strength, and does credit to the ship-building profession of the country.

The action of the Department in finally, though reluctantly, accepting the vessel and undertaking the completion of her consorts is a confession that the unprecedented efforts made have failed to discredit these first-fruits of American handiwork in the line of building steel ships of war.

It now seems that the administration, which commenced by breaking down the greatest ship-building establishment in America, is following its un-American policy by going to England for designs for our ships, and insisting that we shall literally copy a foreign model.

This is the first time, to my knowledge, in the history of this country when we have had before us the proposition to lower our standard and say to England or any other country, "We acknowledge that with all our inventive capacity and ability we must come to you and take your models and build upon them without improvement or modification."

I protest that we have the ability, and it should be a matter of national pride with us to improve upon the best models and designs that the Old World can furnish, and to put afloat American ships of American design, and built of American materials, that will set the example of our superiority as of old. [Applause.]

Mr. HERBERT. My colleague on the committee from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] is very badly mistaken in his facts. When, in 1867, engines were put into the Quinnebaug Secretary Welles bought them abroad as models by which our builders in this country could work and on which they were expected to improve. So, when the American line of steamships constructed their four vessels, the Pennsylvania, the Ohio, the Illinois, and the Indiana, it was understood and recommended that William Cramp & Sons should go abroad and purchase plans, which they did, at an expense of more than $10,000. This shows that the gentleman is not familiar with the facts at all. The Yankee of this country is ahead of the world, because he puts himself ahead whenever he can. That is exactly what Secretary Whitney has done. He has bought the plans of the best cruiser that has ever been constructed, the last result of twenty years' experience in ship-building. Now, as to the substitute, I have only this to say, and I think I speak for all the majority of the committee.

We have not changed our opinion. We thought at the time that it would be well to appropriate the amount of money carried in the original bill and to build the number of ships there provided for; but we recognize the fact that the committee is simply a representative of the House; and when we found that there was an opinion in the House that we ought not to expend this year as much money as was carried in that bill and that we ought not to authorize the building of as many ships as were there authorized, we conformed to what we believed to be the sentiment of the House, and for that we have no apology to offer.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I think we will show the gentleman that that sentiment does not exist on this side of the House.

Mr. HERBERT. Very well; perhaps it does not. But we understood that to be the sense of the House, and therefore we proposed this substitute. I ask gentlemen who are in earnest in their desire to do something for the Navy to stand by the majority of the committee upon this substitute, and I ask gentlemen on the other side who are in favor of even more to stand by the substitute upon the principle that "half a loaf is better than no bread."

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why should we not have the whole loaf?

Mr. REED, of Maine. If the gentleman from Alabama will permit me, I will say this: If you have forty Democrats who are in favor of your original idea you can carry it, because our side will vote for it. If you have not forty Democrats who are in favor of it, I shall be glad to see you admit it in this way.

Mr. HERBERT. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that there will be attempts to load down this bill, but I hope the gentleman from Maine will not do anything of that kind.

Mr. REED, of Maine. "Load it down" with your original proposition!

Mr. BOUTELLE. Is not the chairman of the committee in favor of the original bill?

Mr. HERBERT. I have spoken on that question. No, not now. I am in favor of the substitute now.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We will give you an opportunity to show what you are in favor of.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Well, do not say that we "load it down" when we simply give you your own original proposition.

Mr. HOPKINS. That was an embarrassing question which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] asked, and he ought not to have asked it.

Mr. HERBERT. I am not embarrassed at all. I say that I am in favor of the substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, in the Forty-eighth Congress Mr. Ellis, of Louisiana, then a member of the House and on the Committee on Naval Affairs, stated that since the war $154,000,000 had been expended for the construction and repair of the Navy, and that the money was gone and the Navy with it. In the Forty-seventh Congress we spent time and money in an effort to repair the old monitors, which were of no value at all. I remember that a long time ago Davy Crockett, then a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Tennessee, said, "Whar' now is your public Treasury? Echo answers, nowhar'." The same might be said, Mr. Chairman, of our Navy and of our expenditures for it. I am in favor of the bill as introduced, because it received the sanction of the administration and of a majority of the committee. Who would not favor the construction of a navy for this country? Who can fail to remember the glorious achievements of our Navy. In 1812 and 1813, when the British fleet was on our coast and our armies surrendered and disaster came upon us and our capital was burned, our improvised Navy went out upon the high seas, lowered the flag of the greatest nation in the world, and, as a result of that war, gave the country consequence before the world.

Mr. Chairman, we should be provided against war. In the affairs of humanity wars come suddenly upon all nations. Wars have come to us. We have been engaged in two foreign wars. We have had a domestic war. The wise men of to-day may say they knew the war was coming; but the wise men of that day did not know it was coming. If the storm had at that time burst suddenly upon the country in all its force, and we had at the beginning of the terrible struggle understood the magnitude of the war, that it would involve an expenditure of billions of money and the loss of seven hundred thousand precious lives, perhaps nobody would have been brave enough to face the conflict. But as the war progressed we realized its magnitude, and stood by the issue which had been made up of fanaticism, frenzy, and insanity.

It is true, Mr. Chairman, that we did improvise a navy which blockaded the Southern coast—the only actual blockade in the history of the world. It was not a blockade by proclamation; foreign countries admitted that we did blockade 4,000 miles of coast with an improvised navy. But that blockade was intended to prevent commercial intercourse between the people of the South and foreign countries; we never with that navy could have resisted foreign aggression. One ship of the Italian navy could have destroyed our whole blockading squadron if gathered together.

Now, the administration is in favor of commencing the building of a navy. There is no use turning this question into politics. It is a question which appeals to the American heart. Our commerce should be extended throughout the world, and should be protected under the flag of this country and by the guns of this Government. Why, Mr. Chairman, in the Forty-seventh Congress I introduced a bill appropriating $25,000 to try experiments on steel armor made in this country. An ingenious man in the State of Pennsylvania discovered that he could weld steel of three qualities: the first pliable, the second harder, and the outside layer as hard as a file. There was thus constructed a plate 13 feet long and 6 feet wide; but the Government of the United States admits that it has not a single gun with which to try experiments upon that plate.

Now, as I understand, the present administration has reported through this committee a modified proposition to commence building a navy. If you would appropriate $100,000,000 you could not build a navy at once, though you did improvise a fleet at the time of our domestic war. It is proposed now to make cruisers. What difference about the models? The learned gentleman and gallant sailor from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has said that we accept English models. Why, I would have that gentleman remember that the fight down here in Hampton Roads between the Merrimac and the Monitor changed the naval warfare of the world. The ingenuity of our people conceived a plan of warfare with iron-clad or steel-clad cruisers or ships of war. Foreign nations imitated our example. If there is anywhere in the world a model of a ship better than we have yet constructed in this country, let us adopt it. Let us take it for what it is worth. Let us build a navy, proceeding, as proposed by the administration and by the bill under consideration, by degrees, and thus prepare for the future and be prepared for war if such a calamity is in the future to afflict our country and interrupt our peaceful pursuits, and further break our normal condition.

Let us make adequate appropriations now, so that we may have the cruisers upon the high seas as soon as possible to defend our commerce. As I understand now, the great question is whether you can build a cruiser with one gun which can get away from the big ships which can not make the same speed that your cruiser makes, and that should be our policy. Let us give our commerce protection; let us build up a navy such as will comport with the glory and power and consequence of this country. Let us do it through the administration in power. And I say to the gentleman from Maine that the administration now in power and the man who occupies the Presidential Mansion stand by the measure now proposed; and we on this side of the House will stand by it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Which bill do you understand the administration stands by?

Mr. CURTIN. As I understand, the substitute—the smaller one.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The "half-a-loaf" proposition.

Mr. CURTIN. I do not care whether it is "half a loaf" or one grain of wheat that is to make the loaf. I want a navy. I do not want it to be said that we have spent $154,000,000 for a navy and have neither the money nor the Navy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the gentleman understand that the administration desires the passage of this bill cut in two in this way?

Mr. CURTIN. I understand that from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That this measure is desired by the Department?

Mr. CURTIN. I understand so.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The chairman of the committee does not say so.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should like to have that matter understood.

Mr. CURTIN. I think he means that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. He does not say it; and he is silent yet.

Mr. CURTIN. I understand that it meets the approbation of the Navy Department.

Mr. HERBERT. I have not said anything as to what the President wishes. This bill was reported from the committee; the committee considered and approved it. That is what I said.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What do you understand the fact to be?

Mr. HERBERT. I understand the fact to be that the committee reported this substitute, and are in favor of its passage.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do you not understand that the administration wants the bill as reported in the first instance?

Mr. HERBERT. Neither the Secretary of the Navy nor the President is a part of the legislative power or a part of this House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I hope you are in harmony with them.

Mr. HERBERT. I think I am. They are both in favor of increasing the Navy; so am I; and so is the committee.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We do not want another Department out of joint.

Mr. CURTIN. Nobody is "out of joint." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time allowed for general debate has now expired.

Mr. CURTIN. I am quite sure this bill meets the approbation of the administration.

Mr. HERBERT. I have no doubt it approves of everything in it.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The administration does not seem to have the support of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. CURTIN. Oh, yes, it has; and I would be willing to give $100,000,000 if necessary for this purpose.

Mr. HERBERT. If I can have order, I desire——

Mr. CURTIN (addressing the Republican side of the House). You are an organized party on your side; we are not well organized. [Laughter.] You move at the indication of the distinguished gentleman from Maine. We do not move at anybody's indication. I would like to know where I am. [Laughter.] Surely I desire to submit to party discipline, and in doing so to advocate measures that will give a navy to the country worthy of its consequence and magnitude in the nations of the world.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the substitute be considered instead of the original bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. We are in favor of the original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to taking up and considering the substitute instead of the original bill?

Mr. REED, of Maine. I object.

Mr. HERBERT. Very well; then let us proceed with the consideration of the original bill, and I give notice that when we get through with it I will offer the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate has expired, and the bill will now be considered under the five-minute rule, and will be read by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President is hereby authorized to have constructed, as hereinafter provided—

First. Two sea-going double-bottomed armored vessels of about 6,000 tons displacement, designed for a speed of at least 16 knots an hour, with engines having all necessary appliances for working under forced draught, and costing, including engines and machinery and excluding armament, not more than $2,500,000 each. Toward the construction of said vessels the sum of $1,250,000 is hereby appropriated. Said cruisers shall have each a complete torpedo outfit and be armed in the most effective manner.

Second. Three protected double-bottomed cruisers of not less than 3,500 nor more than 5,000 tons displacement, with the best type of modern engines, furnished with necessary appliances for working under forced draught, said cruisers designed to have the highest practicable speed. No one of said vessels shall cost, including engines and machinery and excluding armament, exceeding $1,500,000, and the cost of the three vessels, including engines and machinery, shall not exceed $4,000,000. Two of said cruisers shall be provided with spars and rigging to spread at least two-thirds of full sail-power: Provided, however, That said spars shall be easily removable in case of need. The other of said cruisers shall be required to have only military masts, but shall be so constructed that masts and spars may be readily inserted sufficient to carry at least two-thirds of full sail-power. Toward the construction of said cruisers the sum of $1,100,000 is hereby appropriated. Said cruisers shall be armed in the most effective manner.

Mr. BALLENTINE was recognized.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is this being read for amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Has the first reading been waived?

The CHAIRMAN. It has.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose, and Mr. MCADOO took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 9208) to permit the entry free of duty of foreign goods for exhibition at the fourth annual exhibition of the United States Bottlers' Protective Association; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 129) directing the Public Printer to forward the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to our legations abroad.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 453) for the erection of a public building at Jacksonville, Fla.; and

A bill (S. 1492) for the relief of Ellen Sadler, sister of John Sadler.

It further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2609) granting a pension to Emily J. Stannard, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses to the amendments of the House, and had appointed as managers of said conference on their part Mr. SEWELL, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. WILSON, of Maryland.

NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

Mr. BALLENTINE. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out paragraph 2, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"One cruiser of not less than 2,500 nor more than 3,500 tons displacement; said cruiser to be constructed upon designs, plans, and specifications furnished by Charles G. Lundborg, of New York, and under his supervision and direction. The said vessel shall have the highest practicable speed (not less than 20 knots per hour), full sail power, and an armament as heavy as may be compatible with the foregoing conditions. The cost of said vessel, including engines and machinery and exclusive of armament, shall not exceed the sum of $1,200,000, which sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated."

Mr. BALLENTINE. Mr. Chairman, in submitting this amendment, I do so in view of the fact, publicly stated, that during the last administration the Navy Department procured the plans of the Esmeralda, a cruiser built in England for the Chilian Government, and the advisory board accepted this design as a type of vessel of the highest speed and greatest efficiency after which to model and construct the ships now building at Chester. The present administration has purchased the plans of the Naniwa-Kan, and propose to build a cruiser upon her design. Neither of these ships is over 18 knots speed, and the copies which our Government propose to build will not be likely to equal the originals in speed and efficiency. The ship proposed by the amendment just read will be superior to both these foreign plans, as attested by the eminent authorities who indorse it.

"There is a rank due to the United States among nations which will be withheld, if not absolutely lost, by the reputation of weakness. If we desire to avoid insult we must be able to repel it; if we desire to secure peace, one of the most powerful instruments of our prosperity, it must be known at all times that we are ready for war."

Mr. Chairman, these words of wisdom and sound policy, spoken by the first Chief Magistrate of the Republic, inspired the organization and development of a naval establishment in this country, which enabled us to repel insult, vindicate the rights of our citizens, defend our national honor, and achieve the highest rank among the foremost naval powers of the world. Under the wise counsel of Washington we achieved this high distinction within the first half-century of our national existence.

If we desire to relieve ourselves from our present condition of defenselessness, avert humiliation and disgrace, we must return to the wise policy enunciated and carried out by the Father of his Country. The time for doing so is both opportune and propitious. Public sentiment demands it, and the condition of our public Treasury warrants it. It devolves upon Congress to enact the necessary legislation to establish an adequate and efficient navy for this country.

Two questions confront us: What kind of a navy do we require, and how can we secure it? In solving these important questions correctly, it may not be unprofitable to take a retrospective view of our naval history. The inventive talent, mechanical skill, and undaunted courage of our people, stimulated by an ardent patriotism, attained for us the highest distinction, and secured national safety and prosperity. We continued to hold this proud position of honor and security until wooden walls were superseded by ironclads and turreted ships, created out of the unfortunate emergency of our internal conflict. Even in the extraordinary transition in naval construction, from wooden to iron vessels, we taught the naval powers of the world, and revolutionized, by the results of a single engagement, their systems and establishments. The encounter between the Merrimac and Monitor inaugurated a new era in naval architecture. The results demonstrated in the naval battle of Hampton Roads rendered obsolete the navies of the world. The enterprise, ingenuity, and skill of our people were again equal to the great emergency. They adopted the innovations in naval construction with alacrity, and produced with wonderful facility and dispatch a formidable fleet of ironclads, gunboats, and cruisers, the number and type being controlled only by the public necessity and the facilities available to build them.

Our war navy was an emergency navy. When it had fulfilled the purposes for which it had been created, it should have given place to, and should have been superseded by, a modernized fleet of efficient, superior ships of the latest improved type. It should have been apparent not only to our naval constructors but also to the administration that the radical and universal change in the methods and materials of marine construction rendered it impossible to make our war navy permanently useful and efficient as a peace establishment. Here is where our fatal naval policy began. Waste, extravagance, and disgrace followed. Disregarding the grand achievements and glorious history of our gallant Navy in the past, and ignoring all improvements in naval architecture and construction, we degenerated into a navy for repairs only. This policy, wasteful and profligate, not only squandered many millions of the public funds, wrung from the honest tax-payers of the country, but it excited the cupidity of the unscrupulous and venal, and was prolific of jobbery, corruption, and scandal.

If proof is demanded in support of this grave charge I need only cite the books of the public Treasury, which will disclose the fact that the expenditures for the Navy from 1866 to the present time, covering a period of twenty years since the war, aggregate the enormous sum of over $400,000,000. And then examine the Register of our Navy, and you will not find a single first-class war ship. Is not this a national disgrace?

It is the permanent policy of all the first-class naval powers of Europe, and particularly of Germany, France, and England, to destroy their obsolete war ships and to replace them with modern improved types. It seems most singular indeed that we do not possess the wisdom and sagacity to adopt a similar policy, as it is in the interest of both economy and the efficiency of our Navy. But it is still more inexplicable that we should now attempt to rehabilitate our Navy by undertaking to reproduce obsolete English ships.

While we have been squandering hundreds of millions in repairing old ships other nations have availed themselves of the latest inventions and improvements in naval architecture, and, keeping up with the progress of the science, they have modern efficient naval establishments. During our era of repairs

England expended for new modern ships over	$170,000,000
France expended about	90,000,000
Germany	60,000,000
Italy	32,000,000
Holland	20,000,000
Turkey	17,000,000
Brazil	10,000,800
Chili	7,000,000

In addition to these vast expenditures by England and Germany and France, these powers have now under consideration propositions to still further increase their naval establishments, at an aggregate expense of over $100,000,000.

Uncle Sam's "naval repairs" teat having run dry, and the voracious cormorants tugging at it for twenty years having let loose their hold, it may be assumed that we are now in condition to enter upon a new era for the restoration of our Navy to its former position of efficiency and distinction.

In entering upon this new era let Congress make no mistake. As to the proper measures necessary to provide this country with a naval establishment commensurate with its necessities, upon that momentous question there is a wide difference of opinion. But it may be contended that the era of rebuilding our Navy began a few years ago when Congress provided for the construction of the Chicago, Boston, Atlanta, and Dolphin.

The new ships now building are surrounded by the most serious doubts as to their success. The Dolphin is pronounced a failure. Will the Chicago, the Boston, and the Atlanta be any better? All the criticisms upon them, both in this country and England, are adverse and condemnatory. Chief Engineer Isherwood, one of the ablest and most experienced officers of our Navy, testified concerning the Chicago as follows:

Her machinery is inefficient in type, and will fail at high speed. She has but half sail-power, and can not cruise under sails; she will always have to use steam. Her speed will be entirely too little, and her endurance much too small.

Concerning the Atlanta and Boston, he said:

That excepting their machinery they would have all the faults of the Chicago in an exaggerated degree.

But assuming that these vessels may fulfill the expectations and prove successful, according to the theories of their designers, even then they will then be comparatively useless and not equal to the exigencies of the times. In what respect, may I inquire, do the cruisers provided for in the pending bill differ from those now building at Chester? Only in size and cost. Like the Chicago and her consorts, the proposed ships will be too slow for cruisers and too vulnerable to give battle. Not being able to fight or run, I ask, what are this class of vessels fit for? Are they intended as slow pleasure boats to accommodate a few line officers of our Navy with independent commands? For any other purpose they will be absolutely worthless.

The political situation and necessities of this nation differ entirely from those of European countries. We have no outlying colonial possessions to maintain and defend. A naval establishment suitable and adequate for their purposes would not be adapted to the requirements of this country. If we should get into war with any of the great naval powers of Europe, we would encounter ironclads of the most formidable type. In such a conflict armored cruisers, and especially of low speed and light armor, such as we are building and propose to build under the provisions of this bill, would be utterly worthless. In defending our seaboard we must be prepared to resist and fight the largest and most powerful iron-clad navy in the world, and to do that successfully requires ships equal to if not superior to the best now afloat. The idea advanced in some quarters that forts and torpedoes are a safe reliance for the protection of our exposed cities is utterly untenable. The sea must be the field of battle, and therefore a navy is essential. But if forts and torpedoes were adequate as a means of defense, to fortify our extended seaboard would cost more than ten times the amount necessary to build a powerful navy. A scheme already reported by the "ordnance commission" estimates the cost of earthen-work forts and great guns alone at $126,000,000.

In referring to the matter of independent commands, an explanation may be found in the following extract from the testimony before the Naval Committee of one of the most intelligent officers of our Navy, who says:

I would have these vessels for the purpose of giving command to lieutenants, who are rusting out for want of something to do. We have the finest body of lieutenants in the world, simply rusting away.

This, sir, is doubtless an honest expression of the prevailing sentiment of our Navy. It is no doubt the dominant sentiment among the line officers, who are all anxious that the Government should build a large number of small ships, so that each one of these "rusty lieutenants" may have an independent command. It seems to be a fancy and not an efficient Navy which these officers desire.

Can it be possible that the views and desires of this class of officers have controlled the head of the Navy Department in his recommendations to Congress as to what class of vessels should be built at this time? Whether such influences have controlled or not I am unable to state, but it is a fact patent to any one who reads the testimony before the Naval Committee that there is a remarkable concurrence of views on this subject between the line officers and the head of the Department. But the important fact was not disclosed whether the vessels recommended to be built are to increase the efficiency of the Navy, or only to gratify "rusty lieutenants" with independent commands.

The Committee on Naval Affairs, of which I have the honor of being a member, has recommended the building of five additional vessels, ranging from 3,500 to 6,000 tons displacement. The largest of these are to have armor belts of the maximum thickness of 10 inches, protecting the engines, boilers, and magazines. They will probably carry a few 10-inch breech-loading rifle guns, besides some lighter ordnance and machine-guns, and they are believed to make quite formidable fighting ships. The weight of thicker armor plates than permitted by the limited displacement would, of course, necessitate a larger ship. Let us now for a moment suppose two vessels of precisely equal speed and armanent, but one of them unarmored, having no protective armor at all, while the other carried a protective belt of compound plates of 10 inches at the water line. We would naturally at once conclude that the unarmored ship had no chance whatever in a contest with the armored one. Let us see, however: The two vessels, if armored with 10-inch breech-loading guns, would be within range of each other at a distance of 5 miles or more. But I will suppose that they approached each other to within a distance of 7,000 yards, or about 4 miles.

Referring to the report to the present Congress by the Select Committee of the Senate upon Ordnance and War-ships, we find, page 25, that at the distance of 7,000 yards, the projectile from a 10-inch breech-loader will penetrate a plate of solid wrought iron of 13.23 inches thickness. At that distance, therefore, the 10-inch armor would probably be penetrated if fairly hit, and its capability of protection would thus be, if not completely nullified, at least very much reduced. The only practical advantage that one vessel might have over the other would, consequently, consist in the best gunnery, and that leads us to inquire what would be the chances of hitting each other at that distance. A circle with a radius of 7,000 yards has a circumference of nearly 44,000 yards, or 132,000 feet, and assuming the ship to be 300 feet long it follows that it would occupy only one four-hundredth part of the circumference, or less than one degree.

Any artillerist with experience in a seagoing vessel knows that the chances of hitting a ship under such circumstances, taking into consideration the motion of the vessel, are very small—not one in a hundred. At shorter range the armor would offer no protection at all against the projectiles from the 10-inch gun, which at a distance of 4,000 yards, or about 2½ miles, would penetrate 16.33 and at 2,000 yards 18.96 inches of solid iron. Indeed, it will be seen that at this distance the 10-inch plating would offer no effectual protection even against the 8-inch breach-loading rifle gun, the projectile of which would then penetrate 13.63 inches of solid wrought iron.

It appears, therefore, that the chances of the unarmored ship would not be quite so hopeless as at first supposed. So far from that being the case, the issue of the battle would most likely depend upon the most skillful commander and upon the greater steadiness, the ship presenting the most steady gun platform or most free from rolling and pitching having a most decided advantage, and if this advantage should happen to be on the side of the unarmored ship it would probably more than counterbalance the armor. It is evident, however, that the protection obtained by a moderate thickness of armor plates against modern guns such, as most ships now carry, is only imaginary, and thus we come to the conclusion that cruisers—the principal object of which can only be to show our flag in distant waters, protect our merchant ships, if we had any to protect, and possibly to destroy those of an enemy in times of war—would be as effective if unarmored as if armored. On the score of economy, since the difference in cost between the two kinds of vessels is very great, this may be well worthy of consideration.

But if armor of moderate thickness, such as is used by the most powerful cruisers, like the English Warspite and Imperieuse, the armor of which has ten inches maximum thickness, can not be considered to afford protection even against an unarmored vessel of equal strength, what quality then would be most desirable as conducive to superiority? The answer is speed. In this direction lies the way to improvement. Superior speed means substantially superior power, whether for offense or defense. A difference of only a quarter of a knot between two ships otherwise equal gives such a decided advantage that it means victory. This quality is of so great importance that no effort should be spared to gain any possible improvement in this respect. Improvement in that direction is of far greater importance than improvements in guns and armor, because the advantage of the former will always exist, whatever may be the fate of enormously heavy armor plates and guns, which is in the highest degree problematical.

Modern iron-clad ships have never been in battle, and we know consequently absolutely nothing of what is likely to happen, except by theory. There has been no experience whatever in the matter worth mentioning, except so far as regards experiments in firing against targets on shore, consisting of iron or steel plates fastened to frames, representing a ship's side. But I need hardly say that the experience derived from such experiments must be greatly at variance with what is likely to happen on a vessel moving in the sea. These experiments in firing against targets, which have been carried on by the European powers for more than twenty years, or ever since the memorable battle in Hampton Roads between the Monitor and Merrimac inaugurated the era of iron-clad ships, have cost enormous sums, hundreds of millions of dollars.

Even the smallest European nations, living as they do in a chronic state of political uncertainty requiring great sacrifices and unceasing vigilance and preparation for possible eventualities, have found it necessary to spend large sums upon such experiments. But owing to our isolated geographical position our people have not been called upon for sacrifices of such nature. The fruit of these enormously expensive experiments have come to us gratuitously, and this fact might be urged as one of the reasons why our country, rich and powerful as it is, should not hesitate to bear any reasonable expense that might be needed in the practical solution of questions which may be of importance for our national security and honor.

If these experiments against targets have proved anything at all it is that no steel, compound, or iron plate yet manufactured is strong enough to resist the projectiles from a heavy modern gun. At the experiments at Spezzia in the latter part of 1884 with a 100-ton gun against solid steel and compound plates of 19 inches thickness it was found that the projectile weighing 1,840 pounds passed through the plates with the greatest ease. An examination of the table on page xxv of the report of the Committee on Ordnance and War-ships shows, that the projectile from the 100-ton gun will penetrate 29 inches of solid iron at the distance of 1,000 yards, and it also shows how little protection may really be expected from the armor in a battle between large ironclads armed with heavy guns, particularly if engaged at close quarters. The probability is that they would sink each other.

The only recent trial of iron-clad ships from which can be drawn even an approximate estimate of their efficiency and power was the bombardment of Alexandria by the British fleet in 1882. But that was an engagement between ships and forts, and gives no reliable data as to what is likely to happen in a battle between ships armed with heavy modern guns. The Egyptians were greatly overmatched, having only mostly light smooth-bore guns to oppose tremendously heavy rifled breech-loaders. Yet it is shown by the results of that unequal conflict that the few rifled muzzle-loaders of the Egyptians, although much inferior to the modern high-power rifled breech-loader, did considerable damage. The Inflexible, the most powerful ironclad of the British fleet, having armor 24 inches thick, was penetrated below water, necessitating her going into dock at Malta for repairs. The extent of the damage was, however, concealed from the public, which would indicate that it was of a serious character.

It is safe to say that the first battle between iron-clad ships will totally upset a great many notions and theories prevailing at the present time, and the inevitable consequence will then be a more or less complete remodeling and rebuilding of all navies in the world, and it would not be at all surprising if the final result would be a total discarding of all sorts of ponderous armor on vessels. It is clearly evident that all modern war ships, ironclads, armored, and belted cruisers, are, without a single exception, huge experiments. The philosopher may well ask why is it that all these vast sums, aggregating thousands of millions, have been spent upon a matter involving so much uncertainty.

Was there ever in all history, such a display of reckless folly? Never! Posterity will contemplate with wonder and amazement this extravagant and wasteful expenditure. And this, too, in an age of progress and vaunting intelligence. It is idle to speculate upon what incalculable benefit might have been conferred upon mankind if this vast treasure had been expended upon matters of practical utility instead of upon these studendous experiments.

If the Cumberland and Congress on that memorable day in Hampton Roads had been armed with modern guns, the projectiles from which would have crashed through the improvised iron-clad sides of the Merrimac as through brown wrapping paper, not only would those ill-fated ships probably be afloat to-day, but we should in all likelihood never have witnessed the enormous development of tremendous guns and iron-clad ships which has since taken place. At the period of the beginning of our late unpleasantness the great powers of Europe were in a state of nervous expectation, watching every movement of the Sphinx in the Tuileries of Paris. The Empress Eugenie astounded the better half of mankind with new inventions and adornments in female attire, and while she was absorbed in the mazes and intricate tours of the lanciers, which through her heroic efforts was made to triumph over the polka, her crafty husband racked his brain with new projects and inventions in fire-arms, cuirasses, and explosives. The event of the Monitor gave him the clue so eagerly sought for, and the result was the Gloire, the first iron-clad ship ever built in Europe. This, of course, excited the jealousy of England, and so the ball was set rolling.

It is needless to review the developments of the modern navies which have followed. Every year, every month has brought a change. New plans are started and acted upon in rapid succession, and new ships are projected and built almost without even the slightest regard to cost, but only more formidable in theory—only in theory, sir, for the practical test of these stupendous experiments is yet to come. As to when and where the limit is to be no one can tell. It would seem that the size of the ships necessary to carry a still greater burden of armor, guns, engines, and coal is limited by the draught of water at the entrance to harbors, but that limit is yet far off, not perhaps with the present model, as exemplified in the largest English and other foreign ships, but with improved models there is yet a wide range beyond the tonnage of the largest vessel ever yet designed before the size of ships will be limited even by the depth of harbors on our coast. Guns of 150 tons and more, throwing projectiles of 1½ tons, are already projected, and the thickness of armor plates will no doubt keep time to the music, until a naval war shall happily deliver us from this terrible nightmare.

This is a time of rapid transitions, the age of evolution in every direction, and the most formidable iron-clad ship of to-day, may be practically useless a few years hence. Common sense, sir, divested of all sophistry, is after all not a bad guide, and it points out plainly enough that the near future, perhaps within the next few years, will witness a total revolution in the building of war ships, and probably in naval architecture. This state of transition which, while we go on building armored ships, may, and probably will, end in the actual throwing away of most, if not all, of the public money hitherto spent and now proposed to be appropriated upon the Navy, clearly points to a conservative policy on the part of this country as the wisest and most prudent under the circumstances. Although we may realize the utter folly of spending large sums of money upon a matter of so extremely doubtful a nature as the building of vessels to-day which may be obsolete to-morrow, yet I can see no way of escaping from the dilemma.

The necessities of the country demand a navy. This country, North, South, East, and West, appreciates the importance of the fact that all the great cities on our coast, with an aggregate value of five thousand million dollars, are at the present moment practically defenseless against the fire of an enemy's guns. Such a state of things, which makes it possible for any nation possessing a ship with heavy guns to come and insult us with impunity, should not be permitted to exist. While it lasts it is a blot upon the national honor, and as there seems to be no other policy left us we are thus reluctantly compelled to strike in, even at this late hour, upon a road similar to that upon which the European powers have been traveling for the last quarter of a century.

We are now building what is called unarmored cruisers and are on the point of beginning to build armored ones, and the bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs now before the House contemplates, besides more cruisers, the building of two iron-clad vessels, each of about 6,000 tons displacement. This, it is thought, will be the beginning, the nucleus of an efficient navy, commensurate with the power and greatness of our people.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope it may. But an indispensable condition for an early realization of this hope requires us to emancipate ourselves at once from European tutelage. If we are compelled by the force of circumstances to build up a navy of iron-clad ships, although with the full knowledge that they may all be worthless for their intended purpose within a few years, or perhaps even before they have been completed, if we are forced to do this apparently senseless act, let us at least confine ourselves to the act itself without committing the fatal error of simply imitating other nations, particularly Great Britain, in the building of our ships. The copy is always worse than the original, and if we go on imitating the English or other people's vessels we must, with mathematical certainty, always be behind, always remain in the rear instead of being in the front, which is our rightful position among the naval powers of the world.

But here I would ask, Why is it that we never hear of any but English-built ships as the original for our copies? Why do we never hear of other nations as having vessels worthy of our consideration? It is England—England, first and last England. But we are alone in this abject adulation. Other nations do not blindly follow in her wake in the construction of their vessels. They all have confidence in the ability of their own people, and while they all must admit the fact that John Bull has a very long purse, they are not by any means prepared to accord to him superior intelligence; but to the very contrary they are apt to remember that Englishmen always were, and are, greatest in their own conceit. This abject pandering to English conceit, believe me, sir, is repulsive to American feelings. The very thought of an emergency which makes us dependent upon England is humiliating.

Does this nation of sixty million people possess less intelligence and independence now than in the past? Have we degenerated and forgotten our glorious history, or are we unworthy as successors of the heroes and statesmen who achieved our national independence? If not, then let us cease to debase ourselves before the world. Let us cease to go hunting after foreign designs and begging foreign constructors to teach us how to build a navy. I am sure that I reflect the feelings and sentiments of the American people when I characterize as disgraceful the recent covert overtures and negotiations to this end reported in the public prints. Is it not sufficiently humiliating to proclaim our defenselessness from the house-tops? Must we offend our national pride by a confession of ignorance, inefficiency, and helplessness? With such national debasement I would hardly be surprised to hear of a proposition not only to buy our war ships of England, but also to man them with British sailors.

England's greatness, sir, like that of any other country, has been attained through originality, and not by imitation. An Englishman scorns to imitate anybody under the sun. He may be flattered for a moment by foreign, fawning imitation, but his unerring instinct of manhood will breed a sovereign contempt for the individual or nation practicing it. He acknowledges no superiority over the achievements of his country, and that spirit, Mr. Chairman, has given England the lead in the march of civilization. No people, sir, ever achieved greatness by force of imitation. A nation must be true to itself or sink into insignificance and contempt. Let us be Americans at all hazards, for no grotesqueness to which originality may lead us can be more revolting and debasing than a cowardly policy of imitation. Let us continue to be Americans. Let us stand on our own bottom, free and independent, and rely upon the genius and the skill of our own people, now as in by-gone days.

But in order to make superiority possible it is absolutely necessary to take a new departure. The road leading to tremendously heavy armor and guns, in which we are far behind the European powers, and in which it would be hopeless to attempt ever to take the lead, is not the road for us to superiority. But there is another way, which may lead to improvements of more substantial value. It is the improved ship itself. If we can improve the qualities of the ship, making her superior in any of the essential qualities to what other nations have, then we shall have a sure and sound foundation upon which we may confidently expect to take the lead among nations and to build up a powerful navy such as our people demand. This would only be in strict keeping with our own traditions, recalling the glorious era of the clipper ship thirty years ago, when we built and sailed the best and fastest ships in the world, and when our flag was to be seen proudly floating on every sea.

Our great ship-builders of that day, Donald McKay, Webb, and others, did not then go to England for the designs and models of their ships. To the very contrary, English merchants bought our ships for models to copy. The tables are now turned, but they may be turned again. If in deviating from the beaten track we can secure vessels of a different and better model than the ordinary type, superior in speed, steadiness, stability, or handiness, we shall then have secured advantages of permanent value, such as will always endure whatever may be future inventions in armor and guns. Innumerable attempts at innovations and improvements have been made, but they have generally proved to be either the crude conceptions of persons ignorant of physical and mathematical laws, or they have simply involved some slight modification in the old model. But when such innovations and improvements are proposed upon whose judgment are we to rely? This is a legislative body. It is not composed of naval architects and scientific experts. In legislating upon technical matters of this character Congress must rely upon the superior knowledge and judgment of somebody. That has been the invariable practice of all preceding Congresses since the foundation of the Government.

It may be contended that we should accept the views and recommendations of the technical corps of the Navy as our guide and basis of legislative action. As a humble representative on this floor I am not prepared to admit any such necessity. And here it may be pertinent to inquire what ability has this corps displayed or what has it produced in recent years which entitles its opinions upon this question to the consideration and confidence of Congress? Gentlemen on this floor who have such implicit faith and confidence in the ability of this corps may answer that it has produced the Dolphin. It did indeed, and I shall not in this presence utter a word which might in any respect detract in the slightest degree from the honor or credit due to anybody who was concerned in or responsible for the production of that naval abortion.

While the naval advisory board was incubating upon "the maximum of unarmored fighting efficiency," and "the pure type of the lightly-armed high-speed economically-maintained commerce destroyer," (their own words, sir,) and hatched out only a lot of hybrids of 13 to 14 knots speed, unable to fight or run, what was transpiring among other naval powers? England was building five large ironclads, the Collingwood, Rodney, Benbow, Campredown, and Howe, of 16 knots speed and armed with the heaviest guns. And two armored cruisers, the Warspite and Imperieuse, and six unarmored cruisers of about 3,500 tons displacement, the Arethusa, Leander, Phæton, Amphion, Mersey, and Severn, all of 17 knots speed. France was building two large ironclads and several small vessels of at least 16 knots speed. Italy was building four large ironclads of 16 knots speed, and three smaller vessels of from 3,000 to 3,500 tons displacement, of 17 to 18 knots speed. Germany was building six vessels of 16 to 18 knots speed, and Russia four of 16 knots.

Thus it is shown that while our advisory board was engaged planning four inferior, obsolete, worthless ships, almost all the European countries, and Brazil, Chili, and even China were building superior ships of greater speed and greater power than ours. Can it be possible that our tehnical corps were totally ignorant of the events transpiring in other countries? No, this is not the fact, for I find a descriptive table of these very ships printed in the paper compiled by the secretary of the advisory board. Then being in possession of this knowledge there is ground for only one other conclusion, which is that our technical corps of experts did not possess the ability to even imitate the best results obtained in other countries.

In view of these undisputed facts, I must submit that the skill and ability to design modern ships has not yet been developed, or it does not exist among our technical corps of experts. In either case Congress should be cautious in accepting without question their recommendations as a basis of wise legislation. But permit me to say in defense of our corps of experts that they are not altogether responsible for their incompetency, as our naval policy for the past twenty years has made no demands upon them which they were not able to meet out of their practical experience acquired in a past era. They have had no encouragement by our Government either to acquire scientific education or to adopt new methods. Their skill and energies have been absorbed in carrying out a comprehensive and huge policy of repairs. It is true we have made some slight efforts to keep up with the progress of the age, by occasionally sending a constructor and engineer abroad to examine shipyards and machine-shops in the hope of accumulating some useful knowledge. The result has been that the extent and value of the knowledge acquired by such officers has been about what would be gained of the inhabitants, manners, and customs of a people by traveling through their country on an express train at the rate of 40 miles an hour.

A design and model embracing improvements of the very highest importance has been presented by Capt. Charles G. Lundborg, a gentleman well known as one of the ablest scientific architects of our time. Like Captain Ericsson, a Swede by birth, but now a citizen of this country, Captain Lundborg was educated in the Swedish navy, and his record for scientific attainments from his youth is of the highest order. Having since then had great practical experience at sea in the command of ships, he has devoted the latter part of his life exclusively to science, particularly to naval architecture. As an authority on that subject I doubt if he has a superior, if an equal, in the world. Captain Lundborg's system is the fruit of scientific research extended over half a lifetime. It shows a radical deviation from the common vessel, but it is yet in every particular based upon sound mathematical premises and in strict conformity with the scientific principles, which are the foundation of naval architecture.

The principles and theories of his system have been examined and indorsed by the most eminent ship-builders and scientific experts in this country and Europe, and being based upon purely scientific ground there can be no doubt as to the correctness of the conclusions which follow from it. These conclusions are of so great importance that I feel abundantly justified in bringing the matter before the country. The subject was presented to the Forty-eighth Congress and was carefully and thoroughly examined by the Committee on Shipping. General Slocum, a technically educated man, was chairman of that committee, and among its distinguished members who are in the present House are the learned gentlemen from Maine and Massachusetts, Governors DINGLEY and LONG, and my friend from South Carolina, General DIBBLE, and my colleague on the Naval Committee, Mr. LORE from Delaware. That able committee of the last House submitted a report in which I find the following language:

> Your committee have examined and considered the subject of the invention of Capt. Charles G. Lundborg, and have had full hearings and explanations by the inventor, which are reported and printed by order of the House in Miscellaneous Document 36.
> Every intelligent person who examines this document will be impressed with the great scientific as well as with the practical ability of its author, the inventor, and of the importance of his design.

I will now submit some testimonials of leading ship-builders and practical naval architects who have examined this matter, which were presented to the Naval Committee the present session.

NEW YORK, October 31, 1882.

DEAR SIR: Having examined the model presented by you this day, and which you have designed for the Atlantic merchant service, I find so much in accord with my own experience and practice of former years that I do not hesitate to give it my approval.

It possesses many important advantages over the generally accepted models of ocean steamers. Its general dimensions will secure very light draught, and with fine lines, as shown in the model, and adequate power, great speed can certainly be obtained.

Also, greater stability when light; less disposition to roll at sea when loaded; greater certainty of answering the helm quickly; large carrying capacity on a light draught; greater safety and comfort at sea.

Yours, very respectfully,

W. H. WEBB.

Capt. C. G. LUNDBORG, Naval Constructor.

NEW YORK, September 18, 1882.

DEAR SIRS: I have examined the model and specifications of Capt. C. G. Lundborg's plans for Atlantic express steamships, and I consider them just what is requisite for transatlantic steamers of greater speed, greater safety, and greater comfort to passengers than has hitherto been given to the traveling public.

Yours, respectfully,

EDWARD FARRON,
Engineer and Constructor to John Roach & Sons.

NEW YORK, October 30, 1882.

GENTLEMEN: Having examined the drawings and calculations of Capt. C. G. Lundborg's model of steamship for the Atlantic service, we would state that we can see no objection to anything he claims, and in our judgment his model possesses several important advantages over the common form of steamships now in use, combining fine lines for speed, great stability, and light draught.

The advantage of two propellers, acting always in solid water, is very important to obtain a high rate of speed, also as a means of safety in case of accident to the machinery. The form of model gives great stability when light, avoiding the necessity of using ballast, thus saving cargo space, trouble, and expense.

In our judgment, Captain Lundborg's plans and specifications possess all the advantages claimed by him, as they contain all the elements of success for the Atlantic service, namely, speed, safety, comfort, large carrying capacity, and light draught.

Yours, truly,

C. & R. POILLON.

NEW YORK, October 20, 1882.

MY DEAR SIRS: The design of an ocean steamship made by Capt. C. G. Lundborg, for the Atlantic Steamship Company of New York city, presents much that is novel, and after a thorough examination and analysis of its principal features, its fine lines, combined with great stability, and the capacity of the hull for the introduction of a much greater amount of propelling power than is now afloat, we unhesitatingly assert herewith that Captain Lundborg's ship must prove faster, and at the same time steadier and more profitable, than any other vessels of similar dimensions or capacity built on the prevailing type of model, and propelled by a single-screw propeller-wheel.

Both in the abstract and detail his plans are in the highest degree practical, when viewed in the light of the well-known principles of steam naval architecture.

It is beyond dispute that the maximum efficiency of the single-screw propelling wheel has been already reached in sea-going steamers. More propelling power, and its consequent speed can be achieved only by the use of twin screws, and this feature in Captain Lundborg's plan makes its superiority obvious to us.

We remain, respectfully, yours,

NATHANIAL McKAY,
CORNELIUS W. McKAY,
Naval Architects.

[John Elder & Co., Govan, Glasgow.]

GOVAN, September 17, 1880.

DEAR SIR: I have looked through your design for an Atlantic steamer of 20 knots an hour, and I am of opinion that this speed would be obtained with the power you state, and I also believe that you would have a very steady ship at sea. The idea is going in the right direction, as I am convinced that 20 knots an hour must be the speed of Atlantic steamers in the immediate future.

I remain, dear sir, yours, faithfully,

W. PEARCE.

Captain LUNDBORG.

PHILADELPHIA, February 5, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request to submit my views to the Naval Committee upon the merits of a vessel of war, constructed upon the design and plan proposed by Capt. C. G. Lundborg, I beg to say that I have given the subject careful consideration, and I am of opinion that his theories and principles are sound and correct, and that, while I might suggest modifications in his proposed details of construction, I do not hesitate to approve the general design and plan of his proposed ship, and I believe that the advantages of the proposed type are sufficiently evident to warrant the Government in taking steps to test it by the construction of a ship embodying the Lundborg system.

Yours, very truly,

CHAS. H. CRAMP,
President of the Wm. Cramp & Sons Ship and Engine Building Company.

Hon. H. A. HERBERT,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs,
House of Representatives.

Mr. Speaker, this is positive and reliable testimony from the highest and best sources. It is trustworthy and valuable because of the well-known and conceded skill and ability of the witnesses, and especially on account of their absolute disinterestedness.

The system presented by Captain Lundborg, when introduced and practically tested, will no doubt revolutionize naval architecture. It promises on the highest scientific as well as practical authority greater speed, greater stability, greater steadiness at sea, and greater handiness than can possibly be obtained by a vessel of the common form. Each of these advantages is of so great importance in a ship of war, that even a slight improvement in either of them would lead to the universal adoption of this new system.

I have already shown, with regard to the speed of ships, that this is of even greater importance than armor; for superior speed, if only a fraction of a knot, would be apt to decide the battle in favor of the fastest ship, everything else being equal. And of almost equal importance is the steadiness of the ship. Comparative freedom from rolling and pitching is the great desideratum in a ship of war; a steady gun platform insures an accurate fire, the importance of which is sufficiently clear. Quickness of maneuvering, or handiness, is hardly less desirable, for reasons equally obvious.

Naval men will tell you that the importance of these advantages can hardly be overestimated. They are even of greater importance than armor and guns, for the superiority, as derived from the qualities of the vessel itself, will not change or deteriorate, while armor and guns are liable to infinite and immediate changes. But there is still another point which makes the adoption of the Lundborg ship highly desirable. In the report submitted to the House by the Committee on Naval Affairs we say with regard to large iron-clad ships of 13,000 tons displacement, like the Italian Lepanto and others, that the great draught of such ships would prevent them from entering any of the principal seaports of the United States, except San Francisco, and for that reason the committee would not advise the building now of such vessels.

It is, however, clear that unless the experience of a naval battle should in the near future totally change the nature of the navies of the world the time must evidently come very soon when we must build large ships, able to compete with the most powerful navies of other nations. This can not possibly be avoided. Here the ship upon Captain Lundborg's system is just what is wanted. According to all authorities it is admirably adapted for light draught of water. The model easily admits of constructing ships of immense displacement, very much larger than any ships hitherto built, and yet upon moderate draught, enabling them to enter our great harbors. There would be no difficulty whatever in building a ship upon the Lundborg plan of 20,000 tons displacement or more, of good proportions and the finest lines for high speed, on 24 feet draught of water, or even less if necessary.

I have only mentioned some of the great advantages of the Lundborg system with respect to ships of war, as more particularly coming under the functions of the Committee on Naval Affairs. But I ought not, on this occasion, to omit to say that it also possesses many other features of the highest importance of which I have not spoken, but which will prove of incalculable benefit to shipping at large, to the merchant marine as well as to ships of the Navy. Among these I will only mention stability, or the quality of the ship which keeps her upright in the water. Thousands of vessels, steamers in particular, capsize and are lost at sea because, after consuming a portion of their coal, water, and stores, they become top heavy, upset and are lost, in most cases with all hands.

Sir Edward Reed, the celebrated chief constructor to the British admiralty, threw a vivid light upon this subject in his report as chairman of the board appointed to investigate the capsizing of the Daphne and Austral, two large English ships which capsized in port, one in the Clyde and one in Sydney Harbor, Australia. Judging from this able report, published in October, 1883, there exists no more fruitful source of danger to navigation than want of sufficient stability in modern ships. It is clear, therefore, that the discovery of a system of designing vessels so that they can not under any circumstances capsize at sea would be not merely a great advantage, but a positive benefit to mankind, which would entitle that inventor to a place in the front rank among public benefactors.

This problem has been solved in Captain Lundborg's system, for it possesses this inestimable quality. A ship upon that plan possesses the singular, or rather wonderful, feature, that it actually gains in stability the lighter she becomes by the consumption of coal, stores, and ammunition, making capsizing impossible. And I need hardly say that that great and inestimable advantage alone, even if there were no others, ought to insure the immediate and universal adoption of Captain Lundborg's system.

In view of the many potent reasons which I have now given, it appears clearly that it would be an act of eminent wisdom for Congress to authorize the building of a vessel upon Captain Lundborg's design. It is superfluous to say that if that vessel should fulfill even only partly the claims of the inventor, and of the eminent scientists and experts who indorse and vouch for his plans, all the vessels already built will be quickly superseded by others upon his system. It would therefore be in the direction of economy to build such a vessel as soon as possible, so that the result as to her performance could be ascertained before spending any more money upon ships of the ordinary type.

There is a bill (No. 4329) introduced in the House by my colleague on the Committee on Naval Affairs, Mr. LORE, for the building of a large armored cruiser of 20 knots' speed upon Captain Lundborg's system. She would unquestionably be the most efficient and powerful cruiser in the world, a ship capable of accepting battle with heavily armed ships, and unequaled in speed and endurance. The building of that ship, however, would probably take considerable time, particularly as there might be much delay on account of the armor plates, which must be ordered from abroad, since we are not yet prepared to manufacture such plates in this country. But as it is of the highest importance that the question should be settled with the least possible delay, I would suggest the building of a smaller ship, an unarmored cruiser of about 3,000 tons displacement. She would, if successful, be a most efficient and useful vessel, armed with powerful guns, and capable of higher speed than any existing war ship, probably exceeding 20 knots. She would also have great endurance, carrying full sail power, enabling her to keep the sea cruising under sail alone, thus saving the coal for emergencies when high speed was required. Such a vessel could be built complete for service in less than a year from the signing of the contract.

In pursuing this course there would probably be but little or no delay in the building of the proposed new ships. The four vessels authorized by last Congress, now more than a year ago, are not yet laid down or even contracted for, the designs and specifications not being completed; and there is but little reason to suppose that the designs of the vessels now proposed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, if the bill should become a law, will be completed in less time. If, therefore, by the time that these designs are about to be completed the performance of the Lundborg ship, which may be built in the mean time, should cause further work upon the old vessels to be abandoned, the loss would be limited to the salaries of the constructors and draughtsmen who had been employed upon the designs, while many million dollars would be saved to the Treasury from being wasted upon inferior or obsolete vessels. The cost of the cruiser of about 3,000 tons displacement upon Captain Lundborg's system would not exceed $1,200,000. This would not increase the appropriation beyond what is recommended in the bill under consideration. The amendment provides only that one of the proposed cruisers shall be built on Captain Lundborg's design without increasing the appropriation.
